Dea. Wilson Brainard of this town was fatally injured by the cars last Saturday afternoon, at a private crossing on his farm. He was going to the field to mow, with a scythe on his arm, and as he approached the track he saw a freight train coming from the east, and watched it as he crossed the track, but did not notice that another freight was close upon him from the opposite direction, nor hear it, being quite deaf. As he stepped upon the south track he was struck by the locomotive of the latter train and thrown upon the apron, being carried some distance before the train was stopped. The train men not knowing who he was, he was carried to the West Brimfield station and placed on a bed in the depot. His son was in the meantime apprised of the accident, and at once drove to the station and removed him to his home. It was found that his right ankle was broken, and his side, arm and head bruised, and he doubtless received internal injuries. He complained of intense pain, but his sufferings were brought to an end at an early hour Sunday morning, when death came to his relief. Dea. Brainard was born Feb. 22, 1806, on the farm and in the house where he has spent all his long and useful life. His father, who moved here from Haddam, Ct., was the first blacksmith in town, carrying on the business in connection with his farm. He was also the first blacksmith in this region to furnish his own stock, it being customary in those days for people who wanted their horses shod to take with them to the blacksmith's the material from which to make the shoes. Dea. Brainard was a just and upright man, a kind neighbor and friend, a worthy citizen and an exemplary Christian. A man of quiet home tastes, he never held nor desired any public office, though always interested in public affairs, and faithful to every political duty. He became a member of the Congregational church in early life, being one of the original members of the church in this village when it separated from the parent church, and for many years he was one of its deacons, until he resigned on account of his growing deafness. He leaves a widow and three sons, all living here. His funeral occurred Wednesday afternoon.

A MURDER IN WILBRAHAM.

The dead body of Reuben S. Cadwell, a Wilbraham pauper 73 years old, was found in a pasture near Glendale church Wednesday evening, the head being badly bruised and the skull being fractured back of the right ear, while the throat was badly lacerated and there were marks showing that it had been strongly gripped. Medical Examiner Holbrook of this place was sent for and made an examination, which proved conclusively that death was caused by strangulation, the lungs being filled with blood, while the heart was empty. Cadwell was last seen alive Tuesday forenoon, when on his way to the pasture with Morris Monihan, driving a cow to service. Cadwell and Monihan both lived with and worked for a farmer named Cyrus Day, and were driving the cow for him. On the way they were heard by a neighboring farmer talking loudly and evidently quarreling, their high words also being heard by a woman some distance away. Soon the quarreling ceased, and nothing more was heard until Monihan came back alone, leading the cow. He seemed confused, so much so that he inquired which road to take to return to Day's, but no particular notice was taken of his manner, or the absence of his companion, whose body was accidentally discovered the next evening by a couple of men who went to the same pasture to look for some cattle. A warrant was issued for Monihan's arrest Thursday, and Sheriff Northrop brought him to Palmer and kept him in the lock-up over night, but took him to Springfield yesterday morning, as the crime occurred in Wilbraham, outside the jurisdiction of our district court. Monihan denies any knowledge of the crime, but acknowledges going to the pasture with Cadwell, and went over the route with the officer, but says that Cadwell left him a few rods from the place where his body was found, he didn't know why, as they were the best of friends. Monihan is from 25 to 30 years old, and is an ugly specimen of a ragged and filthy tramp. He will doubtless be committed by the police court at Springfield to await the action of the grand jury. The remains of the murdered man were buried Thursday.

LUDLOW.

A town meeting is to be held next Monday to consider the question of damages for Lucius Simonds, who was injured by driving off an unprotected embankment.

There was quite a social gathering last Wednesday at the lawn party at Miss Martha Murdock's. The proceeds netted the social about $25.

Mrs. Briggs, the dressmaker, has finished all orders for work and is soon to leave town. She is an estimable lady, and will be greatly missed by her many friends.

The dye works are making arrangements to add indigo blue to the other colors they produce. This is an expensive, but a staple color, and will doubtless add materially to their business.

Rev. B. McKeany has finished the repairs on his house, which was formerly the M. E. parsonage. It is neat and tasty in appearance, as well as an ornament to the village. He will soon occupy it.

The work on the new canal is not progressing as rapidly this week, owing to a strike among the shovelers, who asked an increase of twenty-five cents per day, they having received $1.50. Not content with leaving themselves, they marched to the quarry and undertook to stop work there, but without succeeding. The next morning they were paid off by Mr. McClallan, and two of the leaders arrested by Sheriff Northrop and turned over to the district court at Palmer.

HAMPDEN.

Farmers are prospering in their haying, but almost all complain of short crops.

A. O. Thresher lost a valuable horse a few days since, one of his span purchased in Canada.

Owing to the recent burglaries, and the fact that one man cannot, however smart he may be, be on the front and back of all our places of business at the same time, George Lamberton has been engaged by the selectmen as night police. Mr. Lamberton was appointed constable last Spring, and has proved a very efficient officer in that capacity. If the temperance people could unite and secure his services to look after the liquor dealers we have no doubt it would be most effectually attended to.

A sensation was caused in Springfield last week Friday by the arrest of Deputy Sheriff Bumstead, on the charge of committing rape upon Miss Nellie M. Elder on the evening of June 21, her story being that she was passing the court house that evening, when Bumstead, with whom she was acquainted, invited her in to see the building. She went in, and when in one of the jury rooms he assaulted her, but she had said nothing about it because of his threats. Bumstead denied the whole story, and at his trial Wednesday the girl confessed that she told Sheriff Sanderson Bumstead had never taken any liberties with her, and it was shown that he was at supper with a jury at the hour of the alleged assault, while the court house janitor testified that no woman came into the building that evening. The judge discharged Bumstead, who was at once reinstated in office. He says R. H. Parker is at the bottom of the trouble, and it would seem to be the proper thing for him to have Parker arrested, so that the affair may be sifted to the bottom.

James G. Fair is put down on the assessment roll just filed in San Francisco as having personal property to the amount of $42,000,000. J. C. Flood is assessed at $36,500,000 for himself and $20,500,000 as trustee for J. W. Mackay. Charles Crocker figures on the same roll at $20,000,000.

A turtle seized a Jamestown (N. Y.) young woman by the ear the other day as she was bathing in Chautauqua Lake, and the intervention of her friends alone saved her drowning. The turtle's head had to be severed and its jaws pried apart before the young woman was set free.

Gov. Crittenden of Missouri offers $50,000 reward for the arrest of the Rock Island train robbers; $20,000 of it for the capture of the two James boys, supposed to have been the leaders of the robbers, and $6000 each for the other five men of the party.

One letter out of every 300 sent is unclaimed in the office to which it goes. One letter in 283 sent turns up in the dead letter office. One letter out of 3100 sent is held for postage at the office of mailing—and this amounts to nearly 300,000.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.
"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

The Pie His Mother Made.

I'm mi tress of a pretty house,
And often do I try
To make my worthy, faithful spouse
A dainty apple pie;

But when the pie is nicely done,
With crisp and tender crust,
My worthy husband, half in fun,
Gives me a gentle thrust,

By saying, "You cook well, Irene,
Without good Bridget's aid;
But oh, my dear, you should have seen
The pie my mother made!"

'Tis just the same when I make bread;
Upon my ear doth fall
No praise to make my cheek blush red—
His mother gets it all.

But then it comforts me to see
Him gobble what I make;
Whether an apple pie it be,
Or loaf of bread or cake.

FEELING HURRIED.

Probably nothing tires one so much as feeling hurried. When in the early morning the day's affairs press on one's attention beforehand, and there comes the wonder how in the world everything is to be accomplished, when every interruption is received impatiently, and the clock is watched in distress as its moments flit past, then the mind tires the body. We are wrong to drive ourselves with whip and spur in this way. Each of us is promised strength for the day, and we must not wear ourselves out by crowding two day's tasks into one. If only we can keep cool and calm, not allowing ourselves to be flustered, we shall be less wearied when we have reached the even-tide. The children may be fractious, the servants trying, the friend we love may fail to visit us, the letter we expect may not arrive, but if we can preserve our tranquility of soul, and of demeanor, we shall get through everything creditably.

Especially is this good advice for warm weather. Who feels the heat most? Who is most exhausted and prostrated by its severity? Why, the person who flies from fans to ice-water, bemoaning herself, who changes her dress a half-dozen times a day, who laments that it is warm, and watches the thermometer with despairing certainty that it never was so hot before; who, in short, intensifies her own discomfort, and adds to that of others by constant thinking about it. Women who can stay indoors have the advantage of men in warm weather. It is wise to air a house, in the early morning and at evening, and to keep it, so far as possible, closed and darkened through the middle of the day. Dispense with a great fire in the kitchen range, and let the cooking be moderate. Fruits, salads, and simple, easily cooked cereals are the proper foods for Summer. A gas stove is an economy and a comfort. Find the coolest place to sit, go quietly on with your work, and make as little fuss as may be about its being warm. Let the children have frequent baths, and do not encumber them with heavy clothing. Common sense and an easy mind help one over most of life's rough places, with little friction.—Exchange.

Nevada boasts a tree that "gets mad." It is a species of acacia introduced from Australia, and has the characteristics of the mimosa or sensitive plant. Regularly every evening the leaves fold together and the ends of the tender twigs coil themselves up. The tree is about eight feet high, and having outgrown the pot it was in, was the other day transferred to a larger one. Hardly had it been placed in its new quarters before the leaves began to stand up in every direction like the hair on the tail of an angry cat, and soon the whole plant was in a quiver. At the same time it gave out an odor most pungent and sickening; just such a smell as is given by rattlesnakes and many other kinds of snakes in Summer when teased. This odor so filled the house and was so sickening that it was found necessary to open the doors and windows. It was fully an hour before the plant calmed down and folded its leaves in place.

Buckingham Palace, except during the eight days it is annually inhabited by the Queen, and the four evenings in each season when it is devoted to hospitality, remains empty and useless. The charming grounds (of the beauties and extent of which very few, even of Londoners, have an idea) are abandoned to the gardeners, and the splendid collection of pictures (there are some of the finest Dutch paintings in the world in the long gallery) are rarely looked upon except by house-maids.

The following notice by a Virginia blacksmith indicates Readjuster sentiments on the part of Mose's partner: "Notis.—De copartnership heretofore resisting betwixt me and Mose Skinner is hereby resolved. Dem what owe de firm will settle wid me, and dem what de firm owes will settle with Mose."—Texas Siftings.

It has been well said that no man ever sank under the burden of the day. It is when to-morrow's burden is added to the burden of to-day that the weight is more than a man can bear.—George McDonald.

"It is the little bits ov things that fret and worry us," says Josh Billings; "we kan dodge an elephant, but we kan't a fly."

A young lady who has studied all the "oligies" wants to know if the crack of a rifle is where they put the powder in.

A woman's work is never done, because when she has nothing else to do she has her hair to fix.

To keep apples from decaying, put them in a cool place where there is a large family of children.

A cent's worth of harvest apples is almost sure to return $15 worth of colic.

"Let's strip the light fantastic toe," said the chiropodist to his patient.

SOME GOOD HOME BATHS.

People who have no opportunity to enjoy sea bathing will be glad to know that a substitute nearly, if not quite, as strengthening is found in an ammonia bath. A gill of liquid ammonia in a pail of water makes an invigorating solution, whose delightful effects can only be compared to a plunge in the surf. To weak persons this is recommended as an incomparable luxury and tonic. It cleanses the skin and stimulates it wonderfully, and leaves the flesh as firm and cool as marble. More than this, the ammonia purifies the body from all odor of perspiration. Those in whom the secretion is unpleasant will find relief by using the tincture in a basin of water, and washing the armpits with it every morning.

Many persons find great comfort and benefit from salt water baths, arranged in this way: A coffee cup of fine distilled salt is mixed with a gallon of water, and with a hair glove or Russian bath cloth the body is thoroughly bathed with the mixture, rubbing until the body is aglow. Then follows an exhilaration akin to surf bathing. The druggists sell boxes of salt specially prepared and weighing three pounds for 55 cents. For a delicate child such a bath is recommended as specially beneficial.

Many persons find an occasional bran bath greatly improves the condition of the skin. The French women find it leaves their dark, clear flesh as soft as a baby's. A peck of common bran, to be had at any of the feed stores, is stirred into a tub of warm water. The rubbing of the scaly particles of the bran cleanses the skin, while the gluten in it softens and strengthens the tissues. The friction of the loose bran calls the blood to the surface, and nervous and irritable people find special benefit from it for their minds as wel as their bodies.

Physicians say the habitual use of soap upon the face leaves the skin brown, and recommend a little oat-meal in the water, or th ammonia suggested above. Ladies who have moist or oily skins should use quite hot water for their baths, and a little fine bay rum rubbed over the face, or a little of any of the fine toilet waters. A tablespoonful in the wash bowl of water prevents that shiny appearance of the skin which is so annoying.

The ancient Indians held it lawful to kill a king when drunk. The Athenians made it a capital offence for a magistrate to be drunk, and Charlemange decreed that judges on the bench and pleaders should attend to business fasting. Even the Scots, in the second century, doomed intoxicated magistrates to penal shame; while the Carthagenians prohibited not only the administrators of law, but governors, soldiers and servants from drinking. Mohammed did not spare the crew of inebriates, but ordered them to be bastinadoed with eighty blows. Were these laws still in force, many of our public servants would be obliged either to reform their manners or retire to the quiet shades of private life. But whatever may be their inconsistency, the constant surveillance which modern governments, even the most lax, feel impelled to maintain over the trade dealing in liquor indicates that deep down, even in the official soul, which of all known souls is regarded as morally the most obtuse, there is a recognition of the criminality of intemperance. This, then, is the honest judgment of humanity.

TO MAKE MEAT TENDER.—If the fact can be demonstrated to a cook that meat can be made tender by softening the fibers with the action of a little vinegar, there will be no reason why she should send a tough steak to the table. If she can be convinced that it is better to turn it over on a plate containing a little vinegar, salad oil, and pepper, four or five times in a couple of hours, instead of trying to make it tender by battering it with a rolling pin or cleaver, and so forcing out all its juices, she must be obstinate indeed if she prefers the latter method.

Pulverized fresh lime, a correspondent of the Gardener's Chronicle says, will effectually drive earth worms from lawns. The lime also kills moss, which is so troublesome on old lawns, often destroying large patches of grass, and so sadly interfering with mowing. Mix the lime with twice its bulk of fine soil.—Leached wood ashes we have found better than soil for mixing with lime.—Scientific News.

"Cremation is no longer popular, I see," remarked Job Shuttle this morning. "Well, I sh'd hope not. It's bad enough to think of your soul burning up, let alone the body." "Mrs. Shuttle, I wish you wouldn't accent the word 'your,' and look at me so sharply." And the meal was finished in silence.—New Haven Register.

It seems incredible, but it is stated that all the domes of the great churches in St. Petersburg, Moscow and other large cities of Russia, are plated with gold nearly a quarter of an inch thick. The new Church of the Savior, dedicated and opened in Moscow last August, represents a value of fully $15,000,000.

An Illinois physician prescribed rest and quiet for an ill merchant, whereupon the afflicted merchant ordered the papers to discontinue his advertisements. This brought him the needed repose.

A FOOL ONCE MORE.—For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such a complication of ailments that no doctor could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I used up a small fortune in humbug stuff. Six months ago I saw a U. S. flag with Hop Bitters on it, and I thought I would be a fool once more. I tried it, but my folly proved o be wisdom. Two bottles cured her, she is now as well and strong as any man's wife, and it cost me only two dollars. Such folly pays.—H. W. Detroit, Mich.—Free Press.

Food for the brain and nerves that will invigorate the body without intoxicating is what we need in these days of rush and worry. Parker's Ginger Tonic restores the vital energies, soothes the nerves and brings good health quicker than anything you can use.—Tribune. See other column. j

TAKE SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.

THE CHEAPEST, PUREST AND BEST FAMILY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

PURELY VEGETABLE,

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
LEWIS G. WUNDER, Philadelphia."

"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—Ed. Telegraph and Messenger, Macon, Ga.

THE PUREST AND BEST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

A combination of HOPS, BUCHU, MANDRAKE and DANDELION, with all the best and most curative properties of all other Bitters, makes the greatest Blood Purifier, Liver Regulator, and Life and Health Restoring Agent on earth.

No disease can possibly long exist where Hop Bitters are used, so varied and perfect are their operations. THEY GIVE NEW LIFE AND VIGOR TO THE AGED AND INFIRM.

To all whose employments cause irregularity of the bowels or urinary organs, or who require an Appetizer Tonic and Mild Stimulant, Hop Bitters are invaluable, without intoxicating.

No matter what your feelings or symptoms are, what the disease or ailment is, use Hop Bitters. Don't wait until you are sick, but if you only feel bad or miserable, use them at once. It may save your life. It has saved hundreds.

$500 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help. Do not suffer or let your friends suffer, but use and urge them to use HOP BITTERS.

Remember, Hop Bitters is no vile, drugged, drunken nostrum, but the purest and best medicine ever made; the INVALIDS' FRIEND & HOPE," and no person or family should be without them.

D. I. C. is an absolute and irresistible cure for drunkenness, use of opium, tobacco and narcotics. All sold by druggists. Send for circulars.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE.

WONDERFUL SURGICAL OPERATION—REMOVAL OF URINARY STONES FROM THE BLADDER—SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell, of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they called Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their reformation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation of the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice into practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all classes of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. 1m18

The Farmer's Seventy Years.

An, there he is, lads, at the plough;
He beats the boys for work,
And whatsoe'er the task might be,
None ever saw him shirk.
And he can laugh, too, till his eyes
Run o'er with mirthful tears,
And sing full many an old-time song
In spite of his seventy years.

"Good morning, friends! 'tis twelve o'clock,
Time for a half-hour's rest."
And farmer John took out his lunch
And ate it with a zest.
"A harder task it is," he said,
"Than following up these steers
Or mending fences, far, for me
To feel my seventy years."

"You ask me why I feel so young;
I'm sure, friends, I can't tell,
But think it is my good wife's fault,
Who's kept me up so well;
For women such as she are scarce
In this poor vale of tears;
She's given me love and hope and strength
For more than forty years.

"And then, my boys have all done well,
As far as they have gone,
And that thing warms an old man's blood,
And helps him on and on.
My girls have never caused a pang,
Or raised up anxious fears;
Then wonder not that I feel young
And hale at seventy years.

"Why don't my good boys do my work
And let me sit and rest?
Ah! friends, that wouldn't do for me;
I like my own way best.
They have their duty, I have mine;
And till the end appears,
I mean to smell the soil, my friend,"
Said the man of seventy years.

THE TWO ANSWERS.

"No, Charles, it cannot be. As a friend I shall respect and esteem you; but I cannot be your wife. Have compassion on me, and do not press me further."

Mary Granville stood before me as she thus spoke, with her hands clasped and her head bowed, trembling like an aspen, and I fancied there were tears in her eyes. She was a beautiful girl, and I thought her as good and pure as she was beautiful; and, further than this, I had believed that she loved me.

She was an orphan, and had been engaged during the past year in teaching one of our village schools. Of her early life I knew nothing, save that she had been educated and moved in good society; and I had reason to believe that at some time her father had been wealthy, but had failed in business, and it had been told to me that the sad reverse killed him. I had known that Mary was poor—that she was dependent upon her daily labor for support—and the thought that I could offer her a comfortable home, with the advantage of moderate wealth, had given increase to my prospective happiness. But this unexpected answer dashed my bright hopes to the ground.

"Do you mean," I cried, vehemently, "that you thus dismiss me? Am I cast off?"

"I cannot be your wife," was the reply.

"Then," said I, with more warmth than I might have betrayed under other circumstances, "I leave you to yourself, and while I try to shake off the love that has bound me to you, I only hope that ere you lead another into your net you will conclude beforehand whether you will keep him."

She looked into my face with a painful, frightened glance, but I did not stop to hear her speak further. I turned and left the house.

I remark that under other circumstances I might have been more cool and collected in my speech; and what do you suppose, dear readers, the attending circumstances were? I'll tell you candidly.

I was a little heated with wine. I had drank just enough to warm my blood and give my brain an extra impulse, and my words were not chosen as I should have chosen them had the spirit of wine been absent. As I walked toward my home I sought to persuade myself that I had escaped the snare of a coquette, and that I might be the better enabled thus to reason I stopped at the hotel, where I found a few of my companions, and helped to dispose of half a dozen bottles of wine.

On the following morning I awoke with a headache, and when I called to mind the events of the preceding evening I was anything but happy. I began to realize how much I had loved Mary Granville. There was an aching void in my heart, and I wept as I contemplated my loss. It was my first love, and its influence had penetrated every fibre of my being. The beautiful girl had become more dear to me than I could tell, and I groaned in bitter anguish when I thought that she was lost forever. I had resolved that I would feel very angry and indignant, but when the sweet face was called up to mental view, such feelings melted away, leaving me sad and desolate.

On the following Sabbath I attended the church where I saw Mary once more. She played the organ, as she had done for the past year, and as her fingers swept over the keys I fancied that I could detect a tremulousness which I had never noticed before. Was it only imagination, or was it really a plaintiveness—a sadness in the expression of her music? To me it seemed at times as though the organ moaned and wept. It was like the wailing of the daughters of Zion by the rivers of Babylon.

When the services were over, and we went out from the church, I saw Mary's face. It was pale and wan, as though she had been sick. What could it be? Was she suffering as I had suffered? The thought flashed upon me that some one might have told her something to my disadvantage. I had enemies in the village—enemies who envied me because I had inherited some wealth—and I fancied enemies who envied me the love of Mary Granville.

Another week passed and I became more sad and lonesome. My business was irksome to me, and my books and papers afforded me no respite. In fact I could not read, for my mind was never upon the page before me. Another Sabbath at church and I saw Mary again. She was paler than before, and her eyes looked as though she had been weeping.

During the succeeding week I received a visit from my college chum, Jack Stanton, who had just opened a law office at Berryville. After supper, as we sat in our cozy parlor smoking our cigars, I suggested that a bottle of wine would not be amiss. Jack shook his head.

"No, Charlie," he said, "we'll leave the wine for those who need it."

"You used to drink, Jack."

"Yes, but it never did me any good."

"And do you think it ever did you any harm?"

"As to that I will not say; it shall never do me harm. I know it has harmed others who were as strong as I am. By the way, Charlie, isn't Mary Granville here?"

"Yes," said I.

"Do you know her?"

I turned away my face and pretended to have heard something at the window.

"I have seen her," I replied, when I had composed myself. "She plays the organ in the church."

"She and I were schoolmates," pursued Stanton; "and speaking of wine brings her to my mind. Do you know anything of her early life?"

"Nothing," I answered.

"Poor Mary! I never think of her without feeling my resolution of total abstinence grow stronger and stronger. When we were school children together her father was the wealthiest man in Berryville, and she and her brother were among the happiest of the happy.

"Mr. Granville was in the habit of drinking wine, and the habit grew upon him until he felt that he could not live without his brandy.

"He was of a social disposition, and in time it came to pass that he was often grossly intoxicated. Of course, under such circumstances one of two things must happen. The man must reform or he must sink. Mr. Granville did not reform, and ere many years he died a drunkard's death, leaving his family in poverty and suffering.

"Thomas, the son—four years older than Mary—became dissipated, and at the age of eighteen was killed in a street fight in New York. Mrs. Granville survived her son but a few months—absolutely dying, the doctors said, of a broken heart.

"Poor Mary thus left fatherless and motherless, without brother or sister, at the age of fifteen, was forced to earn the bread which she ate—and nobly has she done it. If you know her, Charlie, you know one of the noblest women that ever lived. But—what's the matter? Why, bless me, you look as pale as a ghost."

I struggled with myself and told Jack that I had swallowed a lot of cigar smoke. I rose and opening one of the casements stepped out upon the balcony, where the fresh air restored me.

At a late hour Jack departed for the hotel, and when I had retired to my chamber I paced to and fro until long after midnight. I could no longer misunderstand the motive which had actuated Mary in rejecting my hand. She knew that I was in the habit of using wine, and on that evening when last we met she must have discovered that I had drank enough to bring a false flush to my cheeks.

"Oh, my God!" I ejaculated as I sank into a chair, "I wonder not that she refused to place her future life in my keeping. She has suffered enough from the accursed cup. The night of sorrow and desolation has been long enough upon her. She would be worse than mad to take a husband whose opening path of life led toward the pit into which the loved ones of other days had fallen."

"But," I asked myself, "why did not she tell me the whole truth?"

I found no difficulty in answering the question. She had shrunk from wounding my feelings. I knew how sensitive she was, and I knew that she was afraid of offending me. Perhaps she thought me proud and headstrong enough to resent such liberty on her part, and perhaps she imagined I might look upon her part as the offering of her hand in consideration of my renouncing the wine cup, and that I might spurn the offer.

On Friday Jack Stanton left me, and on Saturday evening I called at Mary's boarding house. Mary herself answered my summons. She started when she saw me, and I saw her right hand move quickly toward her heart.

"Mary," said I, speaking calmly, for I had a mighty strength of will to support me, "I have not come to distress you; I have come as a friend, and I humbly ask that you will give me an audience for a few moments."

She went into the parlor, and I followed her, closing the door behind me; and when we were alone she set the lamp upon the table and motioned me to a seat.

"No," said I, "I will not sit down yet. Give me your hand, Mary."

Mechanically she put forth her hands and I took them in my own. There was a wondering look in her eyes, and a slight flush had come to her pale cheeks.

"Mary," I continued, speaking slowly and softly, and I knew that moisture was gathering in my eyes, "you must answer me one question. Answer it as you please, and take my solemn assurance that I ask it only for your own good. Tell me, do you love me? No, no, do not take your hands away yet. Fear not—O fear not! for I had rather go into endless night than do you wrong. Tell me, Mary, do you love me?"

"I cannot speak falsely," she tremblingly whispered; "for my own peace, perhaps, I love you too well."

"Listen to me one moment," I added, drawing her nearer to me; "when I have told you what I have to tell, you shall be judge."

"You know Jack Stanton?" I said.

"Yes," she replied.

"He was my best friend when we were at college, and my friendship has not grown less. He came to me and told me the trials and sufferings of one of his schoolmates of the earlier days. Oh, Mary, I know well why my hand was refused, and I blame you not. It may be that our paths will be different through life, but you shall at least know that he whom you loved will so live that he shall not be unworthy of your kindest remembrance. I know I have wandered hitherto in the path of danger, but henceforth I am free from the dread snare. Under the new light that has dawned upon me I hold the wine cup to be a fearful enemy. I will shun it as I would shun a shameful life and a clouded deathbed. For my own sake I will do this, so that my sainted mother, if she can look upon her boy, can smile approvingly upon the course he has chosen.

"And now, Mary, if at some future time you should feel that you can trust your happiness in my keeping, you will give me some token thereof, and I will come and ask you again for your hand, and should it be my blessed lot to receive it, I will devote every energy in my being to make your life a joyous and happy one."

I let go her hands and bowed my head to wipe away a tear. I turned toward the door, really intending to depart and give her time for reflection, when she pronounced my name, and looking back I saw her hands were outstretched toward me.

"Not now," I whispered, "I will not ask your answer yet. Watch me—prove me—only give me to know that I have your love and good will."

I stopped speaking, for Mary's head was pillowed on my breast, and she was sobbing like a child.

"Now! now!" she uttered, as I wound my arms around her. "Oh, Charles, I never doubted your truth. I know you cannot deceive me. God bless your noble resolution, and let me help you to keep it."

I cannot tell how long I stopped that evening. I can only tell that I was very happy, and that my prospects of the coming life were bright and glorious.

On the following day—a Sabbath calm and pleasant—the organ gave forth a new strain. The daughters of Zion were no longer in a strange land. They had taken their harps down from the willows, and within the chambers of the new temple, more resplendent far than the old, they sang the songs that aforetime made joyous the city of their God. All marked the grandeur of the music that sprang into life beneath the touch of the fair organist on that beautiful Sabbath morning, and all seemed moved by inspiration. To me it was like the holy outpourings of a redeemed soul, and with bowed head and folded hands I gave myself up to the sublime influence. As Mary turned from the instrument I caught her eye. Mine was dim with moisture, but hers were bright, gleaming with seraphic light.

Ere many weeks had passed another hand pressed the keys of the organ, for Mary was not in the choir. She knelt before the altar at my side—and over us both the aged clergyman stretched his hands with prayer and blessing.

And we went out from church together—Mary and I—out in the new life—bound heart to heart, and hand to hand, to love, honor and cherish forever more.

LETTING THINGS GO.

"Let things go. Try to enjoy yourself these lovely June days," was the sage advice given to a tired woman, who had already, from inability to do them, let things go, until she contemplated the increasing pile of unmended clothes, the disordered closet and pantry shelves, with a feeling approaching horror. To tell such a woman to go out and sit in Nature's lap and enjoy herself is about as senseless a proceeding as can well be indulged in. I am not a believer in the policy of letting things go. If you could let them go it would be a different matter; if, to quote Macbeth, "'twere done when 'tis done, 'twere well it were done quickly." If, when you pass out of your kitchen and leave in it the unwashed breakfast dishes, bread rising in the oven and with dinner to prepare, the dishes would wash and wipe themselves, the bread bake itself, and the dinner put itself on the table, then you might entertain the idea of letting the things go. But, seriously, it cannot be done: one day lost out of the regular order of your work will leave traces of neglect sometimes through a troubled fortnight. Housework is something that cannot stop: it is not like the work in a machine shop, where, by slipping off a band, the humming wheels are still and nothing is injured. So long as there is a family to be fed and clothed and got to sleep, the work must go on. In view of this, some impatient woman may feel as Falstaff did when he exclaimed, "Why shall I not take mine ease in mine inn?"

There certainly are ways by which this may be done. One may do it by living simply; by having fewer rooms to care for; having fewer courses at the table; dressing the children less elaborately, though not less neatly; learning to "save steps" and to economize strength (don't wait until you are old to do this, but begin while young, and thus form the habit so that by and by you will do it unconsciously), but not by leaving any necessary part of the work undone. Almost any reasonable woman would prefer to meet Nature as a casual acquaintance; to make a formal call upon her now and then, with the tranquil spirit which a clean kitchen has power to bestow, rather than pay long visits to her with the uneasiness which comes from the knowledge of work undone. There is such a thing as seeing with the mind—as having June in the heart; and a fresh breeze blowing in at the kitchen window, or a bird's song coming to one bending over a wash-tub, may have sweetness and charm and give invigorating thought. Unless we can learn to enjoy ourselves while doing our work, and find satisfaction in doing it well, I do not know what life has to offer to any of us.—N. Y. Evening Post.

HOW TO KEEP COOL.

As warm weather oppresses us we devise all sorts of plans to keep cool, and by very earnestness defeat our purpose. To be cool, one must be tranquil, and avoid unnecessary exertion. The prudent housekeeper will make her morning fire suffice to do the chief part of the cooking for the day. Cold boiled meats, cold vegetables, cold desserts for dinner, when that meal comes in the middle of the day, are in order. Potatoes made into salad are not to be scorned by any lover of that vegetable. If a cup of hot tea or coffee is desired, it can be made on an oil stove, and such food as is prepared warm can be warmed over. But custom renders cold food as palatable as, and during hot weather even more palatable than, hot food is in cold weather. A little persistence on the part of the house-mother will prove this is the case, and the experiment is certainly worth trying. Farmers' wives who stew over the stove in midsummer noons have a harder time of it than the farmers do in the fields, and there is no necessity for this. Iced tea and coffee and milk are as delicious as hot tea and coffee when one's palate is accustomed to them. The hardest part of the work should be done in the morning, if possible; and if you can lie down for a while in the heated part of the day, so much the better. Plenty of sleep, with frequent baths, will enable almost any one to bear the warm weather philosophically.—Golden Rule.

"Your mind is in a twilight state," observed the good man. "You cannot differentiate the grains of mistrust from the molecules of a reasonable confidence. You are traveling the border land, the frontier between the paradise of faith and the arctic regions of incredulity. You are agnostic." "Divil a bit," said Pat, with mingled amazement and indignation, "I'm a Dimmycrat, ivery inch o' me."—Brooklyn Eagle.

Village postmaster to his wife: "Here is a postal card to Mr. Jones, saying that his brother and five children will be here on Saturday. Now, keep that card back till then, and I will be at the depot; and when they find no one to meet them I will take them all over for $3."

Take a true view of life; be proud that you have work in the world's busy path, and do it well and honorably.

Nature has written a letter of credit on some men's faces which is honored wherever it is presented.

A wealth of ideas does not always imply a surfeit of intelligence.

How He Loved Her.

They stood together looking down
Upon the waters blue,
When suddenly the rail gave way,
And she went tumbling through.

"Help, help," he cried; "my wife will drown,
Oh, help her life to save,
I did not dream when her I wed,
She'd find a watery grave."

They fished her out and brought her up,
A dripping mermaid she;
Her husband seized her wet, cold hands,
So glad he seemed to be.

"Thank God," he cried, "you are not drowned,
I'm spared that bitter pain;
But I will never let you keep
The pocket-book again."

A LESSON IN ESTHETICS.

"Are you esthetic?" inquired a New Haven young lady of a Brooklyn girl, as the two sat down to a dish of fried clams in a Fulton street restaurant, while the Brooklyn Eagle man was looking on.

"I guess so," replied the Brooklyn girl, vaguely. "Why do you ask?"

"Cause it's so terribly awfully the thing. We're all esthetic at home. Everybody is, and you don't know how we enjoy it!"

"Is it—is it very expensive?" queried the Brooklyn girl, feeling her way.

"It comes rather high, but it is so essential. I haven't felt so well since I left going to school as I have since being esthetic. You don't know how much I have gained."

"What's the nature of it? How do you take it?"

"Oh, you all sit around, and be excessive, and, when any one speaks to you, you glare at 'em and say "How quite!" Then you shut your eyes, and breathe hard. I wouldn't be without it for anything. They say it's very healthy."

"Can you do it all alone?"

"Oh, gracious, no! It takes four or five to play. All you've got to do is to cut off your eyelashes, so's to look stony, and then practice with some chairs till you're ready to go into the society. At home we commenced with clothes pins to represent the gentlemen and bandoline bottles for the ladies. Then we joined the association and licked 'em all."

"I had an idea esthetic meant the pleasurable sensations that arise from a gratification of artistic appreciation," explained the Brooklyn girl, timidly.

"Merciful goodness, no! On the contrary it means the absence of taste. You musn't have any taste. You only be utter."

"How do you fetch that?"

"That's done by holding your breath until you are nearly ready to burst, and then let it out quick. You do that when somebody asks you if you are prepared to esthet. Then you go on estheting till the party breaks up. Myra Brown of New Haven is just lovely at it. We admire her so much!"

"It must be fun," mused the Brooklyn girl, holding a clam on her fork and contemplating her companion.

"It just is. The gentlemen are ever so nice. They wear swallow stomach coats and eye glasses—"

"Eh?" ejaculated the Brooklyn girl, rather startled at the uniform.

"Yes, and they are so extreme. Oh, you don't know. When we girls are estheting we wear a sort of shroud. Mine is cashmere and costs two dollars a yard. Some of the societies wear lilies, but we use poppies. They are more languid. The last time we met, somebody put red pepper on the stove and I haven't fully recovered yet. Then some of the esthetics are gracile, but our society runs to flesh. We think it more soulful."

"I've got an idea it's a sort of a fraud, from your description," observed the Brooklyn girl, gulping down the last calm.

"You nasty hussy!" shouted the esthetic. "You've got no more intensity than a lobster! You're a coarse, vulgar animal. You are a sessile groveler. And more than that, you pay for those clams or you stay in pawn for 'em!"

And the fragile follower of the prevailing fashion slammed out of the establishment, leaving her hard-headed friend to liquidate the account. It doesn't do to rouse up the unutterables. They are liable to forget the sufficient and become sibilant.

A REMARKABLE ANIMAL.

The lama will bear neither beating nor ill-treatment. They go in troops, an Indian walking a long distance ahead as a guide. If the lamas are tired, they stop, and the Indian stops also. If the delay be too great, the Indian, becoming uneasy toward sunset, after all due precaution, resolves on supplicating the beasts to resume their journey. He stands about fifty or sixty paces off, in an attitude of humility, waving his hand coaxingly toward them, looks at them with tenderness, and at the same time, in the softest tones, reiterates, ic, ic, ic. If the lamas are disposed to resume their journey, they follow the Indian in good order and at a regular pace, but very fast, for their legs are very long; but when they are in ill-humor they do not even turn toward the speaker, but remain motionless, huddled together, standing or lying down, and gazing on heaven with a look tender and so melancholy that we might be led to imagine that these very singular and interesting animals had the consciousness of another life or a happier state of existence.

The straight neck, and its gentle majesty of bearing, the long down of their always clean and glossy skin, their supple and timid motion, all give them an air at once sensitive and noble. The lama is the only creature employed by man that he dare not strike. If it happens, (which is very seldom the case) that an Indian wishes to obtain, either by force, or even by threats, what the lama will not willingly perform, the instant the animal finds itself affronted by words or gesture he raises his head with dignity, and without making any attempt to escape ill treatment by flight, he lies down, turning his look toward heaven; large tears flow freely from his beautiful eyes, sighs issue from his bosom, and in half or three quarters of an hour at most he expires.

The respect shown these animals by the Peruvian Indians amounts absolutely to superstitious reverence. When the Indian loads them, two approach and caress the animal, hiding his head, that he may not see the load on his back. It is the same in unloading. The Indians of the Cordilleras alone have sufficient patience and gentleness to manage the lama.

The habit of being always employed is a great safeguard through life, as well as essential to the culture of every virtue.

Money is not the root of all evil; the want of it is.

THE TRUE WOMAN.

When the Beecher troubles were at their height, a gentleman was introduced to Mrs. Beecher and expressed his pleasure at meeting her because of his admiration of the faithfulness with which she had stood by her husband. Quick as a flash, and with a tone that had in it not a little indignation, she replied, "I ought to have been hung if I had not stood by him when I knew him innocent." The gentleman, who is the writer of this article, found that he had not been as complimentary as he thought he was going to be. We think it quite probable that Mrs. Garfield would make very much the same reply to much of the newspaper gush over her course since the shooting of the President. Simply a true woman; nothing more, nothing less. That is our estimate of Mrs. Garfield. And in saying simply this and nothing more, we are not disparaging her, nor even speaking with qualifications, but on the contrary, we are using the highest expression of praise at our command. We are not guilty of gush, or sentimental gallantry, in asserting that no work of the Divine hand, so far as pertains to humanity, surpasses a true woman. We do not believe that "an honest man is the noblest work of God." An honest man, even putting into honest all the meaning possible to it, does not begin to compare with a true woman. And there are a good many of these true women; a good many of them in high life, and a good many more in the common and middle ranks of life. It would be no difficult thing to find, in almost any community, a hundred women who would exhibit just as much nerve, courage, good sense and devotion under great trial as has the wife of our noble President. And they would do it as she, from her circumstances, cannot do it, without the thought that anybody would ever know it. It is one thing to act nobly with the eyes of a nation, or of the world upon one, and quite another and more difficult thing to act nobly with no eyes looking on, and no hearts to sympathize, and no tongue to praise. We do not question that Mrs. Garfield would have done just as she has done if she had been one of the unknown sufferers, for we give her the credit of being a true woman. But we also believe that it has been easier for her to act well her part because of the consciousness that so many eyes are upon her, and so many hearts are sympathizing with her, and so many prayers are going up to God for her. How many are the women who are bearing as heavy, even heavier burdens secretly, without sympathy, and without a prayer in their behalf, save their own cry to God for help!

We believe, too, that there are a great many men who, as they remember their early home and the spirit that presided over it, are saying to-day, as they read the papers, "I believe my mother would have done just as well as Mrs. Garfield has done under the circumstances." We feel sure that there are many thousands of husbands who know that their wives would have acted just as nobly and as wisely as she has done, and many thousands more who only need some great trouble to reveal to them the same truth concerning their wives.

It is a good thing for the country that it has this type of a true woman in the White House at this time, because it calls attention to what women really are. It is honor enough for Mrs. Garfield, and she would be entirely satisfied with it, that she has done as any true woman would have done under the circumstances. We will honor her none the less, but our wives and sisters more, because so many of them, as well as she, are true women.—Golden Rule.

HOW SHE CURED HIM OF SWEARING.

The husband of a certain Nashville lady was, before his marriage, a furious swearer. Through his wife's influence he left off this bad habit, except one favorite cuss word, which clung to him under all circumstances, and which, to the great annoyance of his good wife, he would unconsciously use everywhere—the word "damn." Several months since he arose one cold morning, before the servant came in to make the wood fire, and after a long effort and fruitless burning of many matches, turned and said, "Sallie, this damn fire won't burn." To this, the good wife earnestly said, "Yes, the damn wood is too green, and the damn servant has forgotten to bring up any damn kindling wood to start the damn fire with." He looked at his wife in absolute dismay, but at once saw the point and said nothing. A longer period than usual passed without the favorite expletive being used, but later on he wanted a basket, and said, after looking for it: "Sallie, where has the damn basket got to?" The wife quietly, as if putting a child to sleep, said, "Ask the damn cook to get the damn basket—damn her, she keeps it." As before, he said nothing, but months have passed, and if he damns anything, it is not where she is. She says it was like taking quinine, and she always went and washed out her mouth afterwards, but he is cured.

He was a printer, and he went into a millinery store to buy a breakfast cap for his sister. He stated his want and then fell to musing. "What kind of a cap do you wish?" queried the lovely young female who waited upon him. He roused himself from his reverie and answered: "Nonpareil full-face italic cap." She had served a year in a printing office, and she tumbled, so to speak. "Minion!" she exclaimed, "I know better; you want something primer." Then he smiled and said he would let the cap go, and take an M brace; whereupon she blushed, and said she would have to prove him once, after which she would have no objection to his locking up the form in his M brace. That finished the business. No cards.

The revisers of the Bible, when they struck the passage, "And he was naked," thought they must do something, so they fixed it to read, "He had on his under garments only." This looks to us like straining at a gnat and swallowing a medicated flannel undershirt, but we may be wrong.—Peck's Sun.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 6, 1881.

COLLECTOR ROBERTSON, in assuming charge of the New York custom house, announced that no living person had any promise of an appointment under him, and that he should make no changes at present, and none whatever except such as would be best for the service. He begins in a business-like way, and those who have been insinuating that he had mortgaged himself heavily in carrying on the Albany fight, are likely to find themselves very much mistaken.

P. W. CROWE of Peoria, Ill., tells a sensational story about the infernal machines recently discovered at Liverpool. He boasts that he is the manufacturer of the machines, and that he had entered into a conspiracy with O'Donovan Rossa and other Fenians to manufacture and place them in the holds of British vessels, to destroy them, pleading the "exigencies of war" in justification of the plan. The exigencies of war will be likely to put him behind the prison bars if he is going into this sort of business.

LEO HARTMANN, the Nihilist who was concerned in the attempt to kill the late Czar of Russia by blowing up the imperial train near Moscow, has arrived in this country, with credentials from the revolutionary committee, and proposes to awaken a more active sympathy here for their cause, and to procure funds to help them along. Much as Americans may sympathize with the people of Russia in their oppression, we are not prepared to help along assassins and murderers in their abominable work, and Hartmann will not make much progress in his work here, though he will find some sympathy with the socialists. His published account of the mining of the railroad shows how desperately in earnest the conspirators are, and that they religiously believe that they are doing God's work. But so did Guiteau.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD has made excellent progress on the road to health this week, and is doing so well that Dr. Bliss is almost ready to say he is really out of danger. The only danger now considered as at all likely to arise, and this not probable, is a relapse from suppuration, and the indications are all against this. On Monday Prof. Bell located the bullet in the President's body beyond question, by means of the electrical machine upon which he has been experimenting for some time. It was demonstrated that the ball was lodged in the anterior wall of the abdomen, five inches below the navel and three and a half inches to the right of the median line in the iliac region. This confirms in all respects the theory maintained by Dr. Bliss. It seems to be about an inch and a half below the surface, though its depth is not certainly known, and the physicians say it is in a safe place, and that it can be taken out without danger at the proper time. The President will probably be removed to the Soldiers' Home in a couple of weeks.

A young woman in Richmond, Va., recently answered an advertisement for a governess, and created so favorable an impression upon the advertiser that he visited her, representing himself as a man of wealth from the West, and impressing the young woman and her friends so deeply with his worth that she accepted his offer of marriage. He settled $30,000 upon her, his $800 check on Chicago was cashed by a bank, and they started on a wedding tour. At Auburn, N. Y., he deserted his wife, his worthless check was returned unpaid, and the unhappy young bride has gone home minus a husband and a $30,000 settlement. There is a moral in this for young ladies who allow themselves to be tempted into marriage with a stranger, by a golden bait.

The gauge of the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans Railroad, 550 miles in length, was changed last week Friday over the entire distance in eleven hours, making this the greatest feat yet accomplished in gauge changing. On Sunday the branch of the Erie Railroad between Rochester and Corning, N. Y., was changed to the standard gauge, and now the whole Erie system is in accord with other railroads in its gauge.

The salt industry of Michigan has risen to a leading place in the saline production of the world. The yield at Saginaw in 1880 was 13,000,000 bushels. Saginaw is now the largest salt-producing district in the United States. The bulk of this product is consumed in the Western States.

A vengeful Illinois farmer has commenced 9000 suits against a railroad company for failing to keep axes and saws, as ordered by law, in that number of cars. The aggregate penalty would be $1,800,000 if the prosecution proved successful, and the complainant would receive half.

J. T. McManus of Hartford, formerly superintendent of the New London Northern Railroad, and lately division superintendent of the New York and New England road, has been appointed superintendent of the Hartford and Connecticut Valley road.

John Russell Young says that Gen. Grant's income is about $50,000 a year from his son's firm, in which Grant is a silent partner, from his railroad positions, his own investments and the Grant fund. The General would seem to be pretty well provided for.

Rev. Samnel A. Read of West Brattleboro, Vt., will preach at the Baptist churches in this place and Three Rivers on Sunday.

The watermelon season is upon us, and Fox is making his usual preparations to have a big supply on hand to-day for Sunday eating.

The Worcester Continentals passed through Palmer Tuesday afternoon on a special train, bound for Saratoga, returning home yesterday.

Mrs. Robinson, widow of the late Gov. Robinson of Vermont, is spending a few days at Dr. Stowe's in this place, with a sister and niece.

Rev. Mr. Fullerton will dispose of some of his surplus household furniture at auction next Tuesday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, at the Congregational parsonage.

The Universalist Sunday school will have a picnic to-day in Upham's grove, near Blanchardville, and will be treated to a chowder by Mesrs. Chilson and Rawson.

Mr. Crosby, the one-armed signal man at the railroad crossing, has had a combined knife and fork made for his own use, which enables him to handle food about as easily as if he had two hands.

Mrs. George Kenerson and her daughter Janie have gone to New Bedford, and will visit Martha's Vineyard and other resorts before their return home. They are accompanied by Mrs. Willard Kenerson.

Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Daniels and W. C. Hitchcock, campers-out at Newell's Pond, have been called upon by over one hundred of their friends and acquaintances from this place. They broke camp yesterday.

The New London Northern road took half a dozen carloads of people from up Brattleboro way, to New London on its excursion last Saturday, besides others from stations south of here. The train was about an hour late at this station.

Valentine Grueble, a former resident of this town, who is now in the tailoring business at Shelburne Falls, fell from a high embankment last week Friday and broke his arm in two places, besides receiving other severe injuries.

Mrs. S. A. Andrews, seamstress at the State Primary School, has gone to Johnson, Vt., for a four weeks' rest, and to attend the golden wedding of her parents. The teachers at the institution started yesterday on their vacation of two weeks.

The Chase car ventilator will hereafter be used on the Boston & Albany passenger cars, the outer air being forced by the car's motion through a hood and tube into the car, where a box of water is placed in such a manner as to catch the cinders and dust.

There was a good attendance of members at the meeting of the Improvement Association at Dr. Holbrook's Monday evening, and the treasury of the association was replenished to the extent of a few dollars by the sale of ice cream, kindly furnished for the occasion by the host.

Engineers Everett Leach and Frank Moore of the New London Northern road have accepted positions as engineers in the Eagle Mine at Lewis, Nev., and Wm. Hubbard, who has run the switch engine, has gone to work for the New York & New England Railroad.

Capt. G. W. Palmer and wife of Illinois are visiting their daughter, Mrs. C. E. Dewey, in this place. There is to be a grand Palmer reunion at Stonington, Ct., next Wednesday and Thursday, and Capt. Palmer and his daughter, and Treasurer Dewey of the savings bank, will attend.

Barney Mullen was before the district court on Monday, for drunkenness, and paid a fine of $1 and costs $5.50. Yesterday Benjamin Williams was up for defrauding Landlord Stone, and not having the funds to pay his fine and costs amounting to $13.70, he was sent to the house of correction.

Soon after the shooting of President Garfield a little girl in this village came in and told her mother that the President had been "estimated." Later in the day her brother, a few years older, came home, and remarking that the President had been assassinated, asked: "What does that mean, kicked out of office?"

Lawyer Barker's petition for release from jail was denied at a chamber session of the supreme court in Springfield Monday, and the petition of Sarah M. Maher of this town, praying for the custody of her children, until her libel divorce from Joseph P. Maher is settled, was also refused because not supported by an affidavit.

Complaint is made that the lamp under the Commercial street railroad bridge is left unlighted a good many nights. The railroad officials agreed to take care of this lamp if the town would pay for the oil, and the query is whether the railroad men are neglecting their duty, or the town has failed to furnish the illuminating material.

There was a quiet trot on the park the other day between a couple of horses owned by H. A. Bigelow and Geo. W. Aspinwall, for a purse of $20. Five heats were trotted, Aspinwall's horse taking the first two, and Bigelow's the next three heats. Another race has been arranged between the same horses, to come off next week Saturday, for a purse of $100.

Three men broke into a store at South Windham, Ct., last Saturday night, but the proprietors were on the watch, their suspicions having been aroused, and there was a lively interchange of shots, which resulted in the capture and probably fatal wounding of one of the burglars, the other two escaping. It is thought that this is the same gang which visited Palmer earlier in the week.

The New London Northern Railroad sells excursion tickets to-day to Mount Toby and Lake Pleasant at a low rate, the tickets being good to return on to-day or on Monday. The fare for the round trip is from Monson 80 cents, Palmer and Three Rivers 75 cents, Barrett's 70, Belchertown 60 cents. Persons desiring to spend the Sabbath on the mountain or at the Lake, will find this an excellent opportunity.

A special session of the probate court was held in Springfield Tuesday, when C. B. J. Root was appointed administrator of the estate of Hezekiah Root of Ludlow. Laura M. Cushman was appointed guardian of Mary A. and Rufus S. Cushman of Ludlow; Austin D. Fuller of Frank A. Fuller of Ludlow; Lille B. Holbrook of Helen W. and Mae A. Shute of Palmer. Accounts were filed on the estates of David Welch and Mary Brewer of Wilbraham, and John Smith of Wales.

A company of from thirty to forty persons joined in the excursion of the Baptist Sunday school to Mount Toby Wednesday. About three carloads of Amherst people went to the same resort, and all had a very pleasant day in playing games, swinging, and exploring the rocky nooks and crannies, or climbing the mountain to enjoy the view from its summit. Landlord White has erected a very comfortable hotel on the summit, and is untiring in his exertions to add to the comfort and pleasure of his patrons.

Somebody had a very close shave Wednesday at the first crossing on the New London Northern road this side of Three Rivers. As the 11 a. m. train for Amherst approached the crossing a horse and carriage were driven rapidly over the track in front of the engine, which just grazed the rear wheel of the carriage, throwing it sharply around, but not overturning it, and the occupants, a man and woman, drove on unharmed. Their hair must have "riz" a little, and they probably will not care to try the experiment over again.

One of our bald-headed church goers was seriously annoyed by the hungry flies last Sunday, and in his attempts to demolish them he finally struck a blow on his pate which resounded loudly through the audience room, waking the sleepers and causing all to start with apprehension, as the possibility flashed upon their minds of another Guiteau. Those who witnessed the performance just "lawfed," and various methods of relief have been suggested to the fly victim. The most practical one seems to be that he should cover the barren sections of his cranium with a generous layer of insect powder.

Mrs. Kate Maloney, wife of Dr. John L. Maloney of North Adams, and eldest daughter of John Feeney of this place, has applied for a divorce from her husband, whom she charges with adultery and cruel and abusive treatment. Dr. Maloney became acquainted with Miss Feeney while practicing medicine in this place a few years ago, and they were married in 1878, Mrs. Maloney buying a house in North Adams with a portion of the $4000 she had just received from the town of Monson, for injuries received by being thrown from a carriage on account of a defective highway. The Catholic priest at North Adams last Sunday publicly withdrew the recommendation he had given Dr. Maloney when he settled in that place. Mrs. Maloney has returned to her father's home.

Vennor predicted "fairly warm and cool to cold days, and Fall-like evenings and nights" from the 2d to the 5th of this month, and most people will admit if the past two or three days have been specimens of the "fairly warm" kind, they don't want to see any hot ones. The balance of the month this noted prophet puts down as follows: 6th—Fair and pleasant. 7th—Heat and storms. 8th to 10th—Sultry weather, with heavy showers—cooler evenings and nights. 11th to 13th—Heat again in the United States, with cloudy and sultry weather, with storms in Canada. 14th—Cooler, change. 15th—Cooler to cold, and cloudy and pleasant. 16th—Storms through portions of Virginia. 17th to 18th—Hailstorms and frosts probably in some sections. 19th—Heat and storms. 20th—Ditto. 21st—Sultry and showery. 22d—Sultry and windy. 23d—Heat and wind. 24th—Ditto. 25th to 26th—Heavy storms on the lakes, St. Lawrence and around New York. 27th to 29th—Cooler weather, with rains and frosts in northern sections. 30th to 31st—Fair and pleasant, with cool evenings and nights, with indications of returning heat.

Marchant & Brigham, manufacturers of straw goods on Fox avenue, have made an assignment to R. L. Goddard, their largest creditor, being forced to take this step by a failure to dispose of their goods. The past season has not been a favorable one, and the goods they manufactured kept accumulating, until they now have some 600 cases in the hands of their New York selling agents, and 200 on hand. The invoice value of these hats is about $25,000, but at this season their market value is very uncertain, perhaps not half this sum, and as Messrs. Marchant & Brigham were unable to carry them over until Fall, they were obliged to take the above step. Their liabilities are about $29,000, and their assets consist of their mill property and these manufactured goods. Their mill is well equipped, their goods were well made and gave perfect satisfaction wherever sold, and had they been able to dispose of their stock they would have been in excellent shape. They have given employment to about fifty hands when running full, and it is to be hoped that some arrangement may be made so that this industry shall not be lost to the place.

A good many ladies dread to walk through Main street in the evening, knowing that they must pass a continuous line of gaping men and boys, some of whom do not content themselves with merely gaping, but offer various uncomplimentary and insulting remarks, while the sound of frequent oaths is a common thing. It is a nuisance which ought to be abated in some way. Perhaps, if nobody else will do anything, the ladies themselves may get a point or two from the action of the ladies at Hoosick Falls, N. Y., who became tired of a similar ordeal, and derived some relief from the publication of the following notice: "Wanted—About five hundred young men, of all shapes and sizes, from the tall, graceful dandy down to the little hump-backed, carroty-headed, weazel-eyed upstart. The object is to form a gaping corps to be in attendance at the street corners each evening during the summer to stare at the females as they pass, and to make delicate and gentlemanly remarks upon their person and dress. All who wish to enlist in the above corps will appear at the various street corners commencing this evening, when they will be duly inspected, and their names, personal appearance and quantity of brains registered in a book kept for that purpose, and to be published. To prevent a general rush, it will be as well to state that none will be enlisted possessing intellectual capacity superior to that of a well-bred donkey."

Morris Moynihan, who was arrested last week at Wilbraham and taken to Springfield Friday to answer to the charge of murdering Reuben S. Cadwell, had a hearing before the police court, and was sent to jail to await trial yesterday. His brother, Alexander Moynihan of Worcester, was in town last Saturday, and tells a story which would seem to indicate that Morris may not be responsible for the crime it is supposed he committed. His brother says that Morris learned the iron molder's trade, at which he worked for many years in the Ames agricultural works at Worcester. He was also employed a number of years ago as a weaver in the mill at Three Rivers. He was a steady and industrious man, and always took special pride in being neat and tidy in his personal appearance. He married and had several children, but his wife took to drink and became a great trial to him, finally deserting him, with the children. He seemed to be completely unmanned by his domestic troubles, and became slovenly and morose, and took to wandering. At one time he assaulted his brother's wife, and became so violent at times that he was committed to the insane asylum at Worcester, being afterwards taken to Northampton. He was subsequently released, and occasionally visited his brother, who did not dare allow him to remain at his house, never considering him safe. He was always clothed in rags, and though his brother bought several new suits of clothes for him, he would in a day or two be as ragged as ever. He had not heard anything of him for several months, until he read an account of his arrest for this crime. In view of his past record he very naturally feels that Morris is not accontable for his crime, and has always felt that he should not have been discharged from the asylum.

LAST SATURDAY ON THE PARK.

A good deal of interest was manifested in the race on the park last Saturday afternoon, and between 400 and 500 persons were in attendance to witness it. Dr. Holbrook, Henry P. Holden and Andrew Holt were chosen judges, and the horses were called up. Mr. Holbrook's horse was given first position, Thompson's second and Goddard's third, and after scoring half a dozen times were given the word. Mr. Goddard's horse took the lead before the end of the first quarter, and kept it through the heat, trotting in fine style and never breaking once. Between Holbrook's and Thompson's horses it was more of an even thing, sometimes one being ahead and then the other, and they came under the wire neck and neck, Mr. Thompson's horse barely leading, but being set back for running. The second heat proved to be almost a repetition of the first, the horses coming in in the same order. The score was as follows:

Goddard,	1	1

Time, 3.02, 3.04.

The first heat (half mile) of the bicycle race was called between the above heats. Only two contestants put in an appearance, one of the expected participants being sick, while those from Monson failed to arrive. The heat was won by George English in 2.32, but the next two heats were taken by J. A. White, in 2.25 and 1.59 respectively, he distancing his opponent in the last heat.

After this came a ball game between the club in this village and the Monson nine, in which the latter were victorious by a score of 8 to 1. The game brought out some good playing on both sides, but the Monsons played too close a field game for the home team, although they did some good batting. The umpiring of Chas. Jewett of Monson was very good. The score by innings was as follows:

Innings	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
MONSONS	1	1	0	1	3	0	1	0	1	8
WIDE AWAKES	0	0	1	0	0	0	0	0	0	1

To-day the Wide Awakes go to Wales for a return game with the nine there.

ANOTHER LEAF FROM THE PAST.

If we were to judge of the importance of some of the town meetings held in the past century by the records of those meetings, we should be forced to the conclusion that the weighty responsibility for the election of all the State officers devolved upon this quiet town of Palmer. Here, for instance, is the warrant for the meeting to "chuse" State officers just 100 years ago, which is as follows:

HAMPSHIRE SS.

J. A. Manley, our new station agent, assumed the duties of his position Monday noon.

D. G. Ashley will preach at West Brimfield next Sabbath and will organize a Sabbath school.

J. W. Chadsey and wife joined the Worcester Continentals at Palmer, on their excursion to Saratoga.

From a private letter received from a party at South Yarmouth, we should judge the ladies had become quite expert with the hook and line.

The rate of taxation this year is $12 on $1000. The valuation of the town is—Real estate, $1,448,980; personal, $599,461; total $2,047,441.

The Methodist society have hired the house formerly occupied by E. P. Twichell, on Quaboag street, for their pastor the remaining part of the year.

The trustees of the M. E. church have received plans and specifications for enlarging and repairing their church, and propose to go on with the work as soon as possible.

Our people are well supplied with meats and vegetables, having two excellent markets in the place. Geo. Bliss also runs a cart up from West Warren three or four times a week, and to do a good turn the Butterworth Bros. run a cart to that village.

HAMPDEN.

Mr. and Mrs. White, from Holbrook, are visiting here, with headquarters at Mrs. Lizzie Beebe's.

Mr. Root takes his vacation the four Sabbaths in August. The Sabbath school will be held as usual during vacation at 12 m.

Charles I. Burleigh is still heard from at New London, Ct., where his health is much improved. He is expected home to-day.

Rev. E. P. Root was summoned last Saturday to the bedside of his brother in Greenfield, who is fast wasting away with consumption.

Taylor was not arrested for assault, nor was Dalton for drunkenness last Sabbath. Commissioner Smith is careful in issuing warrants.

Michael Powers has erected a new barn in place of an old dilapidated one, and John Phillips has made it look white. Michael has improved his building much in the exchange.

Ralph S. Chapin has been sorely afflicted with a number of cancers. He has spent weeks under the care of physicians in Rome, N. Y., and is now being treated in North Adams.

Rev. Mr. Copeland, Baptist minister from East Longmeadow, supplied the desk here last Sunday. He seemed to be a recent theological student, and gave us much of the original Greek and Hebrew.

The assessors have completed their tax bills and committed them to the collector. Value of real estate in town $298,495; personal estate, $88,673; total, $387,168. Rate of taxation, $12.50; number of polls 247.

F. Andrews, Supt. of Lacowsic Mill, who has been a leader of instrumental as well as vocal music, is starting a band of instrumental music here. He now has twelve pieces, and the number increases weekly. They meet at Academy hall for rehearsals. All the village are interested in the enterprise.

MONSON.

Geo. H. Newton's whaling party is at Lafayette, Ind.

Miss Grace Aldrich is at Little Compton, R. I., with the Misses Hussey.

Mrs. J. H. Aldrich and Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Moore have gone to Colorado Springs, Col.

The Methodist Sunday school have recently added more than one hundred dollars' worth of books to their library.

Quite a party, including a number of our leading business men, will go to Coney Island Saturday night for a few days.

Holmes Jr., and wife are at Long Branch, Miss Esther Holmes at Southampton, L. I., Mrs. A. D. Ellis at Watch Hill, Mrs. H. Lyon at Saratoga Springs, Mrs. Hussey and daughters at Little Compton, R. I.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The boating fever still runs high. There are now 15 boats and canoes on the river.

There was never more building going on in Ware than at present. There are fifty-four carpenters at work, and more wanted.

David Barlow celebrated his 88th birthday on Wednesday last. He is still hale and hearty, and has done his share in the haying this year.

Miss Lydia Howard is to occupy the rooms in Sandford's Block recently vacated by the Young Men's Library Association, as an extension of her dressmaking establishment.

Miss Katie Canavan, one of the recent graduates of the high school, who has formerly been with Hall & Parker, has a position in Daniels' dry goods establishment, on Broadway, New York.

The French Catholic church are making arrangements to hold a ten days' fair this Fall. The merchants upon the street have many of them promised to contribute quite liberally in way of articles to be sold.

Holden has repented of his contrivance to prevent persons from sitting on his curbing, to such an extent that he has placed a board guard so that if any one should fall on it the ugly spikes could not enter but about an inch deep.

The filth had become so intolerable in the gutter on the south side of Main street that the clerks took the highway surveyors' business into their own hands on Wednesday morning, and collected about ten cartloads in big piles, from which it was carted away for manure during the day.

Dwight F. Marsh has let the contract for his new house on Cottage street to H. P. Cummings. This is a fine location, and is to be the best house built this season, so far as we have been able to learn. Carroll & Barnes have taken the job of building the house for A. D. Talbot, at about $2000.

The concrete walk is being laid through Water street. This is being put in in a different manner from any in town, there being no curbing, but the concrete extending down, forming curbing and gutter. A short piece of walk in front of the Unitarian church and the town lot would be appreciated by the large number who pass over it daily.

The village was thrown into a state of excitement Monday evening by the report that E. H. Bassett and W. Ripley had hired a team the night before to be gone about an hour to Muddy pond for lilies, and at 7 o'clock in the morning had not returned. Quite a number went to Hardwick pond to look for them. They returned, however, about 9 o'clock, all right, having gone to Barre and spent the night.

J. Byrns is remodeling his bakery, and has put in one of Rayne's improved reel ovens, with a capacity for using up six barrels of flour or making about twenty-four barrels of crackers per day. He is also to have a new machine for cutting. Mr. Byrns is one of our square dealing men, who means to keep fully up to the times in facilities, so as to compete with any in quality of production as well as in price.

A Council of the American Legion of Honor was instituted in Ware Monday evening by W. F. Andrews of Springfield, with the following officers: W. F. Wilson, Commander; E. The hygienic condition of the White House is severely commented upon by those who are familiar with it. Its location is unfortunate, and a number of the inmates have been prostrated with malaria, while its interior condition is such as to demand some attention from Congress. Says Dr. Bliss: "I had no idea the President's house was in such a deplorable condition. I don't see how in the world Gen. Grant and Mr. Hayes stood it as long as they did. Why, you can't imagine what a foul odor arises from the bath rooms and closets. This house is a disgrace to the nation. I will go before a Congressional committee and make a statement to that effect."

A post-mortem examination of G. A. Ware, who died at Shelburne Falls last week, revealed some interesting facts. The heart had become so enlarged that its unusual action had worn the rib almost away, leaving it in a state of putrefaction. The main artery leading from the heart to the brain was found to be ulcerated throughout its entire extent; while the brain, being forced to perform an unnaturally vigorous duty, had worn the skull nearly through to the scalp—in some places there being but a mere crust as thin as an egg-shell.

A thorough test is about to be made of the theory that large areas of arid country in the centre of the continent can be made valuable for agriculture by means of artesian wells. The small appropriation made by Congress has been placed in the hands of a competent scientific commission and the sites for the wells will soon be selected. If a steady flow of water can be obtained from such wells it will not be long before millions of acres of dsert land will be converted into fruitful fields.

A new analysis by the present State Assayer of Massachusetis confirms the favorable report of his predecessor in regard to the excellent quality of the whiskey bottled by Chester H. Graves & Sons, Boston, and introduced by them some six years ago under the name of G. O. Taylor Old Bourbon.

NO GOOD PREACHING.—No man can do a good job of work, preach a good sermon, try a lawsuit well, doctor a patient, or write a good article when he feels miserable and dull, with sluggish brain and unsteady nerves, and none should make the attempt in such a condition when it can be so easily and cheaply removed by a little Hop Bitters. See other column.—Albany Times.

SPURTS of disgusting mucous, snuffles, deafness, crackling sensations in the head, fœtid breath, nasal twang and tickling in the throat, are signs of Catarrh. DR. WEI DE MEYER'S recent discovery of a CONSTITUTIONAL treatment by ABSORPTION is the only remedy which has ever yet really cured this terrible malady. Wei De Meyer's CATARRH CURE is sold by druggists, or DELIVERED by D. B. DEWEY & CO., 46 Dey St., N. Y., at $1 a package. Descriptive pamphlets mailed free. a SYMPTOMS.—Slight pain in the side, skin and eyes assume a thick yellow coat, digestion is impaired, an unpleasant sinking sensation at the pit of the stomach is experienced, the bowels are irregular, the mind fretful, the memory weakened, sometimes a slight cough, coldness of the hands and feet, sometimes loss of appetite and at others unnatural craving for food, dizziness of the head, depressed spirits, feeling of uncertainty, of having left something undone, but can't tell what it is. Take Simmons Liver Regulator; it will remove all unpleasant feelings and make you well.

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.—It seems strange that any one will suffer from derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization. It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the BEST BLOOD PURIFIER ever discovered, effectually curing scrofula, syphylitic disorders, weakness of the kidneys, erysipelas, malaria; all nervous disorders and debility, bilious complaints and all diseases indicating an impure condition of the blood, liver, kidneys, stomach, skin, etc. It corrects digestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it ACTS LIKE A CHARM, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

BAKER'S PAIN PANACEA cures pain in man and beast. For use externally and internally.

DR. ROGER'S VEGETABLE WORM SYRUP instantly destroys worms and removes the secretions which cause them.

Hardy's studio, 310 Main street, Springfield, still keeps up its reputation for artistic work in photography.

CENTAUR LINIMENT.—Invaluable to families and owners of horses. For sale everywhere.

CASTORIA.—For sour stomach, constipation, and fretfulness of children. Pleasant, safe and cheap. 900 drops; 35 doses, 35 cents.

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. in ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

Itching Piles—Symptoms and Cure.

The symptoms are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, increased by scratching, very distressing, particularly at night, as if pin worms were crawling in and about the rectum; the private parts are sometimes affected; if allowed to continue very serious results may follow. "DR. SWAYNE'S ALL HEALING OINTMENT" is a pleasant, sure cure. Also for Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Blotches, all Scaly, Crusty, Cutaneous Eruptions. Price 50 cents; 3 boxes for $1.25. Sent by mail to any address on receipt of price in currency or three-cent postage stamps. Prepared only by Dr. Swayne & Son, 330 North Sixth St., Philadelphia, Pa., to whom letters should be addressed. Sold by all prominent druggists. 1y43

At the Gate.

Now the spoony rural lover
Round the moonlight path doth hover
That his girl he may discover
At the gate, gate, gate.
Sharp at half-past eight he meets her,
And in ecstacy he greets her,
And to ices later treats her—
Lovers' bait, bait, bait.
And they swing upon the gate
Till the hour's pretty late.
Lots of sentimental chinning
While he hangs, hangs, hangs,
O'er that gate, the maiden winning;
While he feels against his face
Bits of lace, lace, lace,
And the more divine sensation of her bangs,
bangs, bangs,
And he e'en forgets her freckles
While he dreams about her shekels,
And he vows her Grecian nose,
Is a rose, rose, rose.
And each eye a dreamy pansy,
And her love a necromancy.
And then appears her father with his boot, boot, boot.
As swift as any lawping,
Just watch that spoony chap wing
Down the opalescent lane
Like a Western hurricane,
While the owls in every treetop loudly hoot,
hoot, hoot,
And the parent lists the music of his scoot,
scoot—
Lists the scootinabulation of his scoot.

OUTDOOR SAFETY.

The fear of the weather has sent multitudes to the grave who otherwise might have lived in health many years longer. The fierce north wind and the furious snow storm kill comparatively few, while hot winter rooms and crisping summer suns have countless hetacombs of human victims to attest their power. Except in localities where malignant miasms prevail, and that only in warm weather, outdoor life is the healthiest and happiest, from the tropics to the poles. The general fact speaks for itself, that persons who are out of doors most take cold least. In some parts of our country, nearly one-half of the adult deaths are from diseases of the air passages. These ailments arise from taking cold in some way or another; and surely the reader will take some interest in a subject by which, by at least one chance out of four, his own life may be lost. All colds arise from one of two causes: First—By getting cool too quickly after exercise, either as to the whole body, or any part of it. Second—By being chilled, and remaining so for a long time, from want of exercise. To avoid colds from the former, we have only to go to a fire the moment the exercise ceases in the winter. If in the summer, repair at once to a closed room, and there remain with the same clothing on until cooled off. To avoid colds from the latter cause—and these engender the most speedily fatal diseases, such as pleurisies, croup, and inflammation of the lungs, called pneumonia—we have only to compel ourselves to walk with sufficient vigor to keep off a feeling of chilliness. Attention to a precept contained in less than a dozen words, would add twenty years to the average of civilized life. Keep away chilliness by exercise; cool off slowly. Then you will never take cold, indoor or out!—Hall's Journal of Health.

Ex-Senator Merrimon of North Carolina is reported to have said recently in a speech at a prohibitory meeting in Reidsville in that State:—"I have never meddled with liquor. I have never drank it, hardly kept it as medicine in my family; and yet it has meddled with me, has made my boy a wandering vagabond, has broken my wife's heart; yes, when I was asleep, thinking him at home in the house, he was being made a drunkard in the bar-rooms of Raleigh."

In the garden two six-years-old children, a girl and a boy, exchanged vigorous blows and scratches, meanwhile calumniating each other at the top of their voices like Homeric heroes. Mamma interferes, and, after much difficulty, succeeds in separating them. "What in the name of goodness are you up to, you unhappy litile wretches?" "Playing husband and wife, ma?"

A farmer on being asked to write a testimonial for a patent clothes wringer, produced the following: "I bought your clothes wringer and am hugely pleased with it. I bought a jag of wood which proved too green and unfit to burn. I ran the whole load through your wringer, and have used the wood for kindling ever since."

No better cosmetics than a severe temperance and purity, modesty and humility, a gracious temper and calmness of spirit; no true beauty without the signature of these graces in the very countenance.—John Ray.

A celebrated lawyer said that the three most troublesome clients he ever had were a young lady who wanted to be married, a married woman who wanted a divorce, and an old maid who didn't know what she wanted.

When the Emperor of China travels in public 100 men dressed just like him travel with him, so that his identity cannot be discovered. This is embarrassing for would be assassins.

A "three-year-old" discovered the neighbor's hens in her yard scratching. In a most indignant tone she reported to her mother that Mr. Smith's hens were "wiping their feet on our grass."

An exchange has an article on "How to run a newspaper." This should be read only by editors, as every other person in the world knows just how a newspaper ought to be run.

It is estimated that Germany will have lost at the close of '81 about a quarter of a million of her most efficient subjects by emigration to America.

King Kalakaua was formally presented the other day to Queen Victoria, who received him at Windsor, surrounded by several of her sons and daughters.

Honor needs no code or digest; its laws can be neither amended nor repealed.

HOW POLITICS AFFECT THE YOUNG LADIES.

The other night the Utica Croquet Club—composed entirely of young ladies—held its second meeting for the season of 1881. Two new members were admitted, and proposals for membership were made. The committee on resolutions made the expected report. The resolutions were written on scented paper, and penned with violet ink. After the business of the evening had been finished, the young lady sitting on the ottoman suddenly exclaimed:

"Oh, my! Girls, did you hear about Conkling?"

"No. What is it?" asked the four misses on the settee, in one breath.

"Why, he's resigned!"

"Resigned to what? Has he been dangerously ill?" said the secretary.

"No, no. Can't you understand? He has resigned his Senatorship."

"Goodness gracious! Ain't that too bad?"

"How much did he get for it?" queried the girl with the album in her lap.

"Why, you silly thing, you ought to read the newspapers. Senator Conkling got dissatisfied with something in Washington, and resigned his office into the hands of Governor Cornell. There was a misunderstanding between him and the President about some man named Rob—Robert—Roberts—let me see. Robinson—no, that ain't it. Oh, yes—Robertson. Dear suz! The whole country is in a crisis."

"I read all about it," said the President of the club, knowingly. "Senator Conkling and this Robertson had some kind of a fuss—while they were trying a lawsuit. Come to think, Mr. Conkling wanted to give him some instructions, and Robertson wouldn't have it. Then the President appointed Robertson to collect some money in some ward in New York city—"

"That wasn't it," interrupted the first speaker. "The President told Mr. Robertson to stand at the lock—a deadlock they call it—and see that the canal boat captains pay their tolls. The man who was put out of a job by Mr. Robertson getting the situation, used to go to school with Mr. Conkling."

"What I want to know," said a young lady, "is how could the President order these men around so? Didn't I read in a paper the other day that Mr. Conkling was the boss?"

"My sakes! that's funny," ejaculated the Secretary; "I heard my brother say it was a man named Blaine, who came here from Canada, and wanted to run the whole country, who caused the disturbance. The President made this Blaine a present of a cabinet organ, and then he never stopped begging until he had got a whole set of furniture, too. That made the other men who didn't get anything jealous."

"What were the guns firing for to-day?" asked the girls on the settee.

"You see, the Senate helped Robertson to get this job," answered the first speaker, "and the half-breeds were so glad they borrowed some cannons."

"Who are the half-breeds? Indians?"

"I am not sure, but I don't think they are. They must have come here when the canal opened."

"Girls," exclaimed the president of the meeting, "do you think that firing was a real battle? I read in the paper last week about the 'War on the President.' Isn't it awful?"

"And I saw 'How the bomb struck!'"

"Oh, those horrid half-breeds!" ejaculated five voices at once.

"Yes," continued the president, "and I believe they are to be commanded by that General Mahone, who came to Washington with a red shirt on and tried to scare everybody."

"I'm going home," faintly said the secretary.

"Let us all go," said the girls on the settee.

"Oh, I hope we won't meet any half-breeds," said they all.

A FEW CHURCH DON'TS.

Don't go to sleep.
Don't bring the baby with you.
Don't sing if you don't know how.
Don't sit down on your new silk hat.
Don't put counterfeit coin on the plate.
Don't read your book during the sermon.
Don't stay at home on collection Sundays.
Don't go in late if you wear squeaky boots.
Don't take a sneezing fit if you can help it.
Don't try to make children sit still as Egyptian mummies.
Don't do any inward swearing if a fly plays hop-scotch on that bald spot.
Don't stare every girl out of countenance because some girls like it.
Don't be an active talker in church matters unless you are an active worker.
Don't keep your religion in the pocket of your Sunday coat.
Don't think everybody went to church just to see what you've got on.
Don't pull a pint of peanuts out of your pocket with your handkerchief.
Don't get red and give yourself away if somethiug in the sermon hits you in a sore spot.
Don't give your umbrella to a bevy of pretty girls and go home in a drenching rain.—Albany Sunday Press.

TAKE SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.

THE CHEAPEST, PUREST AND BEST FAMILY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

PURELY VEGETABLE,

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
LEWIS G. WUNDER, Philadelphia."

"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—*Ed. THE PUREST AND BEST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

A combination of HOPS, BUCHU, MANDRAKE and DANDELION, with all the best and most curative properties of all other Bitters, makes the greatest Blood Purifier, Liver Regulator, and Life and Health Restoring Agent on earth.

No disease can possibly long exist where Hop Bitters are used, so varied and perfect are their operations. THEY GIVE NEW LIFE AND VIGOR TO THE AGED AND INFIRM.

To all whose employments cause irregularity of the bowels or urinary organs, or who require an Appetizer Tonic and Mild Stimulant, Hop Bitters are invaluable, without intoxicating.

No matter what your feelings or symptoms are, what the disease or ailment is, use Hop Bitters. Don't wait until you are sick, but if you only feel bad or miserable, use them at once. It may save your life. It has saved hundreds.

$500 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help. Do not suffer or let your friends suffer, but use and urge them to use HOP BITTERS.

Remember, Hop Bitters is no vile, drugged, drunken nostrum, but the purest and best medicine ever made; the INVALIDS' FRIEND & HOPE," and no person or family should be without them.

D. I. C. is an absolute and irresistible cure for drunkenness, use of opium, tobacco and narcotics. All sold by druggists. Send for circulars.

THE WISE ENJOY GOOD HEALTH.

SANFORD'S GINGER.

Impure water, unhealthy climate, unripe fruit, unwholesome food, cramps, chills, malaria, excessive heat and the thousand and one ills that beset the traveler or family are nothing to those fortified and sustained by the use of SANFORD'S GINGER, "the delicious." As a beverage it quenches thirst, opens the pores, relieves the head, regulates the stomach and bowels, eradicates a craving for intoxicants and imparts new life to the languid, careworn, overworked, nervous and sleepless.

Beware of imitations said to be as good. Ask for SANFORD'S GINGER and take no other.

FOUNDED BY GORDON M. FISK.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE.

WONDERFUL SURGICAL OPERATION—REMOVAL OF URINARY STONES FROM THE BLADDER—SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell, of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they called Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their reformation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation of the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice into practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all classes of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. 1m18

The Tale of a Tramp.

Let me sit down a minute,
A stone's got into my shoe,
Don't you commence your cussin'—
I hain't done nothin' to you.
Yes, I'm a tramp—what of it?
Folks say we ain't no good—
Tramps have got to live, I reckon,
Though people don't think we should.

Once I was young and handsome,
Had plenty of cash and clothes—
That was before I got to tipplin',
And gin got in my nose.
Way down in the Lehigh valley
Me and my people grew!
I was a blacksmith, captain,
Yes, and a good one, too.

Me and my wife, and Nellie—
Nellie was just sixteen—
And she was the pootiest cretur
The valley had ever seen.
Beaux! why she had a dozen;
Had 'em from near and fur;
But they was mostly farmers—
None of them suited her.

But there was a city chap,
Handsome, young and tall—
Ah, curse him! I wish I had him
To strangle against yonder wall!
He was the man for Nellie—
She didn't know no ill;
Mother, she tried to stop it,
But you know a young girl's will.

Well, it's the same old story—
Common enough, you say;
But he was a soft-tongued devil,
And he got her to run away.
More than a month, or later,
We heard from the poor young thing—
He had run away and left her
Without any wedding ring.

Back to her home we brought her—
Back to her mother's side;
Filled with a ragin' fever,
She fell at my feet and died;
Frantic with shame and sorrow,
Her mother began to sink,
And died in less than a fortnight—
That's when I took to drink.

Come, give me a glass, now, colonel,
And I'll be on my way,
And I'll tramp till I catch that scoundrel,
If it takes till judgment day.

WITH HIS OWN WEAPONS.

"What are you thinking about, Maude? You have not spoken a word for five minutes. I can't say that you are remarkably entertaining this evening."

"Am I not? And do you really wish to know my thoughts?"

"Certainly I do."

"Very well, then. No woman is satisfied with a man's devotion, even if she knows it to be genuine, if he appears to slight her in the presence of others; and I think, my dear George, that I occupied the position of a slighted woman last evening, when you devoted yourself so openly to Clara Vaughan."

"I only danced with her three times," said George.

"And sat out three more dances with her," supplemented Maude, "while I, owing to the lack of men, was obliged to play the part of wall-flower. Do you think that was a pleasant position for an engaged young woman?"

"My dear child, how plainly you talk!" cried George, disconcerted by her frank appeal.

"Why not? Pique should not be allowed to interfere between lovers—you know pride's chickens are an expensive brood to keep. I confess that your conduct made me very unhappy. I was not jealous, remember—I have perfect faith in you; but I felt neglected, and annoyed that you should give Clara the opportunity to triumph over me even in semblance; for she delights in such victories—little coquette that she is!"

"Maude," said George, seeing his chance and improving it at once, only too glad to bolster up a weak cause, "I am surprised to see that you dislike Miss Vaughan. Why is it women never uphold each other? In my opinion she is a sweet girl without an atom of coquetry about her."

"Then you have less discrimination than I gave you credit for possessing," rejoined Maude, quietly, though her deepening color showed that she resented his words. "But we will not discuss Clara, if you please—I wish to talk of ourselves."

"What do you want me to do?" cried George, irritated at the cool way in which his attack was met. "Surely you would not tie me to your side every moment of the time?"

"Not one moment of it, sir, if it is your wish to be free!" haughtily exclaimed Maude, now really angry. "You can leave at once—I shall make no effort to detain you."

"What nonsense!" the young man rejoined, in a much humbler tone. "You know I could not live without you, Maudie. But you are unreasonable; I can't promise never to speak to another girl, you know."

"Nor do I exact such a promise; only I wish others to see by your conduct that you have sworn allegiance to me. I am only a woman and have all a woman's vanity. George, suppose our positions had been reversed last evening; would you have liked to see me as openly pleased with another man's attentions as you were with Clara?"

"Certainly I should," he answered, with an air of virtuous self-denial refreshing to see. "I would never interfere with your enjoyment in any way."

Maud looked deeply perplexed, and then faintly smiled.

"You are quite safe in saying that, because I do not believe there is another eligible man in the village. Which fact probably accounts," she added with a sly laugh, "for Clara's absorption of you."

George bowed.

"Thank you for the compliment, Miss Arthur."

"Not at all."

Maude had the sweetest temper in the world, and her mood was fast regaining its wonted sunniness.

"Well, Georgie, I won't scold any more, but we'll make a bargain; you can flirt all you choose, give me equal liberty; are you agreed?"

"On one condition; that neither of us abuse the privilege."

"The umpires to be our own consciences."

"Yes."

"Then, my dear Georgie, I'm afraid your career will be positively reckless!"

* * * * *

Maude stood waiting for her lover, who was to escort her to a ball at Bedford Hall; and in her rose-colored dress, with roses in her dark hair, looked pretty enough to woo a hermit from his seclusion.

George, who, despite his little predilection for flirting, was very much in love with the girl, was loud in his admiration of her appearance; and when the pair entered the Hall together, happiness had lent a new light to Maude's beautiful eyes.

Clara Vaughan, a charming little sylph in blue and silver, came tripping across the floor to meet them.

"Oh, Maude," she cried, when the first greetings were over, "who do you think is here—just returned from London?"

"I'm sure I can't imagine," said Maude.

"Another pretty girl?" asked George, looking admiringly into Clara's rather bold blue eyes.

"Pretty girl, indeed! As if I should be interested in her!" said Clara, in disdain. "No, indeed—it's a handsome young man—none other than your old admirer, Maude—Stephen Black."

"Is it possible!" cried Maude, with a blush of undisguised pleasure. "Why, yes—there he is, sure enough! And how handsome he is looking."

"Humph! Women have strange ideas of beauty," grumbled George, by no means delighted with this turn of affairs.

"Oh, we don't expect you to see how charming he is," Clara flippantly answered; "it would scarcely be natural under the circumstances. But Maude and I think differently. And oh! he's put his name on my card for three dances!" And she flourished the bit of pasteboard in triumph.

George stretched out his hand for it.

"Is there room for my name there, Miss Clara?" he asked rather stiffly, not relishing her enthusiasm, and inclined to think that, after all, the "sweet girl" had considerable coquetry about her.

"I believe there are one or two dances left," she answered with an indifference which made Maude smile, remembering how different her reception of George's attentions had been on a former occasion.

"You had better take what dances you wish before my card is filled," she said, quietly, when her lover had returned Clara's card.

"Oh, I'll attend to that after the first dance," he answered; and in another moment they had taken their places upon the floor.

Maude said nothing; but her quiet smile meant volumes.

George spoke little while dancing; he was nettled by the marked change in Clara's manner. He did not care a straw for the girl, but his vanity was wounded. He furtively watched her as she danced with Stephen Black—a singularly handsome man, he acknowledged to himself—and observed all her little airs and graces—the very arts which she had employed to please him not so long ago. The moment the dance was over he seated Maude beside some friends and rushed off to seek Clara, determined to divert her attention from this interloper. Clara, on the other hand, was bent on retaining Mr. Black by her side, and her chagrin could not be concealed when he, glad of the pretext offered by George's approach, bowed himself away and walked across the room to Maude.

Ten minutes after, when George, mercilessly snubbed by Clara, disconsolately sought his betrothed, his smarting vanity needing the balm of her unwavering devotion, he found her talking gaily with Mr. Black, who made no effort to conceal his admiration of her society. With easy grace she introduced the two gentlemen, who bowed stiffly to each other, then resumed her conversation, which consisted of old reminiscences in which George had no share; therefore he could take no part in their talk.

In one moment he had forgotten all about Clara and his petty annoyance on her account, while a pang of real jealousy seized his heart. For the first time in his knowledge of her he saw Maude entirely engrossed with another man, that man a former suitor, and his experience was not a pleasant one. He stood beside her for some time, waiting for a word or look; but she had seemingly forgotten his very existence. By and by he quietly touched her hand.

"Will you give me your card, Maude?" he asked, as she looked around.

"Certainly," she smilingly answered; "but I am afraid all the dances are gone."

He looked at it without a word; as she had said, there was not one dance left.

"I told you when we entered the room that you had better secure as many as you desired," she said, in answer to his look of reproach. And he, remembering his indifference, could say nothing.

That was the most miserable evening George Campbell ever spent. Maude, in the gayest of spirits, was so absorbed by Stephen Black that he had no opportunity to exchange more than half a dozen words with her during the entire evening. Nor was he the only sufferer; Clara Vaughan, always on the lookout for fresh conquests, had determined to secure Stephen's attention, and was made absolutely furious by his devotion to Maude. She could not retain him by her side for three consecutive minutes; her blandishments fell powerless on this man of the world, who knew every phase of a coquette's art, and thought Clara rather a clumsy work-woman, though she did very well for a village girl. Maude's simple frankness and absence of self-consciousness suited him far better, and he remained by her side as much as possible.

But Clara had determined upon one grand effort, and late in the evening proceeded to make it.

Mr. Black and Maude were still laughing and talking together in a corner of the ball-room. Near by stood George Campbell, his face dark with anger, when Clara came tripping toward him, her face wreathed with artificial smiles.

"Oh, Mr. Campbell!" she cried, "I am in such a quandary! Uncle and aunt have gone home without me, and I have no escort; and it is so late!"

She paused and looked appealingly—not at George, but Stephen, fully expecting that he would offer to do escort duty. But he seemed blind and deaf to all but his companion, and George was forced to respond.

"I shall be glad to see you to your home, Miss Clara, if Miss Arthur will wait here until my return," he said, slowly and reluctantly.

At this moment Stephen suddenly recovered sight and hearing.

"Allow me to relieve you of the care of Miss Arthur," he courteously said, turning to George. "I have a carriage below, and shall be delighted to take her home."

Before the irate lover could respond, Maude spoke.

"Thank you, Mr. Black; that will adjust matters nicely," she said, with a bright smile. "You need give yourself no concern on my account, Mr. Campbell, but attend to Clara, if you please."

What could George say? His face grew darker than before as he stammered out something about being "glad to oblige all parties," then offered his arm to the no less discomfited Clara, and strode rapidly away. And it is quite certain that the little coquette never had a less entertaining escort than young Campbell was that night.

An hour later, Maude stood on the steps of her house, bidding Stephen Black good night.

"And may I call to take you to ride to-morrow?" he said, on parting.

"Yes, I shall be delighted to go," said Maude; and then Mr. Black sprang into his carriage and drove rapidly away.

Maude turned to enter the house, when a well-known voice arrested her.

"Maude—one moment—I must speak to you."

A gleam of amusement crossed the girl's arch face as she turned to confront her lover. Not that there was anything calculated to create amusement in the young man's appearance, for he was absolutely white with passion and jealousy.

"Why, George! is that you?" asked Maude, in innocent surprise. "Where is Clara?"

"Confound Clara!" he exclaimed, too much in earnest to appear ridiculous. "If it had not been for her—but never mind that. Maude, are you going out to ride with that fellow to-morrow?"

"Certainly I am," she answered. "Why not?"

"Because I forbid it!" he answered hotly.

"My dear boy, you have as yet no right to forbid me to do anything," was the lofty response.

George ground his teeth together in impotent rage. He felt that it would not do to take too high a hand with the girl in her present mood.

"I think," added Maude, as he remained silent, "that you have forgotten our agreement of last night. If you remember—"

"I remember nothing except that I was a fool, Maude!" burst out George, seizing her hand and holding it tight. "My darling, I have suffered so much to-night that I can understand how unfairly I treated you when I flirted with that artful little coquette—"

"My dear George," said Maude, solemnly, "I am surprised to see that you dislike Miss Vaughan. In my opinion she is a sweet girl, without—"

"Ah, Maudie, show me some mercy!" begged George, encouraged by the sly mischief in the girl's eyes to carry the hand he held to his lips. "I have behaved like an unmitigated idiot, and don't deserve forgiveness; but you'll not be cruel to me, will you, dear?"

For answer, Maude extended to him her other hand.

"Yes, George, I forgive you," she said, meeting his ardent gaze with her frank, truthful eyes. "But you must let me accept Stephen's invitation for to-morrow."

"No, no, Maude—I cannot consent to that."

"Not if I tell you that he is my cousin's husband, and has been for the last two years, you dear, jealous simpleton? Oh, Georgie, I've only been giving you a lesson that you needed, and Stephen helped me with it. Don't you think we succeeded?"

And George, now radiantly happy again, admitted that they had.

Well, the lesson cured him. From that time there was not a more devoted lover in the world than George Campbell.

ABOLISH THE USE OF LIQUORS.

They deprive men of their reason for the time being.

They destroy men of the greatest intellectual strength.

They foster and encourage every species of immorality.

They bar the progress of civilization and religion.

They destroy the peace and happiness of tens of thousands of families.

They reduce many virtuous wives and children to poverty.

They cause many thousands of murders.

They prevent all reformation of character.

The millions of porperty expended are lost.

They cause the majority of the cases of insanity.

They destroy both the body and the soul.

They burden sober people with millions for the support of paupers.

They cause immense expenditures to prevent crime.

They cost sober people immense sums in charity.

They burden the country with immense taxation.

Drunkards want the opportunity removed.

Sober people want the nuisance removed.

Tax payers want the burden removed.

Prohibition would save thousands now falling.

The sale exposes our families to destruction.

The sale exposes our persons to insult.

The sale upholds the vicious and idle at the expense of the industrious and virtuous.

It takes the sober man's earnings to support the drunkard.

It subjects numberless wives to untold sufferings.

It is contrary to the Bible.

It is contrary to common sense.

We have a right to rid ourselves of the burden.

A LONG LIFE.—If, therefore, you wish for a clear mind, strong muscles, and quiet nerves, and long life and power prolonged into old age, permit me to say, although I am not giving a temperance lecture: Avoid all drinks but water, and mild infusions of that fluid; shun tobacco and opium, and everything else that disturbs the normal state of the system; rely upon nutritious food and mild dilutant drinks, of which water is the basis, and you will need nothing beyond these things, except rest and due moral regulation of all your powers, to give you long, happy, and useful lives, and a serene evening at the close.—Professor Silman.

Voices of the Night.

"It was late last night when you retired!"
"Yes, papa," I said, with a yawn
Behind my fan; "for the horrid man
He just talked on and on.
The more I hinted the more he stayed;
I knew you were wakeful, too,
And I told him so; but he would not go—
And what could a poor girl do?"

"It was very late when you retired!"
"Yes, papa," I frankly said;
"For the man, you see, just talked to me,
Though I yawned till my eyes were red,
And I went so far, when the clock struck twelve,
As to count the strokes through;
But—the stupid!—he just wouldn't see—
And what could a poor girl do?"

"It was worse than late when you retired!"
"Why, I tell you, pa," I cried,
"If I hinted once to the tiresome dunce,
'Twas a hundred times beside!
Why, I even said you'd been in bed
For at least five hours I know:
But he tipped his chair, and still sat there—
So what could a poor girl do?"

"Well, the jeemses gosh! was you up all night?"
"Why, papa," I humbly plead,
"Don't thunder so! there's a man below;
And he's sent you his card, and said
That the reason why he stayed all night
Was, that he wanted to see you, too,
That he might ask for the hand I gave—
For what could a poor girl do?"

PURCHASABLE HEALTH.

It is often said, when a rich man dies, that all the money in the world cannot purchase the prolongation of life. It is often said, too, when a rich man's health breaks down, that money will not purchase health. As general propositions, however, both these statements are unsound. When expended at the right time and in the right way, money will purchase health and the prolongation of life. Money will not purchase peaches out of season, but money will purchase peaches when they are in the market. Money will not purchase health out of season, but health is to be had for money, under the proper conditions. When a machine is actually worn out, it is beyond the reach of repairs. Nothing will do but complete renewal. So, when a man is worn out, money will not renew him, but there are always times in his life when, by a proper expenditure of money and of time, which is its equivalent, he can buy health and the prolongation of life.

There are thousands of men in New York City, and in every great city, who are perfectly aware that they are bankrupting themselves in health—that they are selling their health for money. The time will surely come, at last, when they will be willing to pay all this money back for the health they have parted with, but it will be too late. The object of this article is to induce these men, if possible, to buy health while it is in the market, and not to sell it under any consideration. Col. Thomas Scott carried his burden so long that the four millions he had won had no power to bring back the health he had parted with; but there were undoubtedly times in his life when, by the proper expenditure of money and of time, he could have bought health enough to last him a brace of decades longer, and to enable him to double the number of his millions for his heirs. A man crowds his powers through a series of years of excessive labor, and some day drops with paralysis, and from that day forward he becomes a powerless child, to be led kindly and carefully to the grave. The increase of this disease is undoubtedly the result of the increase of unwisely conducted labor. Money can do nothing for it when it befalls a man, but can do everything to prevent it. "Nervous prostration" has become a too familiar phrase in these latter years. Money cannot restore a shattered nervous system, but, properly expended, at the proper time, it will prevent it, which is a great deal better.

There are two plans of life, by either of which money will buy health and prolong a comfortable existence. The first is, the setting aside of a part of every day for recreation. So far as this can be done, it ought to be done, but there seem to be some peculiarities in our American life that forbid it. Competition in business is cruelly sharp, and most men feel obliged to devote themselves to it, when they are in it at all, from morning until night. The sleeping hours are the only ones which give them release from active care. Now business, followed in this way, from year's end to year's end, is just as certain to ruin health and shorten life as the recurrence of seed-time and harvest is sure. The alternative of daily recreation is a yearly period of rest. There are always slack seasons in business, and these every business man should avail himself of for rest and recreation. It is in these seasons that there is health in the market, to be bought for money. Two weeks of leisure are not enough for a man who works like a dog all the rest of the year. Two months are never too much, and there is not a slave of Wall Street who would not only win health and save life by taking these two months of leisure every year, and enjoying them, but he would, in the end, make money by it. Suppose, however, he loses money by it; he wins that for which he will sometime be willing to give money, when money will not buy it. When a man gives health for money, he makes the poorest investment of his life. When he gives money for health, he makes, from every worldly point of view, the best.

There is a hallucination, cherished by a great multitude, that they must be constantly in their own business, or it cannot possibly go on prosperously. Some of these men are so unfortunately organized that they cannot believe that anybody living can do their work as well as they can do it. It takes an enormous self-conceit to come to such a conclusion as this, and there is a great misfortune in it. Of course, these men are never able to leave their work for a moment in other hands, and so they become the bond slaves of their own mistake. Now there is nothing in which a great business man shows his greatness so signally as in his ability to find men to do his work—to find competent instruments to execute his purposes. The greatest business man is always a man of comparative leisure. His own work is always deliberately done. It is, as a rule, the small man who never gets a moment, and who never can find a pair of hands as good as his own. If a man cannot leave his business, or thinks he cannot, he shows that he lacks the highest grade of business capacity.

The leisure of Newport aud Long Branch and Saratoga, with its social excitements and attractions, is not that certainly which buys health in the cheapest market. Stillness, rest, freedom of action and of dress in the open air, distance from the marts of trade—these pay best; and, when these are properly and regularly enjoyed, the money that they cost buys health and the prolongation of life. Health and a reasonably long life can, as a rule, be bought by time and money, if men will take them in their season. Money avails nothing to a wornout man, but to a man slowly wearing out it avails everything, when properly used. Time and money will buy health. Let every business man mark our words, and avail himself of the merchandise when it is in the market.—"Topics of the Time," Midsummer Scribner.

LANGUAGE OF THE POSTAGE STAMP.

Some ingenious persons have given a meaning to the location of a postage stamp on a letter. For example, they say that when a stamp is inverted on the right hand upper corner it means that the person written to is to write no more. If the stamp be placed on the left hand upper corner and inverted, then the writer declares his affection for the receiver of the letter. When the stamp is in the center at the top, it signifies an affirmative answer to a question, or the question, as the case may be; and when it is at the bottom, or opposite this, it is a negative. Should the stamp be on the right hand corner, at a right angle, it asks the question if the receiver of the letter loves the sender; while in the left hand it means that the writer hates the other. There is a shade of difference between desiring one's acquaintance and friendship, for example: The stamp at the upper corner on the right expresses the former, and on the lower left-hand corner means the latter. The learned in this language request their correspondents to accept their love by placing the stamp on a line with the surname, and the response is made, if the party addressed be engaged, by placing the stamp in the same place but reversing it. The writer may wish to say farewell to his sweetheart, or vice versa, and does so by placing the stamp straight up and down in the left-hand corner. And so on to the end of the chapter.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

CHOOSING YOUR ASSOCIATES.

One of the most endearing connections with this life is to know that we have friends whom we have tried and can trust. Such friends are very scarce, and, perhaps, rarer still are those people who know or are capable of judging when they have such friends. Our characters are formed for good or bad from the company we keep. Confidence in our power to refrain from the vices of others too often inveigles us into the risk of mingling with associates whom we know to be our inferiors both mentally and morally. The daily influence of such company will bind us to what we know to be wrong, and we are unconsciously led into acting in such a manner as we would have formerly condemned.

In forming friendships avoid these lower types, and let your mode of living be directed by comparing your daily actions with the standard of what you conscientiously consider morally right. Beware of the two-faced man. A slur coming from one that is supposed to be your friend carries with it more destruction than many things equally untruthful from every known enemy you have. You had better make such men your outright enemies rather than have them continue as your apparent friends. Simply ignore them and waive all combativeness with them; that is, so far as your intuitively revengeful nature will allow.

ONE-SIDED JUSTICE.—The story of the Prodigal son is a good one, but there ought to be beside it a companion picture showing the return and the treatment of the prodigal daughter. To be forgiven is good for anybody, and all of the fatted calves and warm welcomes should not be kept for the erring young men. It is time that we recognized the fact that if it were not for our prodigal sons there would be no prodigal daughters, and that it is outrageously unjust to bestow our caresses upon one and our curses upon the other.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 13, 1881.

We do not hear much about that $250,000 Garfield fund lately, and it is just as well. President Garfield would in all probability have declined to accept it.

Editor Adams of Westfield proposes to take a needed vacation by suspending the publication of his paper for a few weeks. Lucky man. Queen Victoria went back on her sex last week, by influencing the International Medical Congress in London to exclude female physicians from its meetings. At least, that is the story told about her, and none of the correspondents have been able to interview her, to give her version of the matter. She is hardly fair, though, for if one woman may rule a nation, another may with equal propriety give the nation its physic.

It has been rumored that Postmaster General James contemplated resigning, to accept the presidency of a trust company in New York, but the story is denied by Mr. James, and it is certainly to be hoped that he has no thoughts of leaving the post where he has already accomplished so much in the way of economy and honesty, and where undoubtedly there is still room for much more to be done in the same direction. Mr. James is emphatically the right man in the right place.

Hartmann, the Russian nihilist, became so alarmed at the newspaper talk of giving him up if the Russian government asked for him, that he has precipitately "lit out" for Canada. A New York lawyer who informed Hartmann that he would be safe here, wrote to Secretary Blaine asking an approval of his opinion, but received a sharp answer pointing out the unreasonableness of his request, and telling him that the State Department was not in the habit of giving advance decisions on hypothetical cases. If Hartmann will only keep sufficiently scared to remain out of the country, nobody will complain.

A Meeting of railroad managers was held in New York Wednesday, and the war in freight rates will end this week, a tariff being agreed upon to last five years. Nothing was done about passenger rates, however, and the roads are still doing a heavy business at the low prices which have prevailed for a few weeks, and are likely to continue these rates for the present. The Grand Trunk is having a rush of travel between Chicago and Boston at its $5 rate either way, but the other roads profess to have all the patronage they care for, and have not attempted to compete with it on eastern rates. The roads west of Chicago are just catching the fever, and are cutting rates to Kansas City and other points.

Judge James D. Colt of the Massachusetts supreme court committed suicide in his office at Pittsfield Tuesday evening, by shooting himself through the head. For some time he had been in poor health, and was very much depressed mentally. He attempted to drown himself recently at Nantucket, but was thought to be slowly recovering from his melancholy, and when he left home, in the middle of the afternoon, seemed to be in his usual health. Judge Colt was born in 1816 at Pittsfield, where he has spent the most part of his life. He was appointed to the supreme bench in 1865, but resigned the following year on account of his health, which travel soon restored. In 1868 he was reappointed, and continued in the position until his death, discharging its duties with honor to himself, to the bench and to the State.

Another operation was performed upon President Garfield Monday morning. He was in excellent condition and feeling well, but for a day or two there had been increased fever and a higher temperature, and it was found that the process of granulation had gone on so far that a drainage tube of the size heretofore used could no longer be passed along the track of the ball between the ribs, the orifice being partially closed, and the ribs preventing the pushing aside of the flesh so that the tube could be introduced. The consequence was that the pus formed rather faster than it could escape. A new opening was therefore made by Dr. Agnew, below the last rib, into the track of the wound, the President being put under the influence of ether. The operation was successful, and the patient bore it and the etherization extremely well. The new opening gives a more direct canal for the discharge of pus, and it can be kept open easily. The discharge is now free and healthy, and there is no likelihood of another accumulation of pus. The President wrote his name Tuesday in a firm and natural hand, and on Wednesday signed an important public document. The old wound made by the bullet has entirely healed, and the President now seems to be doing finely in every way.

Samuel D. Shaw has some fine tobacco in his garden at Palmer Center, on land which has not been manured for two years. The only fertilizing material he uses is leaf mold, from his farm in Monson.

Rev. S. G. Smith, of Providence, R. I., a former pastor of the Baptist church in this place, preached in the First Baptist church at Springfield last Sunday, and on Monday called on a few of his old parishioners in Palmer.

A couple of drunken fellows driving on North Main street the other evening ran into a carriage containing a gentleman and lady from Monson, upsetting and smashing the carriage, but fortunately not injuring its occupants much.

One hundred and twenty-nine dog licenses have now been issued, this being about 25 more than the number of dogs reported by the assessors, and 17 short of the whole number licensed last year. A few more dog owners are still to be heard from.

The iron money box taken from Hitchcock's safe on the night of the recent burglary was found last Sunday in a field near the Ware River Railroad track, west of the village, together with a small jimmy, with which it had been broken open and the money removed. The papers and checks were left inside, and were returned to Mr. Hitchcock.

Visitors to Springfield are somewhat startled by the following sign in the depot: "Beware of Pickpockets Spiritualists' and Liberalists' Campmeeting at Lake Pleasant." They come to the conclusion that the railroad folks are becoming unusually strict in their religious ideas, or else the bill poster is very careless in the arrangement of his goods.

No new developments were brought to light regarding the Wilbraham murder, at the inquest in Springfield last week Friday, and Moynihan was returned to jail, though the order of commitment was postponed a week to allow his brother to do what he can to secure his removal to an asylum. This probably cannot be done, however, until he has had his trial.

Travel is very heavy now on the railroads, the usual heavy summer travel being still further increased by the large number of people who are availing themselves of the low rates to go West. The Boston & Albany road is obliged to put two locomotives on many of its trains, the afternoon express from the west being an especially heavy train now-a-days.

The burglar recently shot at South Windham, Ct., has been recognized as Ned Lyons, a noted cracksman well known to the New York and Boston police. He is still living, and will very likely recover. It is not certainly known that he was concerned in the late burglaries in this place, but he had just the tools for doing the work, and there is little doubt that he was the one who broke into the safe in Hitchcock's drug store.

A concrete walk has been laid in front of the bank block on Church street this week, and a substantial stone walk put in across the driveway leading to the bakery. S. Ellis is setting curbing in front of his residence on Park street, and will have a concrete walk laid in a few days, while some other residents of the same street are thinking of continuing the good work in front of their places. Let it go right along. The more of such walks we have the better.

A man from Thorndike was run into by one of our young bicyclists last Saturday evening as he was driving his machine rapidly along the sidewalk on Main street in the darkness, and was knocked down, receiving a bad gash on the nose, which bled copiously. The practice of rapid bicycle riding on the sidewalks, even in broad daylight, cannot be too severely reprehended, to say nothing of the increased danger when it is done in the darkness, and it is felt by many that the machines should be kept off the sidewalks altogether.

H. A. Northrop, tax collector, will be at the counting room in Three Rivers next Monday from 1 to 6 p. m.; on Tuesday, at the counting room in Thorndike from 8 a. m. to 12 m., Murdock's store, Bondville, from 1 to 3 p. m., the counting room, Duckville, from 3 to 6 p. m.; and at the town clerk's office in this village on Friday, from 4 to 9 p. m, and on Saturday from 1 to 9 p. m., to receive taxes. All who wish to avail themselves of the 5 per cent discount will have an opportunity to see Mr. Northrop at any of the above places.

The Wide Awakes of this village beat the Wales nine in the game of ball at Wales, last Saturday, and by a singular coincidence the score was the same as when the Wales boys defeated the Palmer nine at this place three weeks ago—18 to 2. The Wales people were out en masse, and were repaid by witnessing an excellent game. Each club has won one game, and the decisive one will be played on the park this afternoon, immediately after the horse trot. The Wide Awakes are now in good condition, and are anxious to hear from the Hampdens of Hampden, Stars of Springfield, and Rockets of Jenksville.

The cornet band went to Wilbraham Wednesday by stage, to play at the Sunday school picnic, and on their return in the afternoon treated our citizens to a few pieces. The Journal takes off its hat in acknowledgement of the compliment of a serenade. By the way, do our citizens know that Palmer never before had a band which could approach this one in the excellence of its playing? It's a fact, and it ought to be appreciated. One of our musical ladies exclaimed, Wednesday, as she listened to the music, "Why, what band is that?" never once mistrusting that anything short of a city band could play so well.

Another cheap excursion to Mount Toby and Lake Pleasant is advertised by the New London Northern Railroad for to-day. A special train leaves New London at 6.30 a. m. and Palmer at 9.05, arriving at Mount Toby at 10.18, and at the Lake at 10.30. Tickets for the round trip, to either point, are sold at Palmer for 75 cents, Monson 80, Three Rivers 75, Barrett's 70, Belchertown 60 cents, and are good to go only on the special train, but excursionists can return today or Monday. This excursion will give persons who desire to stay at the Lake over Sunday an opportunity to witness the illumination and fireworks this evening.

Engineer Adams of the Ware River Railroad saw a singular spectacle at Ware the other day. His engine stopped over a cattle guard as he hauled up at the station, and looking down he saw that the guard was fairly alive with small frogs. He stepped out, and while waiting counted nearly 2000 of them, and there were undoubtedly from 2500 to 3000 of the little fellows in there, while the sides of the track for quite a distance were literally covered with them, all going in the direction of the guard. It is thought that they were possibly sent out as an illustration, on a small scale, of one of the plagues in Egypt, which the Sunday schools have been studying about.

This week has been as charmingly comfortable as last week was disagreeably hot, and we all ought to be duly thankful to the weather clerk. Vennor now says that the new comet is going to make a rumpus in our atmosphere, and that we may expect a great change in the weather about the time it is in its perihelion, when it will be also nearest the earth. This will occur on the 20th of the present month. During the time from the 15th to the 20th, instead of being burned up, as we might expect, he says we shall be nearly frozen by frosts and strong, cold northerly winds. Forewarned is forearmed, and taking Vennor at his average value we may therefore prepare for another scorching next week.

Two of our esteemed citizens took the morning train for New London the other day, bent on a day's enjoyment of the surf and fishing at Block Island. At New London they walked complacently on to the boat and gave themselves up to the pleasures of the sail, all unconscious of the fact that the boat was going straight to Dinah's Rock, and no further, having been chartered for the day by a party of excursionists. When they discovered the box they were in their remarks are understood to have been sufficiently emphatic for the occasion, and though they stood it as philosophically as possible, it is believed that the cloud of disappointment was so heavy that one of them could not look through the camera nor the other through a magnifying glass with his customary vigor for a day or two thereafter.

Lawyer Barker seems to have become weary of his quarters in Sheriff Sanderson's State street retreat at Springfield, and last Saturday night he and two other prisoners, Fred Burrell and James Bradley, struck out for themselves. Barker was allowed some privileges, as is customary with bad debtors, and the other two men were acting as "hall men." About 9 o'clock Saturday evening it was found that the three were not in their cells, nor in the building, having made their escape through a garret window, cutting into the sash with tools from the workshop, prying out a bar, and letting themselves to the ground with the bed clothes from Barker's bed. Men were promptly started in search of the fugitives, and the police in neighboring towns were notified. Barker was heard from Sunday at Thompsonville, and soon after the Hartford police telegraphed that they had arrested him. He was returned to his old quarters that afternoon, but nothing has been heard from his companions. Burwell was sentenced last December to 18 months for larceny, and Bradley had about one year more to serve on a three years' sentence for burglary.

The experience of a young gentleman at Palmer, Monday, serves as a warning to passengers on the rear car of a long train. The 2 p. m. train from Albany and New York arrived at the Palmer depot with two engines and eight cars attached. The gentleman referred to became deeply engaged in conversation with an Amherst lady on or near the platform of the rear car, which had been "cut off" and remained standing on the track as the train moved rapidly away from the depot. On seeing his situation, becoming almost frantic at his vain endeavors to stop the train, he learned, perhaps for the first time, that an express train on the Boston & Albany railroad was the hardest kind of a train to signal. All sorts of ejaculations were heard, such as "Can't that train be stopped?" "Can't you take me in a team to the next station and catch the train?" "I must go on that train for my grandmother is on it and what will she do?" etc. The young man was assured by the affable conductor of the N. L. N. railroad that he would be obliged to wait about two hours in Palmer and in the meantime he could telegraph his grandmother where to go when she reached Boston. Doubtless he resolved in his mind never to get so interested in conversation with a young lady again, while standing on a car platform.—Amherst Record.

The new brass foundry of the Chapman Valve Mfg. Co. is nearly completed. The boys are to be on their good behavior for the present with a view of inducing people to visit the new building to inspect its convenience and neatness.

Emeline Ratelle, a French girl about 20 years old, employed in the card-room of the No. 2 mill, was combing her hair in the mill Wednesday morning, when it caught in a fly frame, throwing her to the floor and tearing the scalp from one side of her head and a small piece from the other side, and cutting a serious gash in the back of her head. Dr. Gilineau was summoned and dressed the wounds. The girl has worked on the frame for the past nine years.

The two correspondents of the two leading Springfield dailies, who present at times pictures of friendship, swapping items on the street and other places, are more warmly united than ever now, both having experienced the pleasure of being soundly "damned" by two citizens for some facts they wrote up some time ago for publication concerning them, which they for obvious reasons much preferred to keep from the public. The correspondents are quietly smiling over it, and realize that more would like to "go and do likewise," but are bashful.

WARE AND VICINITY.

At a meeting of the Young Men's Library Association Thursday evening it was voted to publish a brief history of the library building and the dedicatory exercises in pamphlet form, so that it might be preserved.

The house belonging to Owen Deery, on Williams St., took fire from the chimney Tuesday afternoon. Some of the furniture was removed and the fire was supposed to be extinguished, so that the furniture was returned, but some time after the flames broke out again on the roof. The engine company was promptly on hand, as usual, having a stream of water on the building in about 12 minutes from the time the alarm was given. Water was obtained from the cistern on South street, which nearly paid for itself at this one fire. The damage was slight, the fire only burning a part of the roof, more damage being done by the water than by the flames. The house was insured for $300 or $400. The loss is not settled yet.

Daniel Goodnow, a Boston cotton merchant, has been handsomely swindled out of some $30,000 worth of cotton, a lot of wine, and a vessel. Two smooth-tongued fellows bought the cotton of him ostensibly for the Pepperell Mfg. Co. of Biddeford, Me., and induced him to buy a vessel to ship it in, and provision it for a long voyage. They sailed off with flying colors a month ago, and Goodnow mistrusted nothing wrong until his bills were refused payment by the company when presented.

Capt. Cook of Brownville, O., an old Union soldier, slapped a man's mouth for saying he was glad Garfield was shot. He had to pay $32 for the assault, but the Cincinnati Commercial called for penny subscriptions to pay the fine, and received the necessary amount before noon, while some 25,000 people in all have sent in their pennies.

William Gleason of Worcester stole his mother's bank book the other day, and presented it at the bank with a forged order for $1080, which was paid, and he went to Boston to spend the proceeds in riotous living. He was arrested Monday, and $747 of the money was recovered, the balance having been spent.

A curiosity in damage suits is that brought by the children of Robert E. Little of Louisville against their uncle, James H. Arnold, claiming $50,000 for the murder of their father two years ago. Arnold was tried for the murder, but acquitted. The children are all under ten years of age.

The Main Exhibition Building at Philadelphia was sold Tuesday afternoon to W. C. Bullitt for $97,000. It was rumored that the real purchaser was the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The building originally cost $1,600,000. The structure is 1830 feet long and 464 feet wide.

Spotted Tail, the noted Sioux chief, was killed last Saturday by Crow Dog, who was jealous of his prominence and influence.

MISHAPS AND MISDEEDS.

East Longmeadow had another murder early last Saturday morning, John Otis, an unmarried painter, 30 years old, being found dead in the barnyard of James Smith, his face and head badly cut and bruised by a shovel. Turpin Jenks, Smith's brother-in-law, an old man of 77 years, has been arrested as the murderer. Both the men had been drinking, and were together the evening before the tragedy. Jenks denies all knowledge of the crime, but Otis's father and sister, who were looking after John, say that Jenks was standing in the barnyard with a shovel in his hand, but a few feet from where they found the murdered man. Jenks is an inoffensive-looking old man, but is said to be very violent when in liquor. He was brought before the Springfield police court Monday, but his case was continued until yesterday forenoon.

The body of Jennie Cramer, 20 years old, was found in the water off West Haven, Ct., shore last Saturday. She had been missing for two days, and a physician's examination showed that she had been seduced, and was dead before being put in the water.

TEST FOR COLOR BLINDNESS.—An interesting novelty in colored cards entitled "A Test for Color Blindness," has just been issued by Weeks & Potter, Boston, for gratuitous distribution. This week every druggist and country merchant in New England recorded by the Business Address Co. will receive a supply, which will, no doubt, be eagerly demanded by those of their customers interested in color blindness, or in search of decided novelties in fancy cards. If any are unable to obtain them of their local dealer, they have only to enclose a three-cent stamp to Messrs. Weeks & Potter, who will promptly forward them.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

SPURTS of disgusting mucous, snuffles, deafness, crackling sensations in the head, fœtid breath, nasal twang and tickling in the throat, are signs of Catarrh. DR. WEI DE MEYER'S recent discovery of a CONSTITUTIONAL treatment by ABSORPTION is the only remedy which has ever yet really cured this terrible malady. Wei De Meyer's CATARRH CURE is sold by druggists, or DELIVERED by D. B. DEWEY & CO., 46 Dey St., N. Y., at $1 a package. Descriptive pamphlets mailed free. a

THE PRESIDENT'S WOUND

A PARALLEL CASE IN ARMY LIFE.

BY DR. DAVID KENNEDY, ONE OF THE SURGEONS ON DUTY AT THE U. S. A. GENERAL HOSPITAL, WEST PHILADELPHIA, now of RONDOUT, N. Y.

In the issue of the Philadelphia Record of the 27th of July was published an article relating to the case of Capt. William Palmer, now Quartermaster Second Brigade New Jersey State National Guard, who was wounded at the battle of Mossy Creek, East Tennessee, in winter of 1863. In that article the striking resemblance of the case to tha of President Garfield, in many particulars, was pointed out, the authority for the statement being the brave captain himself. A still better authority is Dr. David Kennedy, then surgeon U. S. General Hospital, West Phildelphia, who had charge of the case, and performed the operation of removing the detached bone, and finally extracted the bullet, the entire treatment being perfectly successful—Capt. Palmer living to this day in the bloom of health. Dr. Kennedy does not hesitate to say that many of his patients, both in military and civil practice, owe their lives to the wonderful healing and strengthening powers of his medicine called "Favorite Remedy." The doctor is in possession of an autograph letter from Capt. Palmer, attesting his indebtedness for his present good health to this medicine—"Favorite Remedy"—which he says has doubled the obligation which he felt to the doctor for the treatment of the captain's terrible wound.

While Dr. Kennedy is engaged in the introduction of "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession at Rondout, N. Y., and performs all the minor as well as capital operations of surgery. Address as above. 4w21

Work.

Anywhere, everywhere, something to do!
Something for me, and something for you!
Work for the hand and work for the head,
Work for the winning of daily bread.

Never a day dawns but brings its own task;
What only for you and for me is to ask;
Some are chosen to sweep and others to spin,
Some to sow, some to reap, while some gather in.

Some must build ships, and some guide the helm,
Some fashion our garments, and some rule the stream;
Some must fell forests, some the broad field must till,
Some paint and some carve, some grind at the mill.

Some must buy and some sell, some traverse the sea,
Some God's preachers and judges and singers must be;
Let each to his taskwork list for the call—
Christ worked, and the Father works high over all.

Some work in the shadow and some in the sun,
Some in joy, some in pain; but the Master in one
Calling all to their tasks, portioning each his reward,
As he ceases his toil at the word of his Lord.

Work while the day lasts, work with a will;
Soon will the night come, when all will be still;
Sweet will it be, at the set of the sun,
To hear from the Master the welcome, well done.

A FEW LITTLE THINGS.

A punctual man's watch was one day just one minute slow, and so he was just thirty seconds late at the depot. That half minute made a difference of ten hours with him, and in the loss of those ten hours he failed to make an expected trade, which would have brought him a gain of ten thousand dollars.

A young man, a stranger in a community, went to a church and there was no one to show him a seat. After hanging around the doors awhile he ventured in and took such a seat as he could find. In name that was the church of his preference; his kindred in a distant State attended a church of that name, and this ought to have been his home. The next Sabbath he went to another church, and there he was cordially welcomed and pleasantly seated at once. In a few years that young man was a leading official member of the church that looked out for strangers.

A boy was once overpaid a penny by the clerk in making change. He was sharp enough to discover his surplus penny, but not honest enough to return it. That boy found his first long stopping place in prison. An honest penny is a fortune; one dishonest penny spoils a fortune and a character for a life.

It was only a word, just a monosyllable; but it was said at such a time and in such a way that it cut and hurt and made a wound so deep and bad that it did not heal for years, and then it left an ugly scar.

In a company there was a face, not remarkable for beauty, but expressive of character; purity, noble purpose, modesty and true affection were marked there. A stranger looked upon that face a few minutes and went forth inspired to high and holy endeavor. From that hour, from that look, a human life that had been likely to curse the world, became a doxology and a benediction.

EFFECT OF SUNSHINE.

From an acorn, weighing a few grains, a tree will grow for 100 years or more, not only throwing off many pounds of leaves every year, but itself weighing several tons. If an orange twig is put in a large box of earth, and that earth is weighed when the twig becomes a tree, bearing luscious fruit, there will be very nearly the same amount of earth. From careful experiments made by different scientific men, it is an ascertained fact that a very large part of the growth of a tree is derived from the sun, from the air, and from the water, and a very little from the earth; and notably all vegetation becomes sickly unless it is freely exposed to sunshine. Wood and coal are but condensed sunshine, which contains three important elements equally essential to both vegetation and animal life—magnesia, lime, and iron. It is the iron in the blood which gives it its sparkling red color and its strength. It is the lime in the bones which gives them the durability necessary to bodily vigor, while the magnesia is important to all of the tissues. Thus it is that the more persons are out of doors the more healthy and vigorous they are, and the longer they will live. Every human being ought to have an hour or two of sunshine at noon in winter and in early forenoon in summer.

Boy's composition after doing the menagerie: The rhinozerus lives in Ashur and you kant stick a pin in him 'cause his werskit is bilt of old stoves. When a rhinozerus is gointer be kild, you muz alwaze go up to him from before, soez he'll kno somethin of it, an' try an' make a plase for a bullet to git in. His noze is got a upper tooth that's got no bisniss whare it is, an' if a boy shud set down onter it, he better stay plugged up with the tooth, orels he'll be all one pore. I'd ruther be a pollywog if I was a rhinozerus, tho' I s'pose if I was I woodn't.

The Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis R. R. stipulate in their deeds conveying village property along the line of the Northern Wisconsin road that "no strong, spirituous, malt, ardent or intoxicating liquors shall ever be sold, manufactured, trafficked in, given away, or otherwise disposed of as a beverage," on pain of annulling the instrument and reverting the property thus used, contrary to the terms of conveyance, to the original owners.

Of the 2228 couples married during the last quarter in New York, 55 per cent of the men were of foreign birth; and 54 per cent of the women were natives. Of the 6832 children born during that period, only 1796 had Americans both for father and mother.

A horse is not known by his furniture, but quality; so men should be esteemed for virtue, not wealth.

A man is known by the company he keeps out of.

A SUPPOSITION.

"Now, if I was President," began Mr. Butterby the other morning, as he passed his cup over for a second cup of coffee, "If I was President of the United States—"

"Which you aren't, you know," broke in Mrs. B., in an argumental and confidential tone.

"And not likely to be," added Mrs. B's. mother, with a contemptuous toss of her head.

"No," assented Mr. B., pleasantly, "but I was just supposing the case—"

"Then suppose something in reason," retorted Mrs. B., snappishly. "You might as well suppose you was the man in the moon or the man in the iron mask or—"

"So I might, my dear, so I might," assented Mr. B., still pleasantly smiling, "but that has nothing to do with it. I was merely going to say that if I was the President of the United States, I'd—"

"My!" burst in Miss Gertrude, aged 18, "Wouldn't it be splendid if you was, pa? Just to think how those Wheedletop girls would change their tune when I met them, instead of throwing out insinuations about people who consider it Christian-like to turn their last season's silk dress, so that they may have more to give to charity! But they might turn green with envy before I would ever—"

"Yes, and wouldn't I warm it to Sammy Duggan, just," chirped in master Thomas, aged 12. "I'd go up to him an' smack him on the nose with a brick 'fore he knowed where he was, an' he dassent hit me back then, 'cos it 'ud be treason, an' they'd hang him, and I'd slide on the sidewalk an' shy snowballs at the p'leeceman, an' sass Miss Ferrule, an' play hookey every day when it didn't rain, an' I'd—"

"Yes," chimed in Mrs. B., catching the infection from her enthusiastic progeny, "and then I'd be the first lady in the land, let the next be who she would; and Governors' wives would beg to be introduced to me, and I'd have balls twice a week, and banquets every day, an'—"

"And I'd have the management of the White House, and run things," remarked Mrs. B's. mother, her eyes sparkling with the prospect.

"Not much you wouldn't," from Miss Gertrude; "not much if I keep my health and know myself, you wouldn't; not as long as I was the President's daughter and—"

"Yah!" ejaculatad master Tom, "I guess the President's son would be the biggest plum in that dish! Wouldn't I be the Prince of Whales then—say? What 'ud you know 'bout—"

"Shut up—all of you!" commanded Mrs. B. "I reckon the President's wife is the highest authority in the land! Anyhow, there'd be a dusty old time if anybody questioned it, and I bet you when the exercises were finished the survivors would not ask for any electoral commission to decide it over again! My! I'd like to see anybody—but by the way, Mr. Butterby, what was it you was going to say you would do if you was President of the United States?"

"Resign as soon as the Lord would let me," said Mr. Butterby, calmly but determinedly.

And then a meditative silence fell upon the family and remained there until the meeting arose.

The biggest snake story yet out is told by the Syracuse (N. Y.) Journal, as follows:—"Mrs. Van Auken, living near Lake George, was startled one day by the sight of a large rattlesnake making its appearance in her kitchen, where she was at work, and seizing her by the skirt, tried to pull her toward the door. Woman's curiosity at last overcoming her fear, she followed the snake down to the lake, where she was still more horrified to find her little daughter on the point of drowning. Seeing the little one fall into the water, it seems that the snake, with astonishing instinct, crawled to the house to give warning."

"It's hard, oh! it's hard, its hard!" sobbed Mrs. Insken. "It's too hard, too hard!"

"What's the matter?" demanded her husband, wild with anxiety.

"Oh! it's too hard! too hard! It is so hard!" moaned the despairing woman.

"What's hard? Speak out! What's the matter with you?"

"It's so hard, so hard to be poor!"

"Humph!" ejaculated the brute. "I find it darned easy."

In a recent lecture at Norwich, Ct., Rev. W. W. Colley, a returned missionary from Africa, stated that there was no barren Sahara, and that the whole country known on the maps as sterile and uninhabitable was fertile and densely populated. The wily Arabs started the lie, he explained, in order to keep out competition in the ivory traffic.

A dealer in game at Francisville, Ind, employs several men to shoot birds, and by a process of freezing keeps his game in good condition until there is a satisfactory demand for them. This spring it is estimated that he had 18,000 birds in his refrigerator.

"Bridget, I cannot allow you to receive your lover in the kitchen any longer." "It's very kind of you, ma'am, but he's almost too bashful to come into the parlor."

No matter how truthful a man may be through life, he is bound to lie at the point of death.

BE WISE AND HAPPY.—If you will stop all your extravagant and wrong notions in doctoring yourself and families with expensive doctors or humbug cure-alls, that do harm always, and use only nature's simple remedies for all your ailments—you will be wise, well and happy, and save great expense. The greatest remedy for this, the great wise and good will tell you, is Hop Bitters—rely on it. See another column.—Press.

An old lady writes us: "I am 65 years old and was feeble and nervous all the time, when I bought a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic. I have used little more than one bottle and feel as well as at 30, and am sure that hundreds need just such a medicine." See advertisement. a

SICK HEADACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

WE MEAN CURED, NOT MERELY RELIEVED,

AND CAN PROVE WHAT WE CLAIM!

There are no failures and no disappointments. If you are troubled with SICK HEADACHE you can be easily and quickly cured, as hundreds have been already. We shall be pleased to mail a sheet of testimonials to any interested.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

Also cure all forms of Biliousness, prevent Constipation and Dyspepsia, promote Digestion, relieve distress from too heavy eating, correct Disorders of the Stomach, Stimulate the Liver, and Regulate the Bowels. They do all this by taking just one little pill at a dose. They are purely vegetable, do not gripe or purge, and are as nearly perfect as it is possible for a pill to be. Price 25 cents, 5 for $1. Sold by druggists everywhere or sent by mail.

PROTECTION FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE,
INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE

PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use. If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Prepared only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

THE PUREST AND BEST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

A combination of HOPS, BUCHU, MANDRAKE and DANDELION, with all the best and most curative properties of all other Bitters, makes the greatest Blood Purifier, Liver Regulator, and Life and Health Restoring Agent on earth.

No disease can possibly long exist where Hop Bitters are used, so varied and perfect are their operations. THEY GIVE NEW LIFE AND VIGOR TO THE AGED AND INFIRM.

To all whose employments cause irregularity of the bowels or urinary organs, or who require an Appetizer Tonic and Mild Stimulant, Hop Bitters are invaluable, without intoxicating.

No matter what your feelings or symptoms are, what the disease or ailment is, use Hop Bitters. Don't wait until you are sick, but if you only feel bad or miserable, use them at once. It may save your life. It has saved hundreds.

$500 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help. Do not suffer or let your friends suffer, but use and urge them to use HOP BITTERS.

Remember, Hop Bitters is no vile, drugged, drunken nostrum, but the purest and best medicine ever made; the INVALIDS' FRIEND & HOPE," and no person or family should be without them.

D. I. C. is an absolute and irresistible cure for drunkenness, use of opium, tobacco and narcotics. All sold by druggists. Send for circulars.

HAVE SIGNED OR ENDORSED THE FOLLOWING REMARKABLE DOCUMENT:

Messrs. SEABURY & JOHNSON, Manufacturing Chemists, 21 Platt St., New York:

Gentlemen.—For the past few years we have sold various brands of Porous Plasters.—Physicians and the public prefer BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER to all others. We consider them one of the very few reliable household remedies worthy of confidence. They are superior to all other Porous Plasters or Liniments for external use.

BENSON'S CAPCINE PLASTER is a genuine Pharmaceutical product, of the highest order of merit, and so recognized by physicians and druggists.

When other remedies fail, get a Benson's Capcine Plaster.

You will be disappointed if you use cheap Plasters, Liniments, Pads or Electrical Magnetic toys. 4 2w5

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

NECESSITATING A SURGICAL OPERATION—LOVING MOTHER ATTEMPTS TO TAKE A PAIR OF SHEARS FROM HER CHILD.

PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle. 1m22

Too Much of a Lady.

When Eve in the garden was plucking the rose,
And enjoying the Eden walks shady,
I wonder if ever she turned up her nose,
And sighed, "I'm too much of a lady!
'Too much of a lady,' dear Adam, to work,
A helpmeet was made to be petted,
You keep things in order I really must shirk,
Though the fact, dear, is deeply regretted."

To-day she has daughters whose delicate hands
Are wholly unfitted for labor;
It almost fatigues them to flutter their fans,
When they languidly call on a neighbor.
Their mission on earth is to gossip and dress,
And live upon life's sweetest honey;
And they haven't a bother or trouble unless
Their masculine bank fails in money.

It isn't the loveliest thing, to be sure,
To dabble in cooking and dishes,
But never a home was kept tidy and pure
By dainty, æsthetical wishes.
I'm free to confess there is something in life
More attractive than putting a stitch in,
And many a weary, industrious wife
Isn't deeply in love with her kitchen.

But duty is duty, and dirt always dirt,
And only the lazy deny it,
Crotcheting is nicer than making a shirt,
But man never yet was clothed by it,
To sit in a parlor in indolent ease,
Till one grows all fragile and fady,
Or flounce through the street, silly gazers to please,
Is being too much of a lady.

Too much of a lady to darn up her hose,
Or govern her house with acumen;
Too much of a lady, wherever she goes,
To ever be much of a woman.
The muscles that God made are useless to her,
Except to be wrapped up in satin;
And as for her intellect—she would prefer
A bonnet to mastering Latin.

Too much of a lady to own a grand heart,
To be a true daughter or mother;
Too much of a lady to bear the brave part
That ne'er can be borne by another.
By fashion or birth too fine for this earth:
When it comes to the judgment's pay-day,
Though our Lord may delight in the lilies in white,
Will he smile on "Too much of a lady?"

DOCTORING THE APPLE TREE.

THE CHRONICLE OF AHPULBLOZM THE HUSBANDMAN.

Now it was in the year of the big apple yield in the land, and the heart of the farmer rejoiced within him.

For he said, "Of a verity there is no end to the apples; I will build me new cider presses and I will sell unto the dishonest dealer of the city the champagne that cometh from abroad that he may label it to suit himself and sell it to the unwary, that we may take great profit from the unrighteous young man who weareth Alaska diamonds and concealeth his hands in much cuff, and affecteth cheap champagne."

But it is written: "Ye shall play it low down on pagans of the city, and ye shall spoil the young man whose head is lighter than his pocketbook."

And his heart was glad, and he said he was joyful within him, and picked up his basket and made a joyful noise with his mouth as he got him unto his favorite apple tree.

But when he was come unto it the voice of his singing was hushed and his heart was filled with woe, and he was cast down and sad, even as a dog which asketh for a bone and receiveth a brick.

For it was that where there was one apple on the fruitful branches of his favorite tree, there were three boys; and they were town boys; and they were outside of all the apples there were, and they were looking for more.

And it was so that when they beheld the farmer they descended from the tree and got over the fence in great haste.

And they mocked the husbandman, and smote their palms together and danced up and down the road before him, and cast stones at his dog, and smote it, insomuch that the voice of its howling was heard even unto old Noah Kinsler's, as thou goest down by Cy. Haukes' blacksmith shop.

And the husbandman was wroth, and he cried aloud, "Would that I had ye in my hands that I might neck ye!"

And the lads laughed him to scorn and called aloud unto him, and mocked, and said one to another, "Oh, ain't he got the gaul?" And they entreated him that he would go into the house and cover him up, and that he would walk around the block and look for Christmas. And with a loud voice they besought him that "he would lie down and walk over himself."

And Ahpulblozm, the husbandman, trembled exceedingly in the fierceness of his rage, insomuch that he broke his basket on a stump and he lifted up his voice and conversed in swear words, so that the lads were not able to stand before him. And they fled down the road, but Ahpulblozm the husbandman pursued not after them, for he was heavy with much corn bread and fried pork, and his figure was even as the figure of a sperm whale, and he was not built to run after boys, who are light of foot; yea, swifter than arrows, and stronger than onions.

Now when Ahpulblozm the husbandman went into the house he held his peace, for this same thing had happened last year, and the year before that, and the one before that again.

And the husbandman said, "Next time I will fix 'em."

And when the Winter was come and gone, and the time of singing of birds was come again, Ahpulblozm, son of Harratatuthe the Clodhopper said nothing to nobody, but he spent much time with his favorite apple tree, and he pruned it and digged about it, and day by day he watered its roots.

And he compounded the water wherewith he watered it from the herbs of the apothecary, and from the roots of the field.

For he stirred into half a barrel of vinegar bitters ten pounds of quassia, two quarts of castor oil, half a peck of wormwood, a hatful of quinine, some tincture of rhubarb, one quart of tartar emetic, an armful of dogwood bark, half a dozen of "Indian turnips," a can of concentrated lye, one quart of vitriol, and three gallons of sod corn whisky, whereof if a man drink one drink of it he will straightway lie down and have a fit.

And he boiled it all in a great iron kettle, and he stirred it up with a hemlock stick, and sprinkled in salt and cayenne pepper, and a tub full of grated horse-radish.

And he arose early in the morning and watered his favorite apple tree with this mixture; and at the even time he neglected it not. And the tree grew and flourished, and it blossomed so that the leaves could not be seen.

But the bees which sought honey in its blossoms, after they had feasted, went back no more unto the hive, but went out and lived with the wasps and hornets, and made no more honey, but went and passed themselves off for yellow jackets and would sting a railroad tie, if so be it should look upon them.

And Ahpulblozm the husbandman noted these things, but he held his peace.

Only in the silent watches of the night, when he lay upon his bed, would he rub his palms together, and laugh under the bedclothes, and say softly, "Now, I have got 'em."

And his wife answered him, and said, "Of a verity thou hast got 'em, and thou hast got 'em bad, and of a surety unless thou shalt let up on it and quit drinking thou wilt die with 'em.

But she spake mockingly, for she thought he had the jim-jams.

But he laughed the more, and rebuked her, and bade her hold her peace. And he said:

"Go to, daughter of Butterpaddel, the dairyman, what dost thou know about war?"

And it was so that when the apples were ripe they were fairer to look upon than the other fruit of the field.

And Ahpulblozm, the son of Harratatuthe, commanded his family that they should not touch so much as one apple.

For he said, "It is a sacrifice to the immortal gods."

And when a fair Saturday morning was come, Ahpulblozm the husbandman tied up the dog at the house, and went by himself and lay down in the grass in the orchard.

For he said, "Of a verity I will give the boys a chance."

(For he wist there was no school of a Saturday.)

And the boys came betimes and they climbed gently over the fence and swarmed up the tree as of old.

And when they saw the fruit that it was fairer than any fruit of the field, they smacked their lips and rejoiced, and said one to another, "Oh, golly!" and alas, "Oh, I guess not!" and moreover, "Yum, yum!"

And it was so that when a boy had laid hold upon an apple and had eaten one bite of it, that he turned him round about and cried unto his fellow, and said, "Of a truth I am stabbed!"

But they thought he mocked them, and they said, "Go to, thou hast a devil."

And when another lad had bitten an apple, he was stricken with remorse and said unto his fellows, "Deliver me up while there is yet time, for I am the man who robbed the Manhatten bank!"

And they marveled greatly, but Ahpulblozm the husbandman stuffed the grass of the field into his mouth that he might not laugh.

And a third boy laid hold of an apple and bit it, and when he had crunched his bite only once he cried aloud, "Bury me close to the school house!" and he slid down the tree and lay in the clover and he twisted himself and wept.

And when yet another boy had plucked an apple and tasted it, he called unto those who were with him, "Help me home, for I have swallowed a whole Fourth of July!"

And even another boy bit into another apple and it was so that when he bit he let go all holds and fell upon his back in the clover, and gasped, "I pray thee let not the medical students carve up my body."

And when yet another lad had bitten an apple, he came down from the tree and lay down by the roadside and sought to die but could not.

And another lad took to himself a large bite, and he clumb down, and went away into a desert place, and laid down on the railroad track that the down express might come along and ripple over him.

And so it was that there were lads all around the orchard who were doubled up, and who feared to look upon each other's faces. And they ate sand, and prayed the immortal gods that the taste they had tasted might die with them, and not be visited upon their children's children.

And when night was come they got them home, but when meat was set before them they would not eat it.

For of a verity, they could not taste the difference between the taffy and dogfennel tea.

And so it was that after many days, when one of the lads should see an apple that he lay down and had a fit.

Ahpulblozm, the son of Harratatuthe, arose up out of the grass, and he communed with himself, and he said, "Ho, ho!"

And he took one of the apples which the lads had bitten, and he handed it to the sandy pig.

And it was so that when the sandy pig bit it, that he looked up into the face of Ahpulblozm, the son of Harratatuthe, and rebuked him with a reproachful expression.

And the sandy pig said, "Of a truth thou hast played it upon me pretty fine."

And he lit out and took to the woods, and he never was seen any more.

But the orchard of Ahpulblozm the son of Harratatuthe grew and flourished and bore fruit as it had never done before.

For there was no lad in all the towns and the country round about who would eat of its fruit.

And each year Ahpulblozm the son of Harratatuthe kept the cider presses going and made champagne for the market, and he waxed fat and was elected supervisor and had money to loan.—Burdette.

We talk of one hundred thousand drunkards dying annually, but have we any just conception of what that means? Did you ever stand and watch the passing regiments on some great day of parade, and did you not tire as you stood seeing the apparently never-ending ranks of the military as they marched? yet it is not probable that twenty thousand ever passed before you. Suppose these one hundred thousand poor drunkards should pass in procession before you on their way to the grave—what a strange, sad sight.—Hon. W. E. Dodge.

"How did you like the lecture?" "Oh, it was beautiful!" "What did he say?" "Oh, he said so many beautiful things." "Tell us some." "Oh, he said—he said—but I can't tell them to you as he said them." "Tell them as you understand them." "Well, he said—he said—oh, I can't!" "Tell us one thing he said." "Well, he said that the æsthetics of existence enable us to—to—oh, I can't!" "Tell us what you think he meant." "Oh, go along! Why didn't you go and hear him yourself?"

I am tired of hearing people say that they prefer to worship God in the fields in summer, by the side of some babbling brook. What if they do? We are not permitted to live for our own comfort or pleasure, but for the glory of God and the good of the world. United worship in the sanctuary makes the world better. Therefore we have no choice in the matter. It is our duty to attend the house of God regularly.—Rev. E. E. Hale.

A minister had preached an hour; then he remarked, "Another wide field opens from the subject in another direction." Just then an old colored saint ejaculated, "Please, Lord shut up de bars."

A RACE FOR A WIFE.

No crime in Lapland, save only that of murder, is punished more severely, or summarily, than is the marrying of a young woman against the expressed wishes of her parents. Those worse crimes, at which we shudder when we read of the wickedness of enlightened Christian communities, are wholly unknown in that chilly, somber clime. The blood of the people never boils, save with that anger, or indignation, which is inseparable from sense; and warmth of spirit is a thing called into being by the will rather than an involuntary passion, making the whole body captive.

But I meant chiefly to speak of Lapland courtship. It is rather a pleasant conception, and one under which the rights of all are preserved. A girl is not forced to look a suitor in the eye, and tell him she does not love him; nor shall she be forced to give her reasons for refusing. Nothing of the kind. The parents of the damsel, when her hand has been asked in marriage by one whom they are willing to accept, say to one another:

"Now, see: If our daughter will have this man, we will accept him for a son. Let the case be decided, even as it was decided, when Lulea of the Glen turned in her flight, and bowed the head to Lapp-Alten. It shall be done."

Accordingly, information is given to the damsel that a suitor has applied for her hand. Perhaps she knows the young man; while it may be that she has never seen him. However, on a day appointed, the damsel and her parents, with their chief friends, together with the suitor and his friends, come together and sit at meat; the suitor and the object of his desires being placed opposite to one another, so that they can converse freely, and each view the other's face.

When the feast is concluded the company repair to an open lot, where the "Race for a Wife" is to be run. The distance marked off is generally about two English furlongs—or quarter of a mile—and the girl is let out, in advance of the starting-point, about a third of the whole distance; so that, if she be at all fleet of foot, and so desires, she can easily avoid the suitor; for, if he do not overtake her before she reaches the end of the race, she is free, and he may never trouble her again.

In this way, it will be seen, a modest maiden is spaired all perplexity, or possible shame of refusal. If she does not wish the young man for a husband, she has but to keep her back to him, and make for the goal, which she is sure to reach if she wishes. While, on the other hand, if the suitor has pleased her, and she will have him, she has only to lag in her flight, and allow him to overtake her; and, if she be particularly struck—if she would signify to the lover that his love is returned—she can run a short distance; then stop and turn, and invite him with open arms.

The Lapps are not a moral people, nor excessively honest; but their marriage relations are, as a rule, happy and peaceful.

ICE WATER DYSPEPSIA.

The normal temperature of the blood is from 98° to 102° Fahrenheit. The heat of summer raises it still higher. It stands to reason that the pouring into the stomach a fluid 70° colder must be detrimental. It is stated that the drinking of considerable quantities of ice-water with the food is especially hurtful. The stomach is then commencing its digestive action, which is necessarily attended with a high degree of heat. Consequently a larger share of the blood is called to that part of the system than usual. The taking of ice-water copiously while eating arrests the whole process by reducing the temperature of the stomach, and produces in the end the most serious consequences. The reduced temperature of the stomach arrests digestion and allows it to proceed only after an interval of recuperation, and then with diminished force. From this springs a disease which, under the name of ice-water dyspepsia is becoming alarmingly common. All the functions of the body nearly related to the essimilation of food are deranged, and the body falls a prey to those diseases which are usually attributed to the heated term. Moreover, the blood, suddenly driven from the stomach, is distributed among the parts of the body which have already their proper shape, causing dizziness, congestion of the brain and a train of other ills.—Boston Journal.

DON'T WASTE VITAL ENERGY.

The most vigorous persons do not have too much vitality. People generally inherit a lack, or at least find that much vital energy has been permanently lost in their childhood or youth through the ignorance or carelessness of their parents. Often it is impaired by wrong indulgences in early manhood. The endeavor with all persons should be to husband what is left, be it much or little. Therefore:

1. Don't do anything in a hurry.
2. Don't work too many hours a day, whether it be farm-work, shop-work, study-work or house-work.
3. Don't abridge sleep. Get the full eight hours of it and that, too, in a ventilated and sun-purified room.
4. Don't eat what is indigestible, nor too much of anything, and let good cheer rule the hour.
5. Don't fret at yourself or anybody else, nor indulge in the blues, nor burst into fits of passion.
6. Don't be too much elated with good luck, nor disheartened by bad.

Positively—be self-controled, calm and brave. Let your brain have all the rest it needs. Treat your stomach right. Keep a good conscience, and have a cheerful trust in God for all things and both worlds.

Down in Salem the other day a bright little girl was sent to buy some eggs, and on her way back stumbled and fell, making sad havoc with the contents of her basket.—"Won't you catch it when you get home, though!" exclaimed her companion. "No, indeed, I won't," she answered, "I've got a grandmother."

"If this coffee is gotten up in boarding-house style again to-morrow morning, I think I shall have good grounds for a divorce," said a cross husband, the other morning. "I don't want any of your saucer," retorted his wife, "and what I've sediment."

The President recently asked to see a newspaper. Colonel Rockwell said they were all being saved for him. "What, all? Perhaps it wouldn't be best for me to get well," sadly remarked the President.

Thy Will Be Done.

I cannot think but God must know
About the thing I long for so;
I know He is so good, so kind,
I cannot think but He will find
Some way to help, some way to show
Me to the thing I long for so.

I stretched my hand—it lies so near;
It looks so sweet, it looks so dear,
"Dear Lord," I pray, "oh let me know
If it is wrong to want it so!"
He only smiles. He does not speak;
My heart grows weaker and more weak,
With looking at the thing so dear,
Which lies so far and yet so near.

Now, Lord, I leave at Thy loved feet
This thing which looks so near, so sweet,
I will not seek, I will not long,
I almost fear I have been wrong;
I'll go and work the harder, Lord,
And wait till, by some loud, clear word,
Thou call'st me to Thy loved feet,
To take this thing so dear, so sweet.

OUR OLD INHABITANTS ON THE WEATHER.

"Some folks seem to think this is warm weather," observed old Daddy Wotherspoon to old Uncle Linkinbotham, as the two old inhabitants stood, last Thursday, before a thermometer that registered 90 deg. in the shade. "'Pears to me 'twas worse than this in the May of '28, wasn't it?"

"A heap worse," assented old Uncle Linkinbotham; "but that wasn't as bad as May of '22. You remember how the tin roofs melted and run off the houses, and we had to carry wrought steel umbrellas through the streets?"

"'Deed I do," rejoined old Daddy Wotherspoon, mopping his visage with some anxiety. "I was out hunting that spring, and we had to carry our powder in buckets of water to keep it from going off prematurely. Wasn't that the spring the hams fried on live hogs and the bills melted off the snow birds?"

"The same Spring," said Uncle Linkinbotham. "I know I was off fishing in Long Island sound, and the heat generated the water into steam so as to blow our boat clear over into the woods. That month was pretty warm, for I recollect how the forest out back of East New York melted down, and I had a stream of liquid kindlings running right through my farm. One of my boys took a swig of it by mistake one day, and when he died in the fall we found him chock full of splinters. Killed him."

"Yes," murmured Old Daddy Wotherspoon, streaming at every pore. "We used to hang meat and they were cooked in ten minutes by the watch," and the ancient gentleman regarded his antagonist with some triumph.

"We tried that," said old Uucle Linkenbotham, "but the heat melted the wires the grub was hung on and the works of the clock run all over the floor, so we couldn't tell how long it did take to cook, and we all used ice-water to do our biling with."

"Where'd you get your ice?" demanded old Daddy Wotherspoon, tying a handkerchief around his head to keep his ears warm.

"We just poured water on the fire and the fire was so much cooler than the atmosphere that the water froze in a minute. That's how we got so much ice. Don't you want to go and drink something to warm you up?"

"If we can get a little good old brandy, I'd like it," replied old Daddy Wotherspoon, with pale lips and clinched fist. "I'll take some proof brand."

"Come along, then," retorted old Linkinbotham, contemptuously. "You may be able to stir your blood with that tipple, but this weather and the recollections of May, '22, makes me want some hot, spiced rum and a fur overcoat. To-morry I'm going to put on extra flannels."

And the two old liars almost killed themselves that afternoon with hot drinks rather than admit that the Almighty could do things as well now as He did when they were boys.—Brooklyn Eagle.

ANEDOTE OF VICE PRESIDENT WILSON.

On one occasion he gave a little party at Young's Hotel. The table was set with wine-glasses. After a brief period, there being no indication of the glasses being filled, one of the guests who did not hesitate to moisten his clay whenever opportunity offered, lifted his goblet and asked archly, "General, why these glasses if nothing to fill them?" Whereupon the General arose at the head of the table and said with emotion: "Gentlemen, I suppose these glasses were placed upon the table after the manner of the house, for I did not certainly order them. Whatever there may be under the roof of this building that will minister to your enjoyment to-night, save intoxicating drinks, you are at liberty to command, and I shall pleased to respond to the call. At the the age of nineteen years, knowing what it was to have a drunken father, I resolved never to use, or provide intoxicating liquors. That pledge I religiously kept. I cannot depart from it now, even in the privacy of this small, retired gathering. This, gentlemen, is the answer to the suggestion of our friend." This was the outcome of a frank, honest nature, and the generous response which followed, even from him who started the incident, showed that it was of the kind that one touch "makes the whole world kin."

Mr. Timelytopic and Mr. Verybusy met on the street, and after a few minutes' conversation on business matters Mr. Timelytopic asked Mr. Verybusy if he had seen the comet yet, and was surprised when the latter replied that he not, as he had been out of town for a couple of weeks.

No man can be revengeful without deliberately keeping his own wounds open. Let your wounds heel up, and then you will be ready to forgive; but if you probe them every day the pain you give yourself only serves to inflame your hatred.

An Irishman, ridiculed for starting off on horseback with only one spur, replied very justly: "If I get one side of the horse moving, I'll trust the other side."

Policeman—"Now, then, move on! There's nothing the matter here." Sarcastic Boy—"Of course there isn't. If there was you wouldn't be here."

The next attraction in the circus and menagerie parade will probably be a den of trained New Jersey mosquitos, accompanied by their keeper.

A poet asks, "What is Parting?" Parting is done with a comb and brush, and the barber never places it where you want it.

People are never made so ridiculous by the qualities they possess as by those which they affect to possess.

THE NUMBER THREE.

When the world was created, we find land, water and sky; sun, moon and stars. Noah had but three sons; Jonah was three days in the whale's belly; our Saviour was three days in the tomb; Peter denied his Saviour thrice. There were three patriarchs—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. Abraham entertained three angels. Samuel was called three times. "Simon, lovest thou me?" was repeated three times. Daniel was thrown into a den with three lions, for praying three times a day. Shadrack, Meshech and Abednego were rescued from the flames of the oven. The Ten Commandments were delivered on the third day. Job had three friends. St. Paul speaks of Faith, Hope and Charity, these three. The famous dreams of the baker and butler were to come to pass in three days; and Elijah prostrated himself three times on the body of the dead child. Sampson deceived Delilah three times before she discovered the source of his strength. The sacred letters on the cross are I. H. S.; so also the Roman motto was composed of three words, "In hoc signo." There are three conditions for man: The earth, heaven and hell; there is also the Holy Trinity. In mythology there were the three Oracles; Cerberus with his three heads; Neptune holding his three-toothed staff; the Oracle of Delphi cherished with veneration the Tripod; and the nine Muses sprang from three. In nature we have male, female and offspring; morning, noon and night. Trees group their leaves in threes; there is three-leaved clover. We have fish, flesh and fowl. What could be done in mathematics without the aid of the triangle? Witness the power of the wedge. In logic three premises are indispensable. It is a common phrase that "three is a lucky number."

MODERATION.

Persons of sedentary habits, who eat heartily of rich food, make so much blood that elimination of waste material from the system is not rapid enough to maintain the equilibrium; consequently there is an excess of blood to be circulated, which over-works the heart; this strain, long continued, results in disease. Precisely the same thing may result from an opposite course. If the nourishment is insufficient, the circulation becomes sluggish, the action of the heart feeble, and its walls dilated and diseased. And so with the brain. There are quite as many cases of apoplexy from over abstemiousness as from the opposite cause. Thus also with congestions and inflammations affecting the various vital organs; the rule of like results from opposite causes holds good. These facts should teach us to avoid extremes; not only in our methods of living, but in matters of opinion also.—Hall's Journal.

PRODUCTION BETTER THAN CLERKING.

The day will come—and may I do something to help it thither—when the youth of our country will recognize that, taken in itself, it is a more manly, and therefore in the old, true sense, a more gentle thing to follow a good handicraft, if it make the hands as black as a coal, than to spend the day in keeping books and making up accounts, though therein the hands remain white. Not but that from a higher point of view, still at work and set by God and done divinely, is of equal honor, but where there is a choice I would gladly see a boy of mine choose rather to be a blacksmith, or a bookbinder, than a clerk. Production, making, is a hgher scale of reality than mere transmissions, such as buying and selling. It is besides easier to do honest work than to buy and sell honestly.—George McDonald.

BAD WORK.—"I drink to make me work,' said a young man. To which an old man replied: "That's right; thee drink and it will make thee work! Harken to me a moment and I'll tell thee something that may do thee good. I was once a prosperous farmer. I had a good, loving wife and two fine lads as ever the sun shone on. We had a comfortable home, and lived happily together. But we used to drink to make us work. Those lads I have laid in drunkards' graves. My wife died broken-hearted, and she now lies by her two sons. I am seventy-two years of age. Had it not been for drink I might now have been an independent gentleman; but I used to drink to make me work, and mark, it makes me work now. At seventy years of age I am obliged to work for my daily bread. Drink! Drink! and it will make you work."

A ship on the broad, boisterous and open ocean, needeth no pilot. But it dare not venture alone on the placid bosom of a little river, lest it be wrecked by some hidden rock. Thus it is with life. 'Tis not in our open, exposed deeds that we so much need the still voice of the silent monitor, as in the small, secret, every day acts of our life.

Sunday-school teacher (about to comment on St. Paul's direction for conduct of men and women during divine service)—"Now, do you know why women do not take off their bonnets in church?" Small boy—"'Cos they ain't got looking glasses to put 'em on again by."

A little boy in Belfast, Me., attended church last Sunday for the first time. On returning home, he was asked what was done at church, to which he replied: "First they sang, then prayed, and then they passed around a corn-popper."—The Central Churchman.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1881.

DEMOCRATS, why do you always insist on placing your forlorn hope under the command of those antiquated leaders who never lead you anywhere but to defeat? Try a little fresh blood once in a while just for a change. If Col. French hasn't got sufficient "financial base" to properly steady his nerve give Albert Palmer a chance. He's got 'em both in abundance.

THE Republicans hold their State convention next month. Political matters were never more quiet, and the prospect of an exciting campaign never less promising than now. There is no probability of any change in the State ticket, and no question as to the re-election of the entire present State government. While Gov. Long remains at the head of public affairs there is no occasion for doubt as to their being well administered.

THE railroad war still continues, and the rates to Chicago and other points West are reduced so low that crowds of eastern people are availing themselves of the opportunity to put the advice of Horace Greeley to a practical test. It is to be hoped that this state of things will continue until every man, woman and child who desires, may have an opportunity to see something of the country at rates not altogether advantageous to the railroads.

THE vacancy upon the supreme bench caused by the death of Judge Colt has been filled by the promotion of Judge Allen of the superior court, and Senator Knowlton of Springfield has been appointed to succeed Judge Allen. These are excellent selections, and although Mr. Knowlton's friends had hoped that his recognized fitness would secure for him the more exalted position, they are confident that his further advancement is only a question of time.

THE Republican, alluding to the Ludlow compound, which the people of Springfield have diverted to that city at so great an expense, says, "many of our citizens loathe it for household uses, having long since discarded it as a beverage." What in the world can be the objection to it as a beverage? If any citizen of Springfield has got the idea into his head that it contains water he can satisfy himself in five minutes that he is mistaken by just having the fluid analyzed.

IT would have become those editors who desire that their reputations for intelligence should not sustain needless injury as the result of injudicious comment, to have laid down their pens and observed the most rigid silence while the philosophers lately assembled at Concord were engaged in discussing the weighty problems of human existence. A few, however, guided by the most reckless folly, indulged themselves in unfavorable criticism of these wonderful performances, and now of course everybody understands that their pretended intelligence was only a sham of the most transparent kind.

MASSACHUSETTS Democrats are not in a hopeful frame of mind this Fall, and if there is any reason why they should be it is one which does not readily suggest itself. Gen. Butler has evidently been considering the situation, and has concluded that he will never again enter upon the duties of a political leader until Republican wickedness becomes so great that the command to build an ark must be regarded as imperative, and the receding waters are sure to leave him resting securely upon the summit of Beacon Hill. In the meantime Massachusetts Democracy is in a dangerous, disorganizing state of apathy. "Wake, Nicodemus!"

THE Jennie Cramer mystery at New Haven clears up very slowly. There seems to be conclusive evidence of foul play at some stage, but whether the girl's death was the result of murder or suicide does not yet fully appear. Every possible effort is being made to bring all the facts to light, with a good prospect of ultimate success. The Malley boys who have been arrested on a charge of murder, are reported to be fast young men, and whether guilty or not of the grave offence charged, are shown to have been pretty thoroughly mixed up with the tragic affair. While they stoutly protest their innocence, the Douglass girl has already revealed enough to show that their statements concerning their whereabouts at the time are utterly false. The case has had its parallel several times in the past fifteen years, and yet there is abundant reason to be glad that such unfortunate events occur as seldom as really they do.

SENATOR DAWES has written his third and last letter to the Springfield Republican on civil service reform. Mr. Dawes is himself a very good illustration of the difference between the practical and the theoretical in the administration of public affairs. He discusses the question in these letters in a manner to suit the advocates of the most radical measures, and acts in his official capacity like a man who has no faith that such measures can ever be reduced to actual practice. We do not look upon Mr. Dawes as a fresh convert to the doctrine of civil service reform, as many are inclined to do. We have no doubt that he has always entertained a sincere desire to render the government honest and efficient service whenever opportunity has been offered him. These letters only show that while Mr. Dawes has an intelligent appreciation of the theory toward which reform in the civil service ought to tend, whenever he has had occasion to act he has never thought it best to wholly ignore the circumstances by which he has found himself surrounded.

Camp meeting at the Northampton grounds opens next Monday with a sermon by the presiding elder, Rev. D. H. Ela, and will close Friday night.

WHILE everybody supposed that the President was gradually gaining ground every day, and that his ultimate recovery was assured beyond any question, the startling news was flashed over the wires last Monday night that he was sinking rapidly, and that at best he could be expected to survive but a few hours. A sudden change for the worse was the true state of the President's condition, and his rapid decline was alarming in the extreme, but to the joyful surprise of all he again rallied, and has since so far improved that his condition to-day affords a reasonable ground for hope. The events of the past week furnish convincing proof that the President's life is really in great jeopardy, and the country for a number of weeks, should he indeed survive so long, must be prepared for the most unwelcome tidings. Whatever may be the result, the welfare of the nation cannot be materially affected. The President's death would be sincerely mourned, but public faith would not be weakened, and public affairs would move on as before, almost undisturbed. Such a state of things could hardly exist in any government in the world other than the American republic.

THE boys at the Westboro reform school took it into their heads to revolt last Sunday, and managed to incite a good deal of a commotion which was only quelled at last by the superintendent firing a few shots so close to the leader's head as to forcibly suggest the experiment of William Tell with the apple. If the reform school itself doesn't need reforming, its system of dealing with unruly boys does beyond any question.

The Manufacturers' and Mechanics' Institute seems to have concentrated all the industries of New England and the small remnant of the outside world for its great fair, which commenced at Boston last Thursday. The mammoth buildings, covering nearly five acres of ground, which have been in process of construction for many months, are just completed, and the exhibition has been formally opened by Gov. Long, the exercises including the usual military parade, with an oration, this time delivered by Dr. Loring. The fair has already proved a great success, and is likely to attract more attention than anything of the kind ever before witnessed in the New England states. The exhibition is intended to be permanent, the buildings in which it is held being substantially built and very ornamental in the design.

Lawyer Stearns and the other members of the Springfield horse association have never been in favor of having a trot. This Fall they held a meeting and resolved that they would not have one under any circumstances, and took suitable measures to brace up against it. But somehow it has actually forced itself upon them, in spite of all they could do. Being wholly unable to shake it off they have decided to offer no further resistance, and it looks now as though the thing would be a great success. Pinkerton will be asked to detail a squad of men to guard the money chest, and it will get all the attention it requires, thus preventing the possibility of a miscount this time.

The Moody meetings now in progress at Northfield, have thus far been well attended, the interest being sufficient to attract people from all sections of the country. In the happiness they are designed to afford, and the good they are expected to accomplish, they have proved all that their projector could have reasonably hoped. It is not known how much longer they will be continued.

Capt. Howgate, at one time disbursing officer in the signal service department, and at Gen. Myers' death a prominent candidate for the succession, has fallen into still further disgrace since his financial irregularities were discovered, by getting mixed up in a social scandal of the first magnitude. He is hardly in the line of promotion now, under a strict interpretation of the civil service rules.

An unsuccessful attempt was made Tuesday to wreck an excursion train at San Antonio, Tex., having on board 550 men, women and children, by laying cross-ties across the track. The train was going at the rate of thirty miles an hour, and the engine, striking the ties, threw them from the track. Five men who were riding on the cow-catcher were badly bruised.

Leo Hartmann, the Russian Nihilist, who came to this country to escape punishment at home, after flying to Canada for fear that our government would surrender him, has again returned to New York and declares that he shall now demand protection under our laws, and take the chances of its being accorded him. He has applied for naturalization papers.

A Berlin manufacturer is laboring under the impression that he is God, and has been traveling two million miles on the comet for the purpose of dealing out punishment to the world. It is said that there have been a number of cases of lunacy in Germany of which the comet has been the cause.

McKevitt and McGrath, arrested for attempting to blow up the Liverpool town hall, were found guilty by the jury. McGrath, who was also found guilty of being an accessory in the attempt to blow up the Liverpool police office, was sentenced to penal servitude for life and McKevitt for fifteen years.

Guiteau, apparently fretful because the newspapers infrequently mention him, undertook to kill one of his guards Tuesday and thus create another sensation. But he was unsuccessful, and the public doubtless regrets that the officer did not use his pistol on the rascal.

The 104th anniversary of the battle of Bennington was celebrated Tuesday at White Creek, N. Y., within whose limits the battle took place, with a procession, speeches, a banquet, national salutes, fire-works, etc.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Two thousand five hundred dollars in boots and shoes. W. R. Milligan has bought the above bankrupt stock, which must be sold at once, and if low prices are any inducement, it will pay cash buyers to improve this opportunity of getting first quality goods regardless of cost. He will also offer his entire stock of boots, shoes and rubbers at bankrupt prices, making a general clearing out sale of two complete stocks of boots and shoes.

Another truck and job wagon will appear on our streets next Monday, Robert J. Henry having concluded to go into the business.

George Ellis and wife started Wednesday on a visit to friends in Dedham, and will take in several seashore resorts before they return.

Rev. Mr. Ricketts of Thorndike preached at the Congregational church in this village last Sunday, and his sermon was well liked by all.

Considerable complaint is made that several of our licensed dealers pay little or no attertion to the requirements of the new screen law.

Although Mr. Williams is frequently seen upon our streets looking after his business interests, he continues to reside at his country seat.

The improvements at the bank are fast approaching completion, and it will be ready for occupancy in the course of a week or ten days.

The Sunday school of St. Thomas' church contemplate holding a picnic in some grove convenient to the village, the latter part of the month.

Work on the primary school reservoir is progressing, but no reliable statement can be made of the amount of water it will hold until it is given a trial.

This is the last day of grace to receive the 5 per cent discount on taxes, and Collector Northrop can be found at the town clerk's office from 1 to 9 p. m.

W. R. Milligan, fully alive to the wants of his patrons, has just purchased a large bankrupt stock of boots and shoes, which he advertises to sell cheap.

J. A. Palmer sells at auction a lot of tools and household goods at the residence of the late Alanson Merrick on Pleasant street, Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Dea. Cowles of this village brings into our sanctum the first tall corn of the season, showing us a stalk that measures 12 feet and 4 inches above the ground.

Bathing below the B. & A. railroad bridge over the Quaboag, has been forbidden. The view is too plain from West Main street to suit the people residing there.

The repairs on the school house are rapidly progressing, although Mr. Hoag, the contractor, has been confined to his house for some weeks by severe sickness.

Has the Palmer Improvement Association been superseded? Treasurer Dewey of the savings bank is doing all the business in this line that we have lately heard of.

The condition of Alvin Hastings, a neighboring farmer, who has been laid up with various maladies for some time, has been regarded as critical for several days past.

The excursion train from New London to Lake Pleasant last Saturday consisted of eleven loaded cars drawn by two locomotives, and was patronized by about 50 from this station.

The resignation of Rev. Mr. Fullerton as a member of the school committee will cause a vacancy which the remaining members of the board, with the selectmen, will soon be called upon to fill.

Another trot between the horses of Messrs. Thompson and Holbrook will take place on the agricultural park Saturday, the 27th inst., at 3 o'clock p. m. Stakes $100 a side—best three in five.

If any man is lucky enough to get a sight of the new comet, a resident of North Main street would like to get an account of it. He goes to bed so early that he never expects to see it himself.

O. W. Studley and wife have been absent this week on a short vacation. H. P. Holden and family are at Martha's Vineyard. Hubbard Lawrence has returned home after a week's absence.

Charles Merrick of Monson will preside at the organ in the Congregational church tomorrow, in the absence of F. O. Munger, who is enjoying the sea breezes in the eastern part of the State.

Mrs. McLaughlin, wife of Editor James McLaughlin of the Tolland County Press of Stafford, Conn., is with the party from this village at Marblehead, where she will remain about three weeks.

The new chimney at Mr. Goddard's hat shop is now completed, and workmen are busy making other necessary repairs to the building and machinery, preparatory to a lively business next Winter.

The express company's office has been draped in mourning, in commemoration of the late William F. Fargo, president of the American express company, who died at Buffalo, N. Y., on the 3d.

It was a remarkable coincidence, but probably had no significance, that on the same day a number of Palmer people visited Lake Pleasant a notice was conspicuously posted to beware of pickpockets.

Henry H. Weeden of this village died last Saturday after a lingering illness, and was buried with Masonic honors Tuesday afternoon. The stores and places of business were closed during the funeral service.

Although a great many do not consider oysters fit to be eaten at this season of the year, M. Fox still keeps them, received fresh every night from New London, and those who do indulge in the bivalves find them as good now as ever.

Holbrook's coal cart has entered upon its Fall campaign, at the close of which the price of your Winter's stock will be indicated on a slip of white paper, with few printed words, kindly asking you to give it your immediate attention.

Serious complaint is made that the boys from River street are in the habit of assaulting travelers on Commercial street with bricks and stones, making travel in that location almost dangerous. This matter should receive immediate attention.

Vennor has hit it nearly right, for once, the week having been a very comfortable one. The days have been cool, and the nights decidedly cooler, making one feel the want of extra bed-clothing. Most people would like a continuance of the same, instead of another hot spell.

St. Jacob's oil and Mrs. Pinkham's vegetable compound occupy the entire attention of the bill-boards just now. They look dull, dreary and death-like, and nothing but a fresh, flashy circus bill can ever put new life into them. Mr. St. Jacob and Mrs. Pinkham, why won't you give us a rest?

The departure of Rev. B. M. Fullerton this week for his new field of labor leaves our village with an unusual dearth of local clergymen. Parties in this vicinity who contemplate bringing their courting days to an early close will find the conveniences for getting "spliced" exceedingly limited at present.

The Union, speaking of the many pleasant drives convenient to the Springfield people, recommends a trip to Palmer by rail and a drive of a few hours in this vicinity, finished in season for the evening trains returning to that city, thus making a little time afford quite a variety of scenery and a good deal of pleasure.

Last Monday afternoon, while some of the children at the State Primary School were out for a walk, a little four-years-old boy strayed away from the rest unnoticed, and was not to be found. Considerable anxiety was felt, but late in the afternoon he was found near Alvin Hastings', on the road to Springfield, none the worse for his little adventure.

Cambridge Moulton, who has been fireman on Conductor Sanders' train for a number of years past, has been promoted to yard engineer at the N. L. N. R. R. station in this village; Wm. F. Ham, son of Engineer Ham of the steamboat train north, has been transferred from Brattleboro to the same yard. They fill the vacancies occasioned by the resigna- of Engineers Hubbard and Moore.

One hears the inquiry frequently made now-a-days as to when work on the new Central street sewer is to be begun. If the money appropriated won't complete the job, as has been suggested, why not use it as far as it will go and finish the work at some future time? Every dollar judiciously expended will aid so much in a work which before many years will be sure to demand serious attention.

The late Thomas Babington Macaulay, one of the most eminent writers of the present century, referring to Grecian art says, "Its inexhaustible treasury will supply the models of all ages until the end of time." Speaking of art, Conductor Sanders has recently painted a wood-house, cabinet style, which, in the rich blending of colors and rare harmony of shades far surpasses anything our local artists have ever produced.

The Palmer Cornet Band have engaged the services of Daniel M. Teague, late of Maine, as instructor for one year. They announce a series of concerts and dances for this and next month, to be given on the lawn at the Weeks House, the first next Wednesday evening. A platform will be erected, and good music for dancing furnished. The band deserve to be well patronized, and are desirous of clearing up their debt by this means.

Chas. T. Brainerd, has a silo in process of construction on his farm east of the village, which he intends to fill with green corn week after next. This is the second one in town. Judge Robinson, who built the first one last June and filled it with rye, is now feeding 25 head of cattle from it, and reports the fodder in good condition. He is now building another one, which he will fill with corn next month, and also refill his first one.

It is rumored that a special train may be run from this place to Lake Pleasant some Saturday evening in the near future, leaving at 6 o'clock and returning about 11.30. This would give people an opportunity to visit the lake, witness the illumination and other attractions, and return at a seasonable hour. Many who cannot conveniently attend the excursions during the day would gladly avail themselves of the advantages offered by a train in the evening.

Last Thursday night was the first night for a long time that a lady could venture on the street without running the risk of being insulted by the crowd of loafers on the street corners, and then it was so rainy that none cared to venture out. It is a pity that a lady dare not go upon the street of an evening unattended, and something should be done to keep the sidewalks clear. Wouldn't a night watchman, required to be on duty at least as late as 10 p. m., be a good thing?

The new union depot at this village may be confidently expected in the near future. The plans have already been commenced, and it is understood that the building will be large and commodious, built in the triangular form, with the base toward the house of Col. Stoughton. The material to be used has not been decided upon, but there can be no doubt that the structure when completed will be an ornament to the village, as well as a convenience to the traveling public.

The trot on the park last Saturday, for a purse of $100, between H. A. Bigelow's "Sammy" and Geo. Aspinwall's "Hero," came off according to programme, although it was not as close and exciting as previous rumors seemed to indicate. In the first heat "Sammy" had the pole, but was soon passed by "Hero," who kept the lead till the home-stretch, when "Sammy" shot by him and won the heat in 3.25½. Little "Sammy" had everything his own way in the second and third heats, winning easily in 3.37 and 3.32 respectively. About 300 people were present.

The attempt to encourage sheep husbandry by legislating against the dogs can hardly be said to have proved a great success. The number of dogs has not been perceptibly diminished by the tax imposed, and sheep-raising is altogether too hazardous to be regarded by farmers as a profitable undertaking. The selectmen of Palmer have already approved bills for damages to sheep quite in excess of what the town will contribute to the county's dog fund, and a law which effectually shields every owner of a mischievious cur from personal risk obviously affords far greater protection to dogs than it does to sheep.

One of our citizens, who is occasionally afflicted with spells of absent-mindedness, recently gave himself away in one of the depots of the nutmeg State. Having left his wife for a few moments, on returning he took the arm of a lady whom he supposed (?) was his better half, and hurried along toward the train, which was on the point of starting. About this time his wife made her appearance, and seeing her husband with another lady, gave him a gentle tap on the shoulder, which brought him to his senses. On seeing his wife he turned to the lady on his arm, remarking, "I thought you were my wife." "And I mistook you for the conductor," replied the lady, amid the smiles of the trio.

Patrick Donahue was brought before the district court last week Thursday for drunkenness, and fined $1, and costs $4.85, in default of which he was committed. On Saturday Andrew Gilbride was up for the same offence, and lacking the necessary funds to satisfy the demands of the judge he was also sent up. Thomas O'Neil and Edward Jones came before the court Monday for drunkenness, and O'Neil paid his fine of $1 and costs, but Jones could not, and was committed. On Thursday Ichabod Jenkins, for drunkenness, was fined $1, and costs $3.85, which he could not produce, and is now spending his vacation with Sheriff Sanderson in Springfield. Mary S. Rogers of Wales was deemed an insane person, and sent to the Worcester hospital.

The soap-stone business carried on for some time by Kimball & Osgood at Dana will sooner or later be removed to this town. This enterprising firm has recently purchased of George Brown an undeveloped water power and about fifty acres of land adjoining his farm, and has already commenced the construction of a dam, preparatory to the erection of a large mill in which it is expected that some fifty men will be permanently employed. The company considered the site a very favorable one for their business, as it places them in direct communication, via the Springfield & Athol railroad and its connections, with both Boston and New York, as well as with their quarries in Vermont. They contemplate the erection of an additional dam in the near future, with the view of renting power to such other parties as may desire to locate there.

Quite a number of interested spectators gathered on the park Saturday afternoon to witness the base ball match between the Palmer and Wales clubs. This game was to decide which club was the champion, as two games had already been played, and at that time honors were easy. Everything seemed favorable for the Palmers up to the sixth inning, when by numerous errors they allowed their opponents to score six runs, thus giving the Wales club the lead. In the seventh inning an objection was made by the Wales club to a decision of the umpire in accordance with an agreement which the Palmers claim was made at the beginning of the series. As neither side was willing to give in, and the Wales club refused to play, the umpire called the game on the fifth inning, the score then standing 7 to 4 in favor of the Palmers, thus giving the game to the latter club. The Palmer boys, understanding that the Wales club feels dissatisfied with the decision, are disposed to settle the controversy by another game played on neutral ground at such time as will suit the convenience of their opponents.

THORNDIKE.

Some machinery for the new mill has arrived.

It is rumored that the fine water-power below the Catholic church is about to be utilized.

Several tenement houses are in the course of erection on Church street, and more are to follow.

Grout's new store is nearly ready for occupancy, and presents a very pleasant appearance.

Messrs. Franklin & Patten gave a very pleasant musicale at their rooms last week Friday evening.

Most of the vacation wanderers have returned and show the results of their absence on their bronzed and sunburned faces.

John T. Sullivan, who was badly burned by a premature blast last week at Flynt's quarry, is doing well and will in time fully recover.

A. L. Calkins shows us a branch from an apple tree having blossoms and fully developed fruit within a few inches of each other.

Candidates for admission to the high school will be examined next week Friday, at 1 o'clock p. m., at the grammar school room in district No. 1.

E. A. Thrall takes possession of Mrs. Deichmann's store Sept. 1st. For three days previous the store will be closed for the purpose of taking stock.

The bank has been in the hands of Messrs. Calkins & Edson the past fortnight for the purpose of interior decoration and frescoing, and looks bright and cheerful in its new colors.

HAMPDEN.

Charles H. Burleigh is spending the week at Northampton campmeeting.

Patrick McCarty cut his hand badly while splitting wood on a block the other day. Dr. Bullard dressed it and it is doing well.

There was a creamery meeting at the Methodist vestry last Saturday afternoon. Judging from the reports of the meeting, it would seem that the enterprise will fail.

Charles Eager and Frank Taylor have hired a cottage at Northampton campmeeting for the week. Carrie Eager, Helen Sessions and other ladies are also camping on the grounds.

The cry of murder was heard in the streets Monday evening, caused by Dennis Carney knocking down a lad by the name of Slater with a stone. Carney ran away and has not been arrested.

Dr. George T. Ballard has bought Milton Stebbins' farm in Wilbraham, with all his stock and personal property thereon. Report says he paid $2000 for the real estate and $1000 for the personal. He took possession last Saturday. Mr. Stebbins is reported to have gone west on a visit to his friends.

Justin Goodwill, who died in Camden, N. J., last Saturday, was born in Hampden (then South Wilbraham) May 15, 1796, near where the Congregational church now stands. His father was a practicing physician in this town till his death. Justin received only a common school education, but was a splendid penman, a good grammarian, and an accurate mathematician. He commenced to teach early, and made that his business for 25 years with success. He married Hannah Torrey, daughter of the late Jonathan Torrey, Esq., of Monson, with whom he lived from marriage until the death of Mr. and Mrs. Torrey. Mr. Goodwill has been well known hereabouts as well as in Monson, where he was one of the town school committee for years, and then held other offices of trust. He was evangelical in religion, honest, trustworthy, and never learned to do a mean or dishonest act; always retiring in his acts, never putting himself forward, nor obtruding himself upon any one. After the death of Mr. and Mrs. Torrey he disposed of his estate in Monson, retired from active business and went to live with his only child, who had married Stephen Decatur Butler, and lived with them in Canada. His most excellent wife died years since and was buried there. He is now taken at a ripe old age, coming in "like a shock of corn fully ripe in its season." Mr. Goodwill had some eccentricities, but in all of them could be discerned the original genius of the man. He will long be remembered hereabouts.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Fred O. Caryl has the honor of owning the first bicycle in town.

Two of our canoeists visited Brookfield pond the other day to try their canoes where there was room to try their sailing qualities without tacking too often.

A fine mink was captured in the new library building Wednesday. He came out of the wall in the rear and was run into the building by the boys and dogs who happened to be present.

Harry Linkwaith cut his hand with an ax on Thursday afternoon in a shocking manner, cutting into the third joint of his thumb. The bleeding was so profuse that he could be readily tracked through Main street.

Conductor George Warner, who has run on the morning train down for the past eight years, lost his first day on account of sickness this week. He was obliged to send for a substitute on account of a painful boil on the back of his neck.

The Clippers were defeated last Saturday by the Stars, which have most of the Sure Pop players with them, by a score of 13 to 1. This is only the second time they have been beaten this season, having played eighteen games and come off victorious in sixteen.

An alarm of fire was given a few minutes past 12 on Wednesday night. It proved to be in the small dwelling next to the stable of F. G. Gilmore. The fire, which was thought to be of incendiary origin, was quickly extinguished, or a most disastrous conflagration must have been had.

A capsize canoe race took place on the river Tuesday night with three contestants, only one of which, however, succeeded in getting into his canoe and paddling to the goal. The contest was to start from a given point and go a certain distance, capsize the canoe, then get into it again and paddle to the goal. The fun of it is in the getting in from the water. There were four other boats of various kinds on the scene, so the pond presented quite a lively appearance. It is rumored that there is more sport of this kind in prospect, although the contestants seem not to care for a large audience, and are very quiet about it.

A CARD.—The undersigned desires to tender her sincere thanks to her friends, especially the Masonic fraternity, for the kind sympathy and attentions extended to her in her bereavement.

MRS. H. H. WEEDEN.

Palmer, Aug. 18th, 1881.

A negro woman who killed two children near Washington, is unable to give any motive for the crime, and none can be conceived, though she seems quite sane. "The devil put it into my head," she says, "and I couldn't help it. I see them running round the yard, and the devil made me pound them with a club."

William White, a Cincinnati youth, picked up a cartridge somewhere the other Sunday, carried it into church with him and began whittling it with his knife. It suddenly exploded, blowing off the ends of a thumb and two fingers, and injuring him otherwise.

Arthur Rice, of Charlemont, while whetting his scythe last week cut his finger slightly and immediately fainted and fell across his scythe, cutting both legs in a shocking manner. The surgeon in attendance says there is danger of his being a cripple for life.

It will probably be decided this week when young Briggs, the Pelham murderer, is to have his trial. It is thought by some lawyers that a verdict of murder in the second degree will be found against him, resulting in a life sentence. Briggs is more hopeful, and thinks he will be found guilty only of manslaughter, and get off with 10 or 15 years. He is behaving well, and seems to worry very little, though he is rather sad at times and expresses deep regret at his deed.

President Seelye, in a report on the new system at Amherst College, says that the government has been made easier by becoming a simple contract between student and faculty, and the quantity and quality of work done by the average student has been greatly improved. Responsibility has had the natural result of stimulating the industry of students. The average attendance has been raised by requiring nine-tenths of the exercises, letting the rest go, and giving no excuses.

A "Marriage Insurance Company" has been started in New York. One thousand people, men and women, of marriageable ages, club together into a society, and agree to pay one dollar each upon every occasion of a member getting married. This gives the fortunate wearer of the silken bonds $1000 of capital to start married life; and if both bride and bridegroom are members they of course receive $1000 each, which should make them very comfortable.

CURED OF DRINKING.—"A young friend of mine was cured of an insatiable thirst for liquor, which had so prostrated him that he was unable to do any business. He was entirely cured by the use of Hop Bitters. It allayed all that burning thirst; took away the appetite for liquor; made his nerves steady, and he has remained a sober and steady man for more than two years, and has no desire to return to his cups; I know of a number of others that have been cured of drinking by it."—From a leading R. R. official, Chicago, Ill.—Times.

THE PRESIDENT'S WOUND

A PARALLEL CASE IN ARMY LIFE.

BY DR. DAVID KENNEDY, ONE OF THE SURGEONS ON DUTY AT THE U. S. A. GENERAL HOSPITAL, WEST PHILADELPHIA, now of RONDOUT, N. Y.

In the issue of the Philadelphia Record of the 27th of July was published an article relating to the case of Capt. William Palmer, now Quartermaster Second Brigade New Jersey State National Guard, who was wounded at the battle of Mossy Creek, East Tennessee, in winter of 1863. In that article the striking resemblance of the case to that of President Garfield, in many particulars, was pointed out, the authority for the statement being the brave captain himself. A still better authority is Dr. David Kennedy, then surgeon U. S. General Hospital, West Philadelphia, who had charge of the case, and performed the operation of removing the detached bone, and finally extracted the bullet, the entire treatment being perfectly successful—Capt. Palmer living to this day in the bloom of health. Dr. Kennedy does not hesitate to say that many of his patients, both in military and civil practice, owe their lives to the wonderful healing and strengthening powers of his medicine called "Favorite Remedy." The doctor is in possession of an autograph letter from Capt. Palmer, attesting his indebtedness for his present good health to this medicine—"Favorite Remedy"—which he says has doubled the obligation which he felt to the doctor for the treatment of the captain's terrible wound.
While Dr. Kennedy is engaged in the introduction of "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession at Rondout, N. Y., and performs all the minor as well as capital operations of surgery. Address as above. 4w21

Paying Toll.

Ah! sweet were the days when we wandered
In dear summer time long ago,
Through lands that were pleasant and shady,
With our youthful hearts all aglow.
The bridge o'er the brook I remember,
For oft to the spot we would stroll;
How your cheeks would blush like the roses
Whenever I asked you for toll.

How gently you tried to prevent me
To take from your lips my just due;
But somehow I always succeeded
In getting prompt payment from you.
How you would pretend to be angry,
With smiles that were dear to my soul;
I think that you somewhat enjoyed it,
And rather liked paying the toll.

CARE OF THE FEET.

No part of the human body is so neglected as the feet. Possibly not over ten in each hundred, of even the educated classes, properly cleanse the feet and nails. Bathe the feet every night and morning with a little borax in the water. Ammonia and bay rum, though cleansing, have a tendency to dry the skin and close the pores. Frequent change of hosiery is more necessary than changing any other part of the clothing. After physical exercise, remove the stockings, bathe the feet and annoint them, the ankles and the calves of the legs, with healing oil or salve. Exchange the socks worn through the day for clean ones at early evening, and the brain will quickly respond to the restoring influence. It would be much better to neglect to wash the face an entire month than neglect to bathe the feet a single day. Never use cheap or highly perfumed soap, as it has a tendency to dry and parch the skin, and so close the pores as to prove injurious to the health. Castile, olive oil, and other vegetable oil soaps are the best for the flesh.

THE LIFE RAFT.—Heretofore it has been difficult to conceive of anything (in case of necessity) more practical than a ship's boat, but a recent invention has rendered the ship's boat a thing of the past, as far as perfect safety to the occupants is concerned. The recent invention is called a life raft, and is composed of two large metal cylinders, conically shaped at the ends. Fastened to each cylinder above and below is an arm of oak, to which are attached rowlocks at intervals along the sides and at both ends. Running between these cylinders and attached to the oaken arms are strong wooden slats, resembling in construction the woodwork supporting the springs in a spring bed. The advantages of the life raft over the ordinary boat are that the raft can be launched by tipping it from the deck, and, no matter how it strikes the water, it comes right side up, and once launched, it is impossible to swamp it.

A good wife is the most faithful and constant companion a man can possibly have by his side while performing the journey of life. When a woman loves, she loves with a double distilled devotedness. Her love is as deep as the ocean, as strong as a hempen halter. She will not change, except it is in a very strong fit of jealousy, and even then her love lingers as if loth to depart, like evening twilight at the windows of the west.

Emile Girardin, the great French journalist, used to rise at 4 o'clock every morning. And now he is dead. It is a sad, sad lesson, but let us not forget its warning. Let us lay our hands on our respective hearts and say that rather than imitate his fault, if it is necessary for us to be up at 4 a. m., we will sit up to it. To arise at it—ah, this is too, too; it is too utterly too.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Men suffer as well as women from ill-sorted marriages. Many a towering ambition has been crushed, many a draught of happiness has been converted into the dregs of bitterness, from the neglect of a young man to thoroughly acquaint himself with a girl before engaging himself to her. Then be not in too great haste to marry; reflect well and earnestly before taking this most important step in life.

Fogg thinks it strange that nobody thought of reducing the temperature of the President's room by holding a church "social" in it. Fogg says that one of the "socials" that they have in his town would put a coating of ice ten inches thick on a fire of blazing sea coal in less than five minutes.—Boston Transcript.

Little Phil, a bright five-years-old, is afraid of thunder. During the recent hot spell his mother would remark, "Oh, I pray for rain." One day when she said it Phil thus addressed her: "Oh, mamma, I will tell you why it don't rain. When I say my prayers, I des say, 'Please don't pay any 'tention to what mamma says, 'cos I am 'fraid of thunder.'"

"I can't think that all sinners will be lost," said Mrs. Nimbletung. "There's my husband, now. He's a bad man—a very bad man; but I trust he will be saved at last. I believe he has suffered his due share in this life." "Amen!" shouted Nimbletung from the back seat. Mrs. N. gave him such a look, but said nothing.

Singular fact: Young lady—"I have called, Mrs. Brown, to ask you why your children do not attend Sunday school now, as they used. Do they not like going?" Mrs. Brown—"Oh, yes, miss, they likes goin' well enough; it's the stayin' after they gets there as they don't like."—London Times.

When you see a man streaking it lively to the shoemaker, to get his boots tapped, often—that man advertises. When you see another man streaking it to the tailors, to get the seat of his pants tapped, often—that man does not advertise.

It is so hard to find a word to rhyme with Guiteau that most poets use "hemp" and let it go at that.—Detroit Free Press.

AN AWFUL VENGEANCE.

Three months ago in Randolph county, Alabama, Dr. John Mitchell, a prominent young physician, married Carrie Knight, famed for her beauty and accomplishments. On the 20th of June, in the joy of their honeymoon, Dr. Mitchell was walking up the road near his country home when he beheld what almost paralyzed him with horror. His lovely wife lay before him a ghastly corpse. Her throat was cut from ear to ear, and her body was torn with the fearful clutches of her murderer. It was discovered that she had been violated and murdered.

The neighborhood was at once aflame with excitement, and search for the guilty wretch was begun. Jesse Waldrop had not long been in the county, but there had followed him rumors of his bad character. He was seen on the road near where the corpse was found on the day of the murder. In the death struggle the murderer had bitten his victim severely on the cheek and left signs that one of his front teeth was out. Waldrop had this peculiarity. With these evidences search for him was begun at once, and it was found that he had fled. Trained bloodhounds were obtained and from the scene of the murder they tracked him several miles into Georgia. Here the pursuing party learned that Waldrop had passed. Gradually tracing him, they arrived at Newnan, 30 miles from Atlanta, where a ferryman described a man who had crossed the night before, and the pursuers knew that Waldrop could not be far away. At midnight on the 3d, the party reached a house where they learned a man calling himself Owen had stopped. They demanded to be shown to his room, and, rapping on it, Waldrop came out. He was seized, and after a desperate resistance, bound. He denied all knowledge of the crime, and was taken to jail, though the fury of some of the crowd demanded his instant death.

Next day circumstances were collected so strongly and presented to him that, trembling with fear, he confessed all, and, after detailing his damning story, told of a life of crime which few police annals can equal. He confessed to having five living wives. When he confessed, passion rose so high that he was about to be swung, when some one suggested that he ought to die on the scene of his crime, and that hanging was too good for him. Accordingly he was left in jail until the next night when 50 men, armed, but not disguised, went there and demanded him. The jailor gave him up, and the procession started. All along the route people came out to look at the prisoner and demanded that he should die. Several times the excitement grew so great that it seemed it would wreak vengeance on the wretch at once, but riding by his side were relatives of the murdered woman, who guarded him and declared they had reserved him for a special fate.

Late on the afternoon of the 7th the scene of the murder was reached. Nothing was done rashly; preparations for the execution were made with ghastly coolness. Waldrop was firmly tied and bound with wire to a stake driven on the spot where his victim was found, when for the first time his dogged courage failed. He pleaded piteously, not for his life, but only to be allowed to die by the gallows or bullet; but he cried to men of stone, and at midnight one of the relatives of the unfortunate woman applied the torch to the pine which, saturated with oil, had been piled around him. His screams rang out on the quiet country air, and the flames lit up the scene with lurid glare. The death struggles were horrid, but not a man stirred. Standing in a circle around the human sacrifice, they looked with stolid indifference at the horrid expiation of his crime. From first to last, the officers made no effort to save the prisoner for a legal doom. If they had it would have been futile, for popular passion was frenzied. Waldrop was 23 years old, and a man of good address.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

WICKED FOR CLERGYMEN.—Rev. ——, Washington, D. C., writes: "I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article made of valuable remedies known to all, that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should freely commend it. I therefore cheerfully and heartily commend Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them."—New York Baptist Weekly.

An old lady writes us: "I am 65 years old and was feeble and nervous all the time, when I bought a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic. I have used little more than one bottle and feel as well as at 30, and am sure that hundreds need just such a medicine." See advertisement, a

FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE,
INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE

PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use.

If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Prepared only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

NECESSITATING A SURGICAL OPERATION—LOVING MOTHER ATTEMPTS TO TAKE A PAIR OF SHEARS FROM HER CHILD.

PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs Warner of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle. 1m22

That Line Fence.

Old Farmer Smith came home in a miff
From his field the other day,
While his sweet little wife, the pride of his life,
At her wheel was spinning away.

And ever anon a gay little song
With the buzz of her wheel kept time;
And his wrathful brow is clearing now,
Under her cheerful rhyme.

"Come, come, little Turk, put away your work,
And listen to what I say;
What can I do but a quarrel brew
With the man across the way?

"I have built my fence, but he won't commence
To lay a single rail;
His cattle get in, and the feed gets thin:
I am tempted to make a sale!"

"Why, John, dear John, how you do go on!
I'm afraid it will be as they say."
"No, no, little wife, I have heard that strife
In a lawyer's hands don't pay.

"He is picking a flaw, to drive me to law—
I am told that he said he would;
And you know, long ago, law wronged me so,
I vowed that I never should.

"So what can I do, that I will not rue,
To the man across the way?"
"If that's what you want, I can help you haunt
That man with a spectre gray.

"Thirty dollars will carry you through,
And then you have gained a neighbor;
It would cost you more to peep in the door
Of a court, and as much more labor.

"Just use your good sense—let's build him a fence,
And shame bad acts out of the fellow."
They built up his part, and sent to his heart
Love's dart, where the good thoughts mellow.

That very same night, by the candle light,
They opened with interest a letter;
Not a word was there, but three greenbacks fair
Said—the man was growing better.

SAUCY EYES.

She came smiling across the fields, her arms laden with hawthorn bloom. Harold Carleton, as he saw her, thought her the very incarnation of Spring, she was so young, so fresh, so full of exuberant vitality. Yet she was only a cottager's daughter apparently, for her dress though cheap was neat. She glanced up at him as she passed, with her great, eloquent eyes, half shyly, half mischievously.

Harold was fresh from Cambridge, and at eighteen thought himself in another sphere, even in point of age, from the rustic of thirteen. He was disposed to be patronizing.

"What's the hurry, little saucy eyes?" he said. "Stop and give a fellow a kiss."

"My name isn't Saucy Eyes, and you know it. Gentlemen," and she emphasized the word, "when they speak to me call me Miss Kent."

She had stopped for a moment to say this, and now she walked on with head erect and the air of a born princess.

"Whew!" whistled Harold, "but I've made a mess of it. No cottager's daughter has an accent like that. Who the deuce can she be? A regular little spitfire, though."

He ventured to ask the landlord about her at the small inn where he lodged. He had come to this picturesque, hilly region on a trout fishing excursion, and knew no one there.

"Oh! that's the minister's daughter," was the reply. "Had her arms full of hawthorn, you say? Yes, there's plenty of it about here; one of the few places there is. We've miles of hedges. Miss Kate was taking the bloom home to deck out the parlor. She's a rare one for flowers. You should see her decorate the church at Christmas. All the young ladies give way to her in that, though she is but a child as yet."

"If she grows up as pretty as she is now, she'll make many a fellow's heart ache," said Harold, philosophically, as he helped himself to another brook trout, and in five minutes more, so excellent was the dinner, he had forgotten all about the child.

Years passed. Harold had taken his degree and was now studying law, the profession of his father, Hugh Carleton, and his grandfather before him. Just before the Summer vacation began he had a letter from home.

"We shall certainly expect you, dear," his mother wrote, "this year, and will take no excuses. It has been two years since you were home, remember. We have had such an accession, too, to our society. Our new rector is a most excellent man, and has such a charming daughter, a very pretty girl, and so bright, intelligent and high-bred."

Now Harold, who had gone the Summer before to France and Germany, thought this year of going to Norway—had almost given his promise in fact; but at this appeal he wrote back that he would come home and spend the whole vacation at "Inglewood," for that was the name of Hugh Carleton's place.

"Dear mamma, it was so hard on her last year," he said to himself.

The very day that Harold came home the rector went away on a four weeks' visit with his wife, and the last words he said to his daughter as he got into the carriage were:

"Good-by, Katie, and don't forget to go up to 'Squire Carleton's and ask to have the gardener come to see to the garden. The 'squire told me to send for him only yesterday. With his aid we can manage to keep the garden very nice."

"I suppose I might as well go at once," said Kate, when the carriage had disappeared. "Dear old papa, I am sorry you and ma have gone; but I'm going to have lots of fun, with nobody but old Nannie to look after me," and her eyes fairly danced with the mischief of eighteen.

Harold Carleton himself was in the garden when Katie came in. He had arrived unexpectedly the night before, a week sooner than he was expected. He was fond of a little amateur gardening at times, and was just now bending over a moss rose bush, hoe in hand. His back was toward Katie, and she, supposing him to be the gardener, called out:

"Oh, Adam, that's your name I hear; please ask Mr. Carleton if he can spare you for a couple of hours this afternoon. It's Dr. Kent's, at the rectory."

Harold glanced mischievously at the pretty face half hidden by the tall lilies which she had stooped to smell as she was speaking. Here was a chance for some sport. Kate had never probably seen the new gardener, who had come only two days before. Why could not he personate the old fellow? It was fortunate for him that he had an old coat on, he thought.

So, calling Adam, he took the old man into the plot, giving him a crown for hush money; and in the afternoon made his appearance at the rectory, and knocking at the back door, asked for orders.

"Oh, Adam, is it you?" cried Kate, coming forward. "Let me show you your work. I'll put on my garden hat and be out in a minute."

Harold presented rather a curious appearance as he followed Kate down the long walk. His usually elegant attire had been exchanged for a jacket and trowsers of coarse jean; and his dark, curling hair was covered by a red wig, similar in color to Adam's fiery locks. He had assumed the same shuffling, awkward gait, also.

"Here is your work, Adam," said Kate. "Tie up the roses and then weed this bed of hyacinths, train this wistaria, and if you have any more time come to me for further orders."

Harold bowed awkwardly, while a mischievous gleam shot from the brown eyes as he proceeded to tie up the wayward roses.

"This is getting interesting," he observed. "I wonder what my next order will be? By Jove, but Miss Kate queens it well! What a perfect little beauty she is! Whew! how hot it is." He wiped the perspiration from his brow.

"I begin to understand how the original Adam must have felt when commanded to earn his living by the sweat of his brow. There, the wistaria is tied up."

"Faith, mum," he said, as Kate reappeared, "I was jist comin' to see whatever else there was to be did."

"How nice you've made things look!" cried Katie, as she glanced at the roses and wistaria. "But it's warm work, isn't it? Adam's your name, I believe. I am glad," affably, "to make your acquaintance."

"Faith, mum, but it is that same as you say," replied Adam, drawing his straw hat further down over his face, still further to hide it.

"Well, Adam, train up this hedge and then you may go," she answered, and swept away.

Several days went by. The pretended Adam never failed to be on hand in the afternoon. But in the morning Harold Carleton, in his own proper person, had fishing, boating and picnic excursions, most of which Katie attended, for by this time the 'squire's wife had called, bringing her son, and of course, after that, Katie was included in everything that was going on.

Katie, too, learned to like Harold Carleton very much, for no one more genial and wholesouled ever existed. He was generous to a fault, frank and open-hearted as the day, and had outgrown the conceit and coxcombery of his youth.

One afternoon when Katie went into the garden unexpectedly, she found Adam fanning himself with his straw hat, which was usually drawn so closely over his eyes, and she caught a quick glance that reminded her of Harold. But it was only for a moment.

He had not seen her, nor did he see her when she quietly seated herself in a vine-covered summer-house and took out some pretty, graceful work with which she soon became quite absorbed.

The long drowsy afternoon was wearing away. Nothing but the tinkle of the little brook back of the rectory, the sound of the scythe which Adam was wielding, and the murmur of the bees broke the silence of the place. Suddenly Katie's ear was arrested by a clear, manly voice, singing a bar from a favorite opera, in a rich, ringing tenor.

She started to her feet and looked out. Only last evening she had sung with Harold Carleton that very song, and this surely was his voice again. But no one was in sight except Adam, who industriously hoed peas. The truth was, Harold, ignorant of Kate's presence, had forgotten himself; but he was now furious at his indiscretion, for he had heard Katie and knew what called her out.

"Adam, has Mr. Carleton been here?" she asked. "I thought I heard him just now."

"No, mum, it's not yet that I didn't say him," said the apparently stolid Irishman.

"I was sure it was his voice," said Katie, looking just a trifle disappointed.

He would cross-examine Katie a little and thus discover her real feeling toward himself. So he asked, carelessly, though his whole heart was in her answer:

"Did yees wish to say him, miss? For it's mesilf as will be after sindin' the likes of him to yees."

"No," said Katie, decidedly. "Stop talking and go to work. I am afraid you are getting lazy," and Katie walked off with her most queenly step.

"Whew!" whistled Harold. "She's too bright to be caught in that way. Thinks Adam will tell on her. Getting lazy, am I? Well, it ain't because I don't work hard enough," with a doleful gaze at his blistered hands, as he set vigorously to work, adding, "Even as Adam, I must win the good opinion of my Eve."

The next afternoon Katie went to call on a friend, and Harold discontentedly watched her departure. It was so pleasant to know that she was in the summer-house or about the grounds that he did not like her to go away.

He did not notice her return, nor that she came to the arbor soon after. But when he had finished his last order he threw himself down on a mossy seat, and, tossing his wig off, began fanning vigorously with his straw hat.

"I can't wear that counfounded wig any longer," he exclaimed. "It's color even is enough to set me on fire. Now, this is refreshing. Beppo, you scamp, bring back that wig. What if your mistress should come? Whew! Must I chase after that dog this hot day?"

Beppo, Katie's dog, had run off with the wig, as the reader has conjectured, and on chase being given to him, rushed to the summer-house and laid the wig at his mistress' feet.

"Why, Beppo, what have you there?" she cried. "It looks like the scalp of old Adam. I wonder if—"

And she broke into a fit of ringing laughter as she met the astonished Harold face to face.

"Mr. Carleton!"

"Miss Katie!"

Then, unable to resist it, he also broke into a hearty laugh.

"Oh! so you're not Adam," said Katie, demurely, at last.

"No, but I will be if you'll only be my Eve!" he cried, with a touch of his old boyish impudence. "Oh, Katie! Miss Kent, darling, I've learned to love you so dearly—say you will. We'll make another paradise where we can be happy together, and I shan't be obliged to work so hard," breaking into laughter as he saw Katie's roguish look, and wiping his dripping forehead.

"Very well," said Katie; "I'll think of it. But you must remember that it was not a woman who made trouble in the garden this time." And she added, archly, "But I'll forgive you for deceiving me if you will forgive me for—for—"

"For what?" asked Harold as she hesitated.

"For not letting you know before that I guessed your secret. I knew from the beginning that you were not Adam. That first day when I pretended to be smelling the lilies I had seen you were, at least, not a gardener."

"And you let me work all this time, and it so hot?" with a crestfallen look.

"Yes. You deserved it for your trick. But I am glad you can work and obey orders. You may have to do so some time, you know."

"Every man has, they say, when he falls in love," he retorted.

"Yes," she said, saucily, "and you mustn't hope to be an exception. But there, there, isn't that quite enough?" for he was devouring her with kisses. "I declare, you're as impudent as you were five years ago."

"Five years ago!"

"Yes. Oh! you've forgotten. Men always do. It is only women who remember."

"What do you mean?"

Her eyes danced with mischief. She was enjoying his perplexity to the full.

"Well, I'll tell you a fairy tale. Once on a time—there, stop now, or I'll never get on—there was a little girl coming across a field with her arms full of hawthorn bloom."

He gave a quick start. Katie went on demurely—

"And she met an impudent young fellow, a collegian, who thought himself a prince, but wasn't, and he called her 'saucy eyes,' the conceited—"

"What! you are 'saucy eyes,' are you? Oh! I remember it all. Who'd have thought it? Why, it is the jolliest fairy tale I ever heard. Only then she wouldn't let me kiss her, and now—"

"Now somebody will get his ears boxed if he does not behave himself. One must draw the line somewhere, and half a hundred, surely—"

"Well, since you are so cruel. But when did you first recognize me?"

"The first day I saw you at leisure—the day you called with your mother."

"And," said Harold, reflectively, "there was always something in your face I thought familiar. Yes, after all, you are SAUCY EYES."

A PORTABLE GARDEN.

Every one has a garden called Conversation. If the unpleasant words which blossom into thoughts are kept out, the garden becomes beautiful and interesting. There are a few kinds of weeds, which unconsciously creep into this garden, and unless they are put down, or, better, pulled out, they injure and spoil the good flowers.

1. Untruth. This is dark-leaved and so small at first that it is scarcely noticed. In its early stages it is called exaggeration. You are not sure whether you saw three or four things, and you say four. The next time the number becomes larger and so the weed grows until it is strong and hardy. Be sure and pull it up.

2. Slang. This spoils many a garden of choice flowers. It is sometimes overlooked among boys, but is not considered to have any beauty.

3. Bad grammar. This is a common weed found in the gardens of uneducated and careless persons. It grows slowly, but steadily, and finds a place beside the nicest-looking flowers. There are a number of varieties and among them are "I seen," which chokes up "I saw," or "I have seen;" "it's her'n," which crowds out "it is hers," and "it is me," which grows close to the little plant "it is I."

4. Gossip. Every one knows this ugly weed which works mischief wherever it appears. It is one of the worst varieties, and has been known to completely overrun and spoil the gardens in which it was allowed to grow.

These are the principal weeds which find their way into the garden of conversation. Examine the one belonging to you and see what weeds are gaining headway.—Scholar's Companion.

AN AMAZING FISH STORY.

A rich proprietor at the interior had made to establish a pond artificial, where found themselves agglomerated 3000 trouts.

This proprietor is the father of a girling of five to six.

She had taken the habitude to go each morning to give to eat to the trouts, at the aid of crumbs of bread.

These fishes were become so entamed that they skipped out of the water for to attrap the crumbs which the infant held in the crevice of her hand.

It arrived one day that she lost her equilibrium, and she fell the head first in the pond, of which the water was enough profound.

At the cries emitted by the girling the father was run himself.

But what horror! He saw his infant extended without movement at the surface, where she floated as a cork.

What was not the surprise of the father in seeing that she had been supported by a mass compact of trouts.

The fishes had arranged themselves under her body as to sustain and prevent her from to drown.

If this history is truthful, the fishes are not so much deprived of the intelligence as one pleased himself to believe.—San Francisco Chronicle.

It may not, perhaps, be known that a man wearing dark clothes is more liable to infection from contagious diseases than he who wears light-colored garments, because particles which emanate from diseased or decaying bodies are much more readily absorbed by dark than by light fabrics. This is easy of proof. Expose a light and dark coat to the fumes of tobacco for five minutes, and it will be found that the dark one smells stronger than the other of tobacco smoke, and it will retain the odor longer.—London Truth.

A rather verdant young man, conceited and censorious, while talking to a young lady at a party, pointed towards a couple that he supposed to be in another room, and said, "Just look at the conceited young prig! Isn't it perfectly absurd for such boys to go into society?" "Why," exclaimed his companion, "that isn't a door; it's a mirror!"

A toper stood in front of a type foundry, the other day, spelling out the sign as follows: "Type, F-o-u-n, foun, d-r-y, dry, foun' dry. Tha's jes' my condish'n. I'm that sort of a type myself—foun' dry."

A drunken man, after pitching headlong down a flight of stone steps, said to another man who attempted to assist him, "G'way! g'way! That'sh way I always come down."

Up in Middlesex county it is so quiet that a train of thought can be felt to jar the whole trestlework of the vicinity.—New Haven Register.

"Millicent wants to know what is good for a bad breath." Try onions, dear; but why do you want a bad breath?

A Short-Sighted Father.

A farmer had seven daughters,
And but little else he had;
The girls all had good appetites,
And times were very bad.

He bribed the country paper
To say in his cellar's mould
He had hidden, being a miser,
Seven kegs of pure, bright gold.

He thought he knew human nature,
That farmer, and he smiled
When down the seventh rope ladder he Saw elope his seventh child.

But it's extremely doubtful
If at the time he foresaw
Their return with his fourteen grandchildren
And seven sons-in-law.

HAD NO FUN IN HIM.

One of the members of the Methodist Conference held here was out for a walk at an early hour one morning, and while on Howard street he encountered a strapping big fellow, who was drawing a wagon to the blacksmith shop.

"Catch hold here and help me down to the shop with this wagon and I'll buy the whisky," called the big fellow.

"I never drink," solemnly replied the good man.

"Well, you can take a cigar."

"I never smoke."

The man dropped the wagon-tongue, looked hard at the member and asked:

"Don't you chew?"

"No, sir," was the decided reply.

"You must get mighty lonesome," mused the teamster.

"I guess I'm all right, I feel first rate."

"I'll bet you even that I can lay you on your back," remarked the teamster.

"I never bet," replied the clergyman.

"Come, now, let's warm up a little."

"I am in a hurry."

"Well, let's take each other down for fun, then. You are as big as I am, and I'll give you the under hold."

"I never have fun," solemnly replied the member.

"Well, I'm going to tackle you any way. Here we go."

The teamster slid up and endeavored to get a back hold, but he had only just commenced to fool about, when he was lifted clear off the grass and slammed against a tree box with such force that he gasped half a dozen times before he could catch his breath.

"Now, you keep away from me," exclaimed the minister, picking up his cane.

"Bust me if I don't," replied the teamster as he edged off. "What's the use in lying and saying that you didn't have any fun in you when you are chuck full of it. You wanted to break my back, didn't you?"—Detroit Free Press.

CLERICAL ORATORY.

Why do not our preachers study oratory? As preachers, not pastors, their business is to work a certain effect, and all helps to its production it should be a part of their education to learn. I presume I shall not be misunderstood to mean the effect of displaying self, and winning admiration for personal gifts. What the true preacher seeks to do is to inform the intellect with Christian truth; to stir the heart, and thereby influence the will of his hearers. Half the sermons annually preached are, so far as human insight goes, a waste of labor and breath. Two things partly account for this: one is that a majority of the men set to preach are out of their real vocation,—good pastors they may be, but fit preachers they are not; another is that those with more aptitude for preaching do not yet understand the means to be employed to attain their object.

Sometimes the preacher has some conception of the needs of human nature, and knows that the truest truths fail to move when put before men in a dull, dry way; perhaps he does his best to acquire a good style, and succeeds in making an ably-written discourse. But when he comes into his pulpit to give it to his people, where is the impression it should produce? What becomes of his choice words, his considered sentences? There they lie upon the page he holds; he proceeds to read them. Why do they fail of any result? It is for want of delivery, of the oratorical art of making mere words "tell." His faithful effort goes for little; he seems to his hearers to be reading something to them, as he is,—not to be speaking to them from the heart.—August Atlantic.

ANTS AS FRUIT-GROWERS' FRIENDS.

Many of the leading orchard proprietors in Northern Italy and Southern Germany are cultivators of the common black ant, an insect they hold in high esteem as the fruit-growers' best friend. They establish ant hills in their orchards, and leave the police service of their fruit trees entirely to the tiny colonists, which pass all their time in climbing up the stems of the fruit trees, cleansing their boughs and leaves of malefactors, mature as well as embryotic, and descending laden with spoils to the ground, where they comfortably consume or prudently store away their booty. They never meddle with sound fruit, but only invade such apples, pears and plums as have already been penetrated by the canker, which they remorselessly pursue to its fastnesses within the very heart of the fruit. Nowhere are apple and pear trees so free from blight and destructive insects as in the immediate neighborhood of a large ant-hill five or six years old. The favorite food of ants would appear to be the larvæ and pupæ of those creatures which spend the whole of their brief existence in devouring the tender shoots and juvenile leaves of fruit trees.—Prairie Farmer.

THE SECRET OF ADVERTISING.

Some merchants use but very little judgment about advertising. So long as they have an "ad" in some paper, paying for it, they think it is sufficient, and trust to luck for consequences. They shut their eyes and discharge their gun in the air, and wait for the game to drop. They are for duck and get crow. Advertising requires as much good judgment as any other part of a merchant's business. Judicious advertising always pays. There are some business men who seldom advertise, and they are always complaining about their trade. They treat advertising as the improvident, shiftless fellows do roofs. When the sun shines they do not need patching; and when it rains they cannot patch them. When trade is fair they see no need of advertising; and when trade is dull they say they cannot afford to advertise. Moral: Repair a leaky roof when it is fair weather; and advertise in all seasons. Advertising pays all parties interested better than any other commercial investment.

WOMEN AND WINE.

A writer in Scribner's Monthly uses the following strong language, which will be responded to by all the women who have suffered all over the land:

"Of the worst foes that women have ever had to contend with, wine stands at the head. The appetite for strong drink in men has spoiled the lives of more women—ruined more hopes for them, scattered more fortunes for them, brought to them more shame, sorrow and hardship—than any other evil that lives. The country numbers tens of thousands—nay, hundreds of thousands of women who are widows to-day, and sit in hopeless weeds, because their husbands had been slain by strong drink."

"Yes," says the Agricultural World, "there are hundreds of thousands of homes scattered all over the land, in which women live lives of torture, going through all the changes of suffering that lie between the extremes of fear and despair, because those whom they love, love wine better than they do the woman they have sworn to love. There are women by the thousands who dread to hear at the door the step that once thrilled them with pleasure: that step has learned to reel under the influence of the seductive poison. There are women groaning with pain, while we write these words, from bruises and brutalities inflicted by husbands made mad by drink. There can be no exaggeration in any statement made in regard to this matter, because no human imagination can create anything worse than the truth, and no pen is capable of portraying the truth. The sorrows of a wife with a drunken son, are as near the realization of hell as can be reached, in this world at least. The shame, the indignation, the sorrow, the sense of disgrace for herself and her children, the poverty—and not unfrequently the beggary—the fear and the fact of violence, the lingering, life-long struggle and despair of countless women with drunken husbands, are enough to make all women curse wine, and engage unitedly to oppose it everywhere as the worst enemy of their sex."

CONFIDENCE IN EVERYTHING.

Trust your wife as implicitly as she trusts you; it is her due. Many really affectionate men lead, as far as their wives are concerned, a double life. Of that which is not domestic they think it right to say nothing. Some grievous troubles may be upon them—dread of failure, certainty of loss, remorse for some mistake which has plunged them into anxiety; and they make no sign of it save by a change of manner, which to the women, who are ignorant that they have any cares, is incomprehensible. The wife would gladly be sympathetic, but when a frowning brow, silence, and a lack of the usual caresses are all the tokens that she has of her liege lord's trouble, all her boasted intuition cannot keep her from flying to the conclusion that it is a personal matter—that she is no longer loved, or that he loves some one else. And I believe much domestic misery has been caused in the first place by the man's secretiveness when he had no secrets which might not have been shared by his wife. You may say, why should he talk to one who cannot understand or give counsel—to a being with such vague ideas of stocks, and banking and speculation, that she can only wonder why things have gone wrong? Well, there are many reasons: the woman who holds him dear will give him more sympathy than any other living being, for one thing; and he needs sympathy, whether he knows it or not. And then she has her rights, for she is a partner in a firm of two, and the books should not be closed to her. She is mate of the vessel in which he is captain, and surely should know what shoals are near; and, moreover, if you love her, you do not want to make her miserable. Trust her. You will never regret it, and never find a more tender confidante.

Once get a man upon the rails of doubt and you can draw him on as far as you please. It is interesting to see a man go on doubting in the style I once followed. I doubted everything, till at last I doubted my own existence. Now, I have at least a little lump of common sense, and I laughed outright at myself when I got as far as that, and the ridiculousness of the situation brought me back again to believe. To run right on to the reducto ad absurdum, and prove the absurdity of your own unbelief, is a very useful method of bringing a doubting spirit to a measure of belief.—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

It is remarkable what little bites a woman takes when eating in the presence of her sweetheart. What a little mouth she has then! but wait until wash-day comes. Watch her when she goes to hang up clothes and gets in a hurry. By the time she gets the big end of fifteen clothes-pins in her mouth, you will begin to think that it is a pretty good-sized hearty mouth, after all.

"Pat," said a traveler, "why did you make the stone wall around your shanty so thick?" "Why, please yer honor, I hear they have extraordinary high winds in Ameriky, so I thought if I built it as thick as it was high, if it should blow over it would be just as high as it was afore, yer honor."

When you speak evil of another, you must be prepared to have others speak evil of you. There is an old Buddhist proverb which says: "He who indulges in enmity is like one who throws ashes to the windward, which come back to the same place and cover him all over."

A pretty girl out West told her beau that she was a mind-reader. "You don't say so!" he exclaimed. "Yes," said she, "you have it in mind to ask me to be your wife, but you are just a little scared at the idea." Their wedding cards are out.

A worthy deacon, in a town not far away, gave notice at a prayer-meeting the other night of a church meeting that was to be held immediately after, and unconsciously added: "There is no objection to the female brethren remaining?"

Men are frequently like tea—the real strength and goodness are not properly drawn out until they have been in hot water.

Model wives formerly took "a stitch in time;" now, with the aid of sewing machines, they take one in no time.

Indigestion has comically been defined as "the ingratitude of the stomach."

Some people tell about life, some study life and some live.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 20, 1881.

SECRETARY WINDOM offers to pay upon presentation the outstanding 5 per cent bonds maturing Oct. 1.

COL. JAMES G. BENTON, commandant at the Springfield armory for the past 15 years, died early Tuesday morning, after a brief illness, at the age of 60 years.

THERE is no let-up in the railroad war yet, and none seems likely for the present. The people can stand it as long as the railroads, certainly, and are improving the opportunity for cheap traveling quite generally.

IT is whispered that ex-Gov. Tilden has the Presidential fever again, and is planning to arrange things so he can secure the nomination three years hence, by putting his friends into the State offices to be filled this Fall, and taking the Governorship himself next year. This is a very nice little plan, if it can be made to work, of which there may be some reasonable doubt, however.

AUGUST has brought a partial relief to the White Mountain hotel keepers, whose faces were terribly elongated as they surveyed their large array of empty rooms in the early part of the season. The mountains are now full of tourists, but the season will be a short one, and very likely a profitless one as well. The landlords have yet much to learn in the way of attracting people by lower prices, and the quicker they learn it the sooner will their pockets fill up.

THERE should be no further hesitation in according to our colored brethren an ability in the affairs of life fully equal to that of the white man. Whatever doubts may have existed on this point heretofore were shaken by the fall of Cadet Whittaker's ears, and are now wholly dispelled by the announcement that Lieut. Flipper, the one colored army officer, has been arrested in Texas for defrauding the government out of some $5000. This settles it. Only give the colored man a chance, and he will take care of himself, evidently.

THE "council" of Irishmen over which O'Donovan Rossa presides has issued a proclamation warning peaceably disposed persons to avoid English ships after Sept. 1, as they are all to be blown to smithereens after that date. The "council" is undertaking a big job, and is very kind to warn people of its bloody intentions. Its threats will of course lead to the exercise of greater care than usual in receiving freight for these vessels, and there is little likelihood of any of them being blown up. Should the plotters succeed in destroying a vessel or two, however, their public career would probably be brought to a termination so suddenly as to take their breath away, nevermore to return.

THE Massachusetts Greenbackers are first in the field with their State ticket, their convention at Worcester Wednesday resulting in the nomination of the following officers: For governor, Israel W. Andrews of Danvers; lieutenant governor, Geo. Dutton of Springfield; treasurer, George Foster of Lynn; secretary of state, A. B. Brown of Worcester; auditor, Wilbur T. Whitney of Ashburnham; attorney general, D. O. Allen of Lynn. The resolutions denounce the Republican and Democratic parties, the banks, railroads, and corporations generally, and want a general overthrow of the existing state of affairs, while they declare that all persons are entitled to the right of suffrage, regardless of race, color, sex or taxes, and demand that the government shall take charge of the telegraphs and furnish all the news free to the press and people. We suppose the Greenbackers enjoy getting together once a year and publishing to the world their conglomeration of vagaries, and as long as this is all they can accomplish, nobody will grudge them this modicum of happiness.

The Sioux chiefs at Washington have agreed to give the Poncas, who wish to remain on their old grounds, a generous amount of land to enable them to do so. They will cede to the United States 640 acres of land for every family and every unmarried man of 21, out of the old Ponca reservation. When the consent of three-quarters of the Sioux and the ratification of Congress are secured, the Poncas will be ceded the land by the United States.

The citizens of Westfield, Staten Island, held an exciting meeting last Saturday, on receipt of news concerning the unfavorable change in President Garfield's condition, and were so wrought up that every man present pledged himself under oath to proceed to Washington at his own expense, in case the President died, and take part in any movement that might be organized to avenge the chief magistrate's death.

The Massachusetts peach crop will be the largest known for decades, and the lightness of the southern crop has made the product of the native orchards extremely valuable. Agents are engaging the products of the orchards in advance, the purchasers to run all risk of frost. One Worcester county man has sold his peach crop on the trees for $1000, and others have made similar sales.

Charles P. Clark, late general manager of the New York and New England Railroad, is appointed manager of the New York, New Haven and Hartford road.

Seven wholesale houses at Evansville, Ind., were burned, with their contents, Wednesday, causing a loss of $200,000. One fireman was killed.

The Kentucky whisky product this year will, it is said, be not more than half that of last year. Lack of water has dwarfed the corn.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD DYING.

The news from Washington this week has been of the gravest description, and there now remains no hope of the President's recovery. He is lying at death's door, and the announcement that he is dead may be expected at any moment. His stomach, which gave out last week, refusing to receive food of any description, has resumed its functions, and for a few days has taken and assimilated a good quantity of liquid nourishment. This has been the one hopeful symptom, and the only one. The swelling of the parotid gland has baffled every effort of the physicians to overcome it, and on Wednesday it was lanced, the operation giving some relief to the sufferer. But it was only temporary. There was only a slight discharge of pus, the inflammation continued, and the physicians were forced to admit that they could not draw the pus to the opening. The pus, now of an unhealthy character, is burrowing its way into all parts of the gland, and this burrowing abscess is sapping the President's life. His strength is failing, his mind is wandering and beclouded, his fever rages unabated, his sleep is fretful and broken, and his vitality is gone. This is the whole sad story. On Wednesday night a consultation of the physicians was held to consider the question of removing him from the White House, in accordance with his earnest desire, as a last resort, but the risk was considered too great in his exhausted condition, and on Thursday evening Mrs. Garfield was informed that there was no longer any reasonable grounds for hope of his recovery.

H. H. Faxon of Quincy, the wide-awake temperance agitator who was in the spring appointed a special constable to enforce the liquor law in that town, by vote of the town, and who did his work so well, apparently, that the selectmen dismissed him, has published a pithy statement of his doings as an officer, in which he charges some of the selectmen with sympathy with the liquor sellers, and shows how they have attempted to aid them. He believes that "with honest officials, who are bound to do their duty, 60 per cent of the woe and misery which are now the result of the traffic can be stopped," and that, when officials say the laws cannot be enforced, "they are cowards and unfit to fill the positions into which, in most instances, they have forced themselves." Doubtless many voted for Faxon as a good joke, with no idea that he would do anything, but he has shown that he can act as well as preach, and do both in a manner that is decidedly discomfiting to the liquor men.

There has been a terrible amount of gambling at Hartford this week, faro establishments and banco players being in full blast in various parts of the city, drawn there by the races, while thieves have plied their calling extensively. Harvey Hills, a man over 70 years of age, was found dead in the parlor of a boarding house Thursday, and it is reported that he was enticed into the room by gamblers, who fleeced him out of $50, whereupon he became greatly excited and dropped dead.

True heroism was displayed the other day by a Chicago boy of 16 named Rust. While out boating with his younger brother near Ashland, Wis., a storm came up. Neither of the lads could swim, but the older one unhesitatingly fastened the only life-preserver in the boat about his brother, and then met his own fate as the craft upset.

An inebriated well-digger in Yorkshire, Eng., recently committed suicide by exploding a dynamite cartridge in his mouth. Tongue, maxillary bones, palate and teeth were all blown to pieces; yet, strange to say, the skin of the cheeks and lips remained unbroken and there was little to show externally the cause of death.

The Douglas monument and sarcophagus erected at Chicago at a cost of about $75,000 is now receiving its finishing touches. The body of Douglas reposes within the sarcophagus in an iron casket. The marble of which the sarcophagus is made came from Rutland, Vt., Mr. Douglas's native county.

Now that the main exhibition building at Philadelphia has been sold the Philadelphians are repenting of its sale, and a number of business men have stepped forward with five thousand dollar subscriptions to rally the people for a final effort to save this great relic of the Centennial Exposition.

There is a large list of entries for the races at Springfield next week, and the managers are confident that they will have a far better series of contests than they would had they remained in the circuit, while the reduced price of admission will naturally draw a much larger crowd.

The Catholic Telegraph thinks that, if the Roman Catholic Church had retained all its children, there would now be in this country from 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 members of that church, whereas there are less than 7,000,000. It attributes the great loss to the influence of the public schools.

Lucius Witham, of Readsboro, Vt., was fatally shot, through the window of his room, when about to retire Monday night, by some unknown party. A neighbor with whom he had quarreled is suspected of carrying out his threat to take his life.

A member of the British Parliament is about going to India to investigate the grain-producing properties of the soil, so as, if possible, to render England independent of Russia and the United States in the matter of breadstuffs.

At the Hartford races Wednesday "Little Brown Jug" beat the record for pacers, doing a mile in 2.11¾. Maud S. has gone lame and will not appear, and Troubadour broke a ligament and is probably ruined.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Milligan's bankrupt stock of boots and shoes is being well patronized. People are astonished at such low prices.

A. E. Park has a choice lot of Northern Butter. Now is the time to select a tub. Also, a very complete stock of fancy and common Table Ware. Take Notice—Every piece of Maddox Granite Ware warranted not to craze.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Have you seen the comet yet?

The dog star seems to be in a very cool mood this year.

S. M. Smith advertises his house on South Main street for sale.

Mrs. H. H. Sanders has been visiting friends in Hartford this week.

There has been quite a suggestion of frost in the night air for the past week or two.

The Boston & Albany Railroad expects to open its fine new station at Boston next Monday.

Principal George W. Calkins, of the Catskill, N. Y., academy, is visiting in town with his family.

Rev. Samuel A. Read of West Brattleboro, Vt., will preach at the Baptist church Sunday afternoon.

Dwight E. Graves, clerk in Brooks's jewelry store, has gone to Niantic, Ct., for a two weeks' vacation.

Cyrus Hamilton and wife, with Miss Carrie Fox, are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Fox at West Woodstock, Conn.

Daniel Clough and J. W. Hills of Lamoille, Ill., are visiting friends in this vicinity. Mr. Clough was a former resident of Ludlow.

The wooden buildings between Cross's Block and the Tockwotton House have been treated to a fresh coat of paint this week.

Tax Collector Northrop has received about $26,000 from the taxpayers in the last two weeks, leaving some $9000 still to be paid.

There was considerable drunken rowdyism on the street Wednesday night after the dance. Our officers had better not go to bed quite so early.

A special train of five drawing room cars passed through Palmer Wednesday noon, conveying a party of Boston excursionists to Saratoga.

B. B. Tiffany of Pennsylvania, a former head farmer at the State Primary School, and an old Monson soldier, is visiting friends in this vicinity.

David A. Hoag, the contractor and builder, died on Monday after an illness of about three weeks. His body was taken to Wilbraham for burial.

Dwight Smith of Springfield is running Conductor Warner's train on the Ware River road, during the latter's absence on account of a carbuncle.

The mystic R is looming up near at hand, and it will only be a few days now before the timidest of timid people can eat their oysters in perfect safety.

The trot between Messrs. Holbrook and Thompson's horses will come off on the park this afternoon at 3 o'clock. There will also be a foot race between the heats.

The directors of the agricultural society will hold a meeting next Monday afternoon, to make preliminary arrangements for the approaching exhibition of the society.

A night blooming cereus belonging to Mrs. C. A. Brown unfolded three handsome blossoms Monday evening, whose beauty and fragrance were enjoyed by a large number of visitors.

The friends of Thomas McDonnell, who was thought to be dying with consumption last winter, are gratified to see him once more on the street with a fair prospect of a return to health.

George Rice has resigned his clerkship in the freight office of the New London Northern road in this place, to accept a position in the office of the Fitchburg Railroad at Gardner. He is succeeded here by Fred Allen.

S. A. Andrews, supervisor at the State Primary School, started Wednesday night for Johnson, Vt., on a vacation trip; and Stillman Baker, night watchman at the institution, is tanning his skin cruising around New York.

Geo. W. Marchant and J. W. Brigham, who recently made an assignment to R. L. Goddard, have moved to their old home at Minneapolis, Minn., and it is probable that their hat shop will remain closed the coming season.

The few Boston & Albany engineers who failed to pass the recent tests made with yarns of various hues for color blindness, are to have another chance, the trial this time to be a practical test with the lights used at depots and switches.

Tomatoes are scarce and high, it being sort of "between hay and grass" with them, as the southern crop is exhausted, and the supply from Jersey is not equal to the demand. The native fruit will soon be in market, however, and there will probably be enough of it to meet all demands.

The Sunday school of St. Thomas' church will hold their annual picnic in Dewey's Grove next week Saturday. There will be swinging and other sports for the children, and the older people can amuse themselves by dancing. Refreshments of a temperate nature can be obtained on the grounds.

The excursion from Ware to New London last Saturday reached here about 9.10 p. m. on its way home. The engine which was to take them up on the Ware road had met with a mishap, and they were obliged to wait until one could be sent out from Springfield, and so did not leave here until 11.45 p. m.

There will be no preaching at the Congregational church to-morrow. The pulpit was occupied last Sunday by C. W. Huntington of West Brookfield, a recent graduate of Andover, who has just accepted a call to Ellsworth, Me. Rev. S. S. Martyn of New Haven will occupy the pulpit a week from Sunday.

An excursion to Newport has been arranged for to-day by the New London Northern Railroad, leaving Palmer at 6.42 a. m. and at New London connecting with the steamer City of Boston. This will be a good chance to enjoy a sail through the Sound, as well as a visit to the famous summer resort on the Rhode Island coast. The fare is $1.75.

The directors of the Boston & Albany Railroad at their last meeting considered a proposition to lease the New York, New Haven & Hartford road for 99 years, at an annual rental of nine per cent. It is understood that Mr. Vanderbilt was in favor of the proposition, but the rental was considered too high, and it was voted not to make the lease at that figure.

Mrs. W. H. Clark, formerly a well known and successful music teacher in this place, is meeting with great sucess at Newberry, S. C., her present residence, and in that vicinity. Her little daughter, three years old, is reported to have quite a remarkable musical talent for one of her years, and has already made her appearance in public at the piano.

The lawn dance at the Weeks House Wednesday evening under the auspices of the band was liberally patronized, and netted the band about $20. The musicians' platform broke down from overloading during the evening, but fortunately without injury to anybody. The next dance in the series is to be held at the same place next Wednesday evening.

The schools in town will begin their Fall term next Monday, with the exception of those in this village, which will have to wait a few weeks for the completion of the alterations in the school house. The building is now about ready for the plasterers, and the committee hope to have it in readiness for the schools to resume about the 20th of September. The school at Blanchardville will delay its session to correspond with the schools in the village.

The ladies of a Main street residence were very sure there were burglars in the house the other evening, when they returned after a brief absence and found a light burning where they had left none. A lively search followed, and when they had looked everywhere except in the one place where a woman is supposed to look first upon retiring to her chamber, they at last peered under the bed, and were rewarded by the discovery of the "burglar," a mischievous boarder who thought he would have a little fun.

A lady in this place who wanted to take the Ware train last Saturday evening displayed considerable pedestrianic ability in accomplishing her purpose. She was in front of the post office when the train started, and sailed across the common at a rattling pace, reaching the train between the tank house and freight depot, and with rare thoughtfulness waiting until the rear end of the passenger car came along, when she jumped on with a grace and ease which would put to shame the efforts of most men in a similar direction.

The utility of the patent safety switches in use on the Boston & Albany road was demonstrated in a very satisfactory manner at West Brimfield the other day. A switch on the south track had been carelessly left turned after the departure of a freight train, and the first afternoon express east thundered past the station at full speed before the mistake was discovered, the patent switch carrying the train safely over the break, where there must have been a frightful accident but for its use. The station agent, who is responsible for the switches, has been suspended.

A party of hunters went over to the Wilimansett plains Wednesday in search of plover, but did not find many. One of the party got up early and fed the horse they had engaged at the stable, so as not to disturb the hostler, and in due time they drove away. When the hostler got around he found that they had gone to the wrong stall, and taken a transient horse which had been left at the stable for the night. He accordingly had to hitch up and start after them, and after a lengthy hunt for the hunters he finally came upon them in the borders of Ludlow, and effected a change of animals.

The first and only chance to be offered this season to visit Lake Pleasant in the evening and return the same night, will be given to-night, when the New London Northern road will run a special train to the Lake, returning after the fireworks. The train will leave Palmer at 6.10 p. m., arriving at the Lake at 7.34, and the fare for the round trip will be 75 cents from Palmer and Three Rivers, and 80 cents from Monson, from which station passengers will come up on the regular train at 5.37. The evening at the Lake will give a fine opportunity to witness the illumination, dancing and fireworks. The return train will leave the Lake at 11 o'clock, and run through to Monson.

The annual meeting of the Improvement Association was held in the district court room Wednesday evening, and these officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, Dr. Wm. Holbrook; vice presidents, J. B. Shaw, S. W. French; secretary, S. H. Hellyar; treasurer, E. Brown; executive committee, Stillman Ellis, J. W. Weeks, Dr. W. H. Stowe, J. S. Holden, R. L. Goddard, C. B. Fisk, H. H. Sanders, Geo. Robinson, M. W. French, Mrs. H. P. Holden, Mrs. J. F. Holbrook, Mrs. C. L. Gardner, Mrs. S. S. Taft, Mrs. E. L. Davis, Mrs. A. H. Willis. Another meeting of the association is to be held at the district court room, next Monday evening, at 7.30 o'clock, and it is earnestly hoped that every member of the association will make an effort to be present, without fail, to act upon one or two questions to be brought before the meeting.

O. W. Studley missed a $5 gold piece from his cash drawer last Saturday evening, and it was soon traced by Sheriff Palmer to one of our saloons, where it had been presented by Oscar Dix, a fireman on the New London Northern Railroad. On Monday morning Dix found a girl at the depot who gave her name as Lulu Mitchell, of Pittsfield, who said she wanted to go to Amherst, but had no money. Dix proposed to help her along to her destination, and while waiting for the train invited her over to one of our hotels, where he asked for a room, but was refused. Nothing daunted, he waited his opportunity, and during the temporary absence of the clerk slipped into a chamber with his companion. When it was discovered that they had helped themselves to a room word was sent to Mr. Palmer, and they were both arrested. Dix, in trying to explain how the gold piece came into his possession, spoke of disposing of a watch at Amherst, and this led to a search which revealed the fact that the watch had been stolen from Pat. Watts a couple of weeks ago. When Dix was arraigned, there was accordingly quite a damaging array of complaints and evidence against him. Judge Robinson fined him $10 and costs for stealing the $5 gold piece, which he could not pay, and bound him over to the December term of court to answer to the charges of adultery and larceny of a watch. This will give him several weeks for meditation upon his wicked ways, behind the bars, before his cases come to trial. The girl was arraigned for fornication, but told such a pitiful story that she was let off on payment of costs, and was required to furnish sureties in the sum of $50 for her appearance as a witness next December, which sum was furnished by the sympathizing bystanders.

THREE RIVERS.

The pulpit of the Baptist church will be occupied Sunday morning by Rev. S. A. Read, of West Brattleboro, Vt.

WEST WARREN.

A 30-foot snake is said to make its home in Louis Gravell's swamp, and of course everybody believes it.

Ground has been broken for a new mill on the site of the old shoddy mill, and the dam is receiving some needed repairs.

The Methodists resumed services in their church last Sunday, and on Thursday evening had a pleasant literary and ice cream social.

The new band was reorganized last week, in order to remove some differences among its members, and a more harmonious organization is expected now.

The Emmett base ball club cleared nearly $50 by its dance in Crossman's Hall last week. A good deal of disturbance was created by roughs during the night.

There is talk of putting a sail boat on Wickaboag pond, West Brookfield, and running a 'bus out there from this village on moonlight evenings.

LUDLOW.

Rev. E. B. Clark of Chicopee is expected to preach at the school house in district No. 3 to-morrow afternoon.

D. W. Sikes last week shot two eagles near the reservoir, and is having one of them mounted. It weighed nearly 14 pounds, and measures 7 feet and one inch from tip to tip.

Rev. S. V. McDuffee is spending his vacation in New Hampshire, stopping at Northfield on the coming Sabbath. The First Congregational church in this town will accordingly be closed to-morrow.

The valuation of the town is $734,657, and the rate of taxation, which last year was $15 on $1000, is only $8.50 this year. The Ludlow mills pay $2144, J. M. White $128, and Lucius Simonds $102.

WALES.

Allie A. Hubbard is now off on a vacation.

Charles Andrews and family of Worcester are visiting their friends here.

Miss Nellie Needham of New York had her ankle quite badly sprained Tuesday by being thrown from a carriage.

Warren Shaw was made richer by about 20 lbs. of pickerel as the result of a few hours' fishing one day this week.

While riding out with two young ladies, Fred. Cady's horse stumbled and fell in front of E. D. Shaw's mill, throwing the occupants out, but with no serious injury. A new shaft will repair the damage.

The Wales ball club are quite excited about their last game with the Palmer club, inasmuch as they claim that it was the Palmers who refused to play out the game and left the ground instead of themselves. Last week's report of the game seems to be correct, however, and in accordance with the decision of the umpire.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The schools commence Sept. 5.

Miss Lizzie Vanhoosier has a new piano, from Mrs. Hutchins' warerooms in Springfield.

Cutler & Co. have put in a new 44-inch Victor water wheel, in place of an old one which will be discarded.

Dennis Powers is at work digging the cellar for his house on the "Street" road, which he will build immediately.

Michael Austin and Michael Rock got up a picnic in Lane's Grove last Saturday, which proved a success. Mr. Austin furnished music, and they had dancing in the evening on a floor constructed for the purpose.

It is understood that there are several parties trying to purchase building lots in the village, but $850 to $1500 per acre is more than they are willing to pay. Until the land holders are satisfied to take reasonable prices, the village is not likely to grow much.

The weekly fishing continues without interest, and we understand the committee are about to relax their vigilance, as but one person has caught his ten pounds during the season. It is hoped the town will not spend any more money in raising fish, as this venture has proved a failure.

BRIMFIELD.

The 25th anniversary of the Hitchcock Free High School was celebaated Thursday in a most pleasant and becoming manner. The pupils of the school first repaired to the cemetery, where they decorated the graves of Samuel A. Hitchcock, the founder of the school, and of the trustees who are dead. Then they repaired to the church, which was handsomely decorated and completely filled. Cœnen's orchestra of Springfield furnished music, Rev. C. M. Palmer of Meriden, Ct., offered prayer, and Principal Cooper gave an address of welcome, which was responded to by E. W. Norwood, a former principal of the school. President Seelye of Amherst then delivered an able and impressive address upon "The Necessity of Education for the American People, and the Kind they Need." After the address came the collation in the vestry, and the company then returned to the audience room to listen to the entertaining after-dinner speeches. In the evening there was a reunion in the school hall, and dancing in the town hall. The school is in a very prosperous condition, and the number of pupils the coming term will exceed 100. During the existence of the school it has had 982 pupils, 470 males and 512 females, and their residences have been as follows: Brimfield, 444; Sturbridge, 123; Holland, 58; Wales, 37; Warren, 32; Sunderland, 7; Stafford, Ct., 9; Woodstock, Ct., 7; Southbridge, 7; Brookfield, 11; Palmer, 19; Union, Ct., 17; Monson, 11; Hardwick, 30; West Brookfield, 17; Hampden, 9; New York city, 6; Camden, Me., 8; Wilbraham, 5; Charlton, 5; Japan, 1; Madras, India, 1.

HAMPDEN.

All the district schools in town will commence Monday next.

Gov. Long has appointed Charles I. Burleigh a justice of the peace for this county.

The Spellman family in this vicinity have advertised their 5th annual reunion for Sept. 14th, at Evergreen Park, Stafford, Ct. Dinner will be provided by the proprietors of the park, and all are invited.

Rev. W. W. Woodworth, of Berlin, Ct., who with his family are visiting Mrs. Woodworth's father, Dea. W. V. Sessions, preached in the Congregational church last Sunday. Mr. Woodworth was formerly settled in Belchertown, and is a positive preacher of the old school theology. His discourse was good, and delivered with energy and power.

Pay day usually makes music with some of the employes. A. O. Thresher paid his help last Friday. On Saturday two of his French workmen, James Fountain and Cyrus Bergor, celebrated the occasion in the village to such an extent that Sheriff Spellman gave them a ride to Springfield, where they quartered with city marshal Blair till Monday morning, paying in fine and costs $16.90 for the celebration.

Samuel T. Jillson, one of our old inhabitants, was stricken with paralysis of the right side Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Jillson is now 77 years old. One of his limbs was amputated some 30 years since. He has always been, from boyhood, an operative in a woolen mill, and during his late years, until, perhaps, six years ago, has been employed in putting up new machinery in various parts of this State, Connecticut and Rhode Island. He is comfortable, but fears are entertained of another shock.

MONSON.

Station Agent Styles has returned from his vacation among the mountains.

Frank Hall, the new merchant in Central Block, is offering bargains in all his lines of goods.

The public schools commence next Monday. Nearly all the old corps of teachers continue.

Lieut. Lyon's horse made things lively on Main street the other day, but the results were not serious.

Monson boasts a larger number of fast horses than any town of its size in Western Massachusetts.

Rufus L. Aldrich of this place, who has been very sick with fever at Atlanta, Ga., is now recovering.

A large number of Colton Hollow people are spending a fortnight in cottages on the Connecticut shore.

Monson Academy will open its Fall session Aug. 30th, with indications of an entering class of about fifty.

Frank Lester, a brakeman on the N. L. N. R. R., had his hand badly smashed at the station here Wednesday.

School house No. 8 has been thoroughly remodeled and refurnished during the Summer vacation, and will be in good condition for the Fall term.

The Village Improvement Association met Wednesday evening and appointed a committee to solicit memberships and subscriptions, and voted to erect a street lamp on Academy Hill.

Rev. Father McCarthy of St. Patrick's society has been transferred to Greenfield. His departure is very much regretted by all classes, as he has made many friends and greatly developed his society during his stay here An organ, bell and clock have through his efforts been placed in the church edifice, and the grounds around the church much beautified.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The engine and main shaft are running at the new gun shop, and the various machines are being attached and adjusted as rapidly as possible.

The recent rains have been so slight they have not affected the river, the water getting so low that it has been necessary to open the reservoir in Hubbardston in order to supply our mills.

The surveyor has been out the past week looking for Eddy street, and but little of it has been found where it should be. It has been ascertained that the town's land has been fenced in, built upon, bought and sold with but little regard for the lines as previously sold to the town.

T. D. Lyon has purchased a photograph gallery in New Bedford, and is soon to remove to that place. It is said to be an excellent opening for an artist of his ability, but his many friends and customers here will regret that he is not to remain with us. The rooms he occupies here are to be kept open by some one competent to take charge of them.

The high and grammar schools are to commence next Monday. The examination of candidates for the high school will be held at ten o'clock a. m. to-day, at the high school room. The other schools are to commence a week from Monday. The teachers in the out districts are: No. 3, Miss Bacon; No. 4, Roscoe Jennings; No. 5, Miss Bowdoin; No. 7, Miss Keefe; No. 9, Miss Sandford. It is not decided yet whether there will be a school this Fall in No. 2 district. The North street school house will be occupied as usual. The new house will not be ready for occupancy until the Winter term. The building committee have bought about a quarter of an acre from Mrs. Chilson for $800, and about two hundred feet from Mrs. Miner for $250, to enlarge the lot sufficient for the new building, which will be set back so much more from the street as not to interfere with the old house while it is being built.

These technical medical terms are posers to a good many people, and even editors, who are supposed to know all about everything, sometimes get caught by them. For instance, a Nashua paper recently announced that "Nutricious enemies are successfully employed to sustain the President."

A man at Bangor, Me., finding that his eaves trough was highest at the end which ought to have been lowest, hired a gang of men, tore out the foundation, and raised one corner of the house until the trough was all right.

Warner & Merritt's large fruit warehouse at Philadelphia was destroyed by fire Tuesday morning, the falling walls demolishing two smaller buildings. Loss $350,000. A large number of persons are thrown out of employment.

September Magazines.

The September Atlantic contains three new chapters of Mr. Howells's new serial story, "Dr. Breen's Practice," which cannot fail to be read with the greatest zeal and enjoyment by the multitude who find in Mr. Howells's story some of the most charming reading which our age affords. A very noteworthy article is that by Mr. E. L. Godkin, "The Attempt on the President's Life," which discusses with great thoughtfulness and ability the motives and object of the assassination, and derives from the fearful act a logical and impressive lesson upon the necessity for change in the mode of appointment of officers. It is an article which deserves the widest and most careful reading. John Fiske continues his instructive and engaging series of mythological articles with one entitled "Koshchei the Deathless, or the Diffusion of Fairy Tales." The second part of Mary Hallock's story, "In Exile," confirms the pleasant impression which the first part made, and proves her to have as great skill in writing as in art. H. H. continues her unusually interesting series of Norway articles with an essay on "The Katrina Saga," which is part story, part essay, and part poetry, all thoroughly delightful. All housekeepers will be interested in the very charming, if possibly Utopian, sketch of "Housekeeping Hereafter," by James V. Sears. J. Bander Matthews discusses the "Dramas of the Elder Dumas." Rev. Wm. Chauncy Langdon contributes a paper deserving much attention among Harvard graduates and well-wishers on the "Future of Harvard Divinity School." Dr. Holmes contributes the Phi Beta Kappa poem which he recently read at Harvard; and Miss Edith M. Thomas, one of the most promising of the new contributors to the Atlantic, has an attractive poem entitled "Harvest Noon." The remainder of the magazine contains notices of some of the more important new books, an unusually interesting and varied Contributors' Club, and a running discussion of the books of the month. A thoroughly good number of this standard magazine. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

THE PRESIDENT'S WOUND

BY DR. DAVID KENNEDY, ONE OF THE SURGEONS ON DUTY AT THE U. S. A. GENERAL HOSPITAL, WEST PHILADELPHIA, now of RONDOUT, N. Y.

In the issue of the Philadelphia Record of the 27th of July was published an article relating to the case of Capt. William Palmer, now Quartermaster Second Brigade New Jersey State National Guard, who was wounded at the battle of Mossy Creek, East Tennessee, in winter of 1863. In that article the striking resemblance of the case to that of President Garfield, in many particulars, was pointed out, the authority for the statement being the brave captain himself. A still better authority is Dr. David Kennedy, then surgeon U. S. General Hospital, West Phildelphia, who had charge of the case, and performed the operation of removing the detached bone, and finally extracted the bullet, the entire treatment being perfectly successful—Capt. Palmer living to this day in the bloom of health. Dr. Kennedy does not hesitate to say that many of his patients, both in military and civil practice, owe their lives to the wonderful healing and strengthening powers of his medicine called "Favorite Remedy." The doctor is in possession of an autograph letter from Capt. Palmer, attesting his indebtedness for his present good health to this medicine—"Favorite Remedy"—which he says has doubled the obligation which he felt to the doctor for the treatment of the captain's terrible wound.

While Dr. Kennedy is engaged in the introduction of "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession at Rondout, N. Y., and performs all the minor as well as capital operations of surgery. Address as above. 4w21

Miss Lollipop's Housekeeping.

Little Miss Lollipop thought she must help
To wash up the dishes, and wipe off the shelf,
To brush off the table, and sweep up the floor,
And clean off the stains from the paint on the door.

She put on her apron, and pulled up her sleeve—
She didn't want work that was only make b'lieve;
"For muzzers who've dot yittle chillens," said she,
"Must have yittle housekeepers; dat's what I'll be."

Little Miss Lollipop went through the room,
Whisked the dust high with the edge of the broom,
Broke the poor cup which she dropped on the floor,
Left the paint twenty times worse than before;

Spattered and splashed—but oh! how could I chide
The little heart swelling with sweet, helpful pride?
"For how would my muzzer be able," said she,
"To get froo her work if she didn't have me?"

Dearer the love in the sunny blue eyes
Than the dust she is raising, which fades as it flies;
Better to miss the best cup on the shelf
Than chill the dear heart which is giving itself.

Dear little Lollipop! we are, like you,
Spoiling the work we are trying to do—
But surely the Father who loves us will heed,
And take in his kindness the will for the deed!

MODERN NOVELS.

I believe a thoroughly "bad" book, as we of the last generation used to style such—bad either for coarseness of style, as "Tristram Shandy," or laxity of morals, like "Don Juan"—does infinitely less harm than many modern novels which we lay on our drawing-room tables, and let our daughters read ad infinitum or ad nauseam; novels chiefly, I grieve to say, written by women, who, either out of pure ignorance, or a boastful morbid pleasure in meddling with forbidden topics, often write things that men would be ashamed to write.

Absolute wickedness, crime represented as crime, and licentiousness put forward as licentiousness, is far less dangerous to the young and naturally pure mind than that charming sentimental dallying with sin, making it appear so piteous, so interesting, so beautiful. Nay, without even entering upon the merits of the favorite modern style of fiction—in which love, to be attractive, must necessarily be unlawful—there is a style of novel in which right and wrong are muddled up together into a sort of neutral tint, the author, and, consequently, the reader, taking no trouble to distinguish between them. The characters are made interesting not by their virtues, but their faults; a good woman worships a bad man, and vice versa. Now this may be true in real life, though I doubt; but to present it in fiction, to make a really noble woman the abject, willing slave of a contemptible brute not worthy to tie her shoes, or an honorable man doing all sorts of erring things for the sake of a feeble or vile woman, whom her own sex and the best of the other would heartily despise—the effect of such a picture as this is to confuse all one's notions of good and bad, and produce a blurred and blotted vision of life, which, to those just beginning life, is either infinitely sad or infinitely harmful. Besides, it is not true. Time brings its revenges; and if there is one certainty in life, it is the certainty of retribution. Ay, even in this life, and, alas! down to the third and fourth generations—a creed by the young despised and disbelieved, but which the old, be they optimists or pessimists, know to be only too true; a creed which the young disbelieve or despise, but which the old know and have proved.—Mrs. Craik.

THE POWER OF IMAGINATION.—A practising physician tells the following story, illustrating the effect of imagination on disease: An old negro woman came to my office suffering from rheumatism in one knee. The knee was actually swollen and she had been complaining for some time, and, on this particular morning, it happened that some brown corrugated paper was lying on my table which I had removed from some specimens of maltine and pepsin that had been sent to me for trial. She asked me what kind of plasters those were. I told her they were "patent Chinese corrugated rheumatic plasters" that had been sent to me for trial, and if she wanted to try one of them she might. She concluded to do so. Next day she came back, and, when I asked her how she was, she expressed herself as being a great deal better. She had been able to walk up stairs, the swelling was gone, and she declared it drew so hard in the night that she had to take it off.

A lady of experience gives advice on kissing to a younger lady friend as follows: "Be frugal in your bestowal of such favors. In the first place I would cut off all uncles, cousins and brothers-in-law; let them kiss their own wives and daughters; and I would not kiss the minister, or the doctor; or the lawyer who gets you a divorce." You see this lady understands her business, and does not leave out the editor; he of all others needs those osculatory attentions to "lighten up the gloom;" she's a jolly, sensible woman, with a heart in the right place.

A negro one night prayed earnestly that he and his brethren might be preserved from what he called their "upsettin' sins." "Brudder," said one of his friends, "you ain't got de hang ob dat ar word. It's besettin', not upsettin'." "Brudder," replied he, "if dat's so, it is so. But I was prayin' de Lawd to save us from de sin ob 'toxication, and if dat ain't a upsettin' sin, I dunno what am."

The Connecticut commissioners of pharmacy meet at Bridgeport September 1, and after that all persons who conduct a drug business in the State without a license from them will be liable to prosecution.

It is stated that Lyon, the South Windham burglar, confesses his identity, says he expected to tap a $6000 safe, and was then going to Vermont to kill Hans Brock, who recently shot him in New York.

It is asserted that the tract of country, including the celebrated "Everglades," which the State of Florida is now going to drain, will be able to produce more sugar than the United States can consume.

JUDGE TOURGEE ON WOMAN'S SPHERE.

I have little sympathy with those who clamor about woman's mission or woman's wrongs. To my mind woman is simply the sister of her more rugged and ungracious counterpart from whom she can never be separated or considered without relation to. Man's rights are her rights, man's moneys are her moneys, and man's duties her duties. Man is, and for the present is likely to be, the bread-winner. Woman is, and must be, the home-keeper. The strain of the world is upon the man; the worry and care of the home is on the woman. The wife and mother of the future will be a helpmeet, guardian and faithful nurse just as she shall make her home a haven of rest. If then as a weary worker I might suggest, I would say that the American woman of the future would make her home more restful by impressing on it the character of pleasant resort rather than a mere boarding or lodging-house. Of this the first element will be herself. Great stress should be put upon the necessity of a greater care in the personal adornment of woman. The influence of woman depends first of all upon the charm of her presence, of which grace of manner and tasteful adornment are the chief ingredients. The beautiful woman is unmindful of the creator's bounty if she fail to lavish care upon its enchantment. Then woman should to a certain extent be cognizant of her husband's business affairs. The man who does not confide his business to his wife is needlessly carrying a double load. Such interest in the labors and cares of each other is restful and strengthening to husband and wife, inspires like interest in the children of the household, and greatly tends to make a united and harmonious family. It is not every one who is called to a great destiny, appointed to a grand life, or fitted for a mighty work. There are few who rise to the heights of self-sacrifice and devotion to principles that is necessary to constitute the successful missionary, the pioneer teacher or the great reformer, but at every one's door lie the humbler, sweeter, simpler, but not less holy duties of the home, and they also serve who only stand and wait.

Fishing in Georgia is attended with some exciting incidents not encountered by the sportsmen in the North. A party from Hawkinsville recently went fishing in the Alapaha river and stirred up a deep hole with their poles, securing hundreds of fish. In churning up the water a big alligator was aroused, and he began to make trouble for them. Determined to clean out the hole and have the fish, several of the party went into the water to run the alligator out. Some of them seized him by the head, some about the body and some got "tail hold," and right out of the water they came with the amphibious creature. Out on land they came, but in an instant the reptile made a grand effort, and with one stroke of his powerful tail knocked one of the men headlong into the water. At this juncture several of the fishermen jumped on the back of the 'gator, and held it down until the others killed it with their hoes and axes. The 'gator measured nine fleet in length. After this adventure the fishing went on, and the party caught four hundred and forty-six.

Dr. Schliemann's description of his courtship of his wife is an interesting one. "It is now twelve years," he says, "since I met her in the house of her parents in Athens. It was a Saturday. In the course of the conversation I made an astonishing discovery. The young eighteen-years-old girl, as the talk turned upon the Iliad, recited for me a long piece from that work with literal accuracy. We were soon absorbed in the subject, and on the same day I was able to tell her, "Next Thursday will be our wedding day." And Thursday was our wedding day, for important business called me at once to Paris. We made our wedding journey thither. Then came the time for learning. I recited Homer to her, and she repeated it after me. During our married life we have not had a single falling out—not even over Agamemnon and his sister. The only dispute we ever had was when we had different ideas about the rendering of a passage in Homer."

The manufacture of lumber from straw is an industry which has already attained some growth in the West. Planks twelve feet long by thiry-two inches wide have been made from it, the resulting "wood" being almost as hard as horn and taking a good polish. It can be planed like wood, which the shavings much resemble, and as there is no shrinkage, the substance is claimed to be adapted to many purposes for which wood is not always satisfactory. It is said, also, that it can be made for a less price than is now paid for clear pine timber.

For a number of years until 1880 Nevada was the champion silver and gold producing State of the Union. Now that State is lagging far in the rear. Colorado has snatched the laurels from her neighbor, and last year produced gold and silver to the value of $23,000,000. California came next with $19,000,000, then Nevada with $15,000,000. Next in order were Utah, Dakota, Arizona, Montana, Idaho, Oregon and New Mexico.

San Antonio, Texas, is to have a $250,000 hotel, and Houston is to revel in some new cotton mills.

WICKED FOR CLERGYMEN.—Rev. ——, Washington, D. C., writes: "I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article made of valuable remedies known to all, that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should freely commend it. I therefore cheerfully and heartily commend Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them."—New York Baptist Weekly.

An old lady writes us: "I am 65 years old and was feeble and nervous all the time, when I bought a bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic. I have used little more than one bottle and feel as well as at 30, and am sure that hundreds need just such a medicine." See advertisement. a

FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE, INTERMITTENT FEVER, GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER, LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER, NAUSEA, ARE THE

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use. If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Prepared only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.

Because the manufacturers haue received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

THE ODOR OF PINKS.

Pembroke Carroll opened his eyes upon an early Summer morning within the walls of his boyhood's home. The house, a fine old mansion, had descended through a long line of Carrolls from father to son until the death of Pem's father, when it was discovered that the debts had eaten up the estate, and Pem was left with two sisters to support, his whole stock in trade being a good education, robust health, and an indomitable will. He had that sort of pride which would neither allow his sisters to want, nor to share his labor, and, besides this, he had set his heart upon having the old home for his own. Since he could not inherit it as his father and grandfather had done, it should be by the might of his own hands. To this end he worked hard in his profession, building slowly but well, and yet it was harder than anyone else could know. But his will was strong.

"Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," he would say, and so each temptation passed.

His sisters married, and went far away, leaving him quite alone, though a trousseau and marriage settlement for each took a large slice from his loaf put by. But at last the home was his—fairly earned and hardly won.

When he awoke in the morning the birds were singing in the elm tree by the window, the sun was shining, and there was peace in his heart.

Throwing on a dressing gown, he hastened to the window and looked out.

He was startled from his reverie by the appearance of a slender young girl, in a white morning dress and pretty garden hat, who came out of the adjoining house, armed with a basket and a huge pair of shears, the latter seeming about half as tall as herself. She ran down the path to where the pinks bloomed on either side; then she paused, put down her basket, tossed aside her shears, and buried her small nose in the hearts of about six pinks, one after the other, before she stopped to take breath. Then she sat down and began to talk to the flowers and scold the bees, flourishing her shears about by way of emphasis.

"So, Miss Picotee, you are out at last with four blooms, you lazy thing! But never mind—you are so beautiful I cannot scold you; and besides, I'm so glad to see you at last I won't say a word. One—two—three—four—five—six great snowballs of sweetness on that lovely white carnation. And then—Oh, you dear, great, velvety, cardinal beauty! Really, I never knew anything before quite so bold as you are, you saucy bees, taking my finest pinks for your rocking chairs! I wonder you are not afraid of me and my great shears. For my part, I'm just dying of envy, for I'd like to sit in a pink, and be rocked about by the wind myself!" And then she fell to clipping the flowers, placing them carefully in the basket, and humming with the bees.

From bed to bed she went, cutting the stems with lavish hand; yet, so abundant was the bloom, nothing was missed.

It was not until her pleasant task was completed, and she disappeared within the house, that Pembroke recollected he must hasten to his office.

All he knew of his neighbors was that a Mr. Corson had purchased the house next his.

A few days later a friend dropped in at his office just as he was about leaving for home.

Mr. Mason was chatty and friendly, with an exclamatory style of speaking which rendered his simplest sentences emphatic.

"You are next door to the Corsons, now, Carroll, happy fellow!" he said. "The young ladies are quite the rage. Eldest—lovely girl!—is engaged to Squire Lynn. The second, Miss Laura—a perfect beauty, by the way—captured me long ago, though I can't tell why, since she is evidently inclined to favor young Sinclair. The third, Kate, is a bright, wholesome, sensible appearing girl, but rather young, and inclined to be shy; you will always find her near her mother. The fourth is away at school, and there is one, the oldest of all, who is married and settled. Miss Corson is a wonderful musician—wonderful! Miss Laura paints like—like—well, almost any old master. Miss Kate has no especial forte, but she cultivates flowers to perfection, and especially affects pinks. But what I meant to say was that I'm going to call at the house this evening, and if you'll go, I'll drop in for you, Carroll. I met the Corsons a few evenings ago, and I was speaking of you and your buying back your old home, and Mrs. Corson seemed wonderfully interested—said she wanted to meet you. She asked me to bring you in. Splendid place to spend an evening. Music always, and such music! Games sometimes, very interesting conversation, and all manner of trifles in the way of refreshment. One evening a salad; another—if it chances to be warm—an ice. Fruit often, and sometimes nothing more than a cup of delicious coffee; but no matter how simple the thing is, it is served—well, like something you might read about, you know. Fruit or nuts come in on the most curious old plates, and coffee—well, it's worth while to drink from Mrs. Corson's china. And then the lady herself is so witty without seeming to know it. Why, many a young man who cares nothing for the ladies is fond of dropping in just to hear Mrs. Corson's conversation. And her husband, you know, is just as fond of her as possible."

"No, I don't know," said Pembroke, beginning to think he was receiving rather a large dose of the Corson family, when he was really interested in only a small portion of it. "But I'd rather like to know," he added; "and, Mason, if you will be kind enough to call for me, I shall be glad to make Mrs. Corson's acquaintance."

Evening came, and Pem was ushered into Mrs. Corson's drawing-room, the prettiest room he had ever seen in his life; it was so bright and harmonious.

He found Kate by her mother's side, and, after mutual congratulations concerning desirable neighbors, he turned the conversation upon flowers. It was so easy to converse with Mrs. Corson, who was pleasant, gentle and motherly, though young; and he was soon telling her of his fondness for pinks, of his mother, his present loneliness; and then a sudden feeling of shame caused him to stop short, for his eyes were wet. But he took courage when he saw that only Kate and her mother observed it, and their faces were earnest and sympathetic as well their replies.

"The very next thing to be done to your place," Mrs. Corson said, brightly, a little later, "is to plant plenty of pinks, though I believe they are shy of bloom after transplanting, particularly the old hardy sorts. But Kate will tell you all about it, and she must send you pinks from our own garden until they have time to bloom in yours. Is it too late to grow pinks this season, dear?"

"Too late for very much show this year," Kate replied. "There are a few free-blooming varieties that do not mind being transplanted, if it is done with care; we have many of these and can spare all Mr. Carroll will need. Then seeds sown now will blossom early next Summer."

Pembroke thanked her, and then it occurred to her for the first time that she might have offered too much, and she glanced quickly into her mother's face for approval.

"Do not forget to attend to this, my dear," Mrs. Corson answered with an approving smile; and, rising, she pulled two or three pinks from the bouquet which stood near, and presented them to Pembroke. Then some one called her away, and he began to converse with Kate in her absence, the warm color coming and going in the young girl's cheeks, at the very thought of being left alone to entertain a comparative stranger. Then there was music, and Kate glided away, drawing near to where her mother sat, and he spoke no more with her that evening.

In the morning he watched the pinks from his window with renewed interest; watched, too, for the young girl who was wont to gather their morning bloom; but she failed to make her appearance, and he went down stairs disappointed. Upon his return at evening he found a large bouquet of pinks awaiting him, and a note, not from Kate, but Mrs. Corson.

"Last night," she wrote, "when I promised Kate would send you some pinks, it did not occur to me that it might not be customary for ladies to send bouquets to gentlemen, except in the case of long friendship. I do not fear to transgress this rule, and send you these for your mother's sake, and because I was glad to hear you speak of her so tenderly."

At church, on Sunday, Pembroke glanced over to the pew occupied by the Corsons, and saw that father, mother and three daughters were there, the ladies all charmingly attired; Kate, the simplest of the four, and with pinks in her bonnet—deep cardinal and white. As she turned to speak to her mother—she was always beside her mother—Pem saw she wore a large cluster of natural pinks at her throat.

When they left the church, he paused to thank Mrs. Corson for her gift, and then, for Kate seemed the odd one of the family, he found himself walking with her down the street toward home, her father and mother leading the way, and her two sisters following. He spoke of his happiness in being once more in his old home, only it seemed somewhat lonely; and then they talked, as usual, upon flowers.

"Miss Kate," he said, as they neared her home, "would you please allow me to walk with you to church this evening? I mean, too, for you to come and sit with me in my own pew. Positively I am too forlorn to say my prayers alone; will you not take pity on me?"

"I will walk with you to church with pleasure," she said, seeming to consider it a very serious affair; "and if mamma does not think it best for me to sit in your pew, you must sit in ours."

Mamma made no objections. She was not given to match-making in any way, but she liked Pembroke, and she felt he was a man to be trusted. So Kate, with pinks in her hair and throat, walked soberly to church by Pem's side. When they reached his pew there were strangers in it, but there was just room for two more, and as there were not prayer-books enough for all, Kate and Pembroke were obliged to use one between them. He glanced down upon the pretty, blushing face at his side, feeling a deep pleasure in having her almost to himself for the time. It was quite warm, and in fanning herself Kate wafted the perfume of the pinks toward him, fairly intoxicating him with their sweetness; so it is doubtful if he followed strictly all the prayers, although his heart was filled with earnest thanksgiving.

They walked slowly homeward, and as they turned into their own street, Kate said, "Mamma does not like us to invite gentlemen to the house on Sunday nights, so I cannot ask you to come in. But all other evenings we receive."

"Thanks; I will come soon if I may—perhaps to-morrow evening. And for to-night, please give me the pinks you have worn to-day."

"They are beginning to fade," she said.

"Still I wish them. Perhaps I seem to you an insufferable beggar; and yet, until I met you, I had not asked the gift of a flower of anyone since I was a child."

Without a word, she unfastened the flowers and laid them in his hand, and he, carrying the role of beggar still farther, asked her to pin them in his buttonhole. She looked up a moment; she stood just within the gate, where the moon shone clearly upon her shy, girlish face, while he was in the shadow. She felt he asked much; but he spoke so soberly, and seemed so sincere, she had not the heart to refuse him. So she pinned the pinks upon his coat in silence, her hands trembling a trifle as she did so.

"I cannot make you understand how much I thank you for your gentleness to me," he said. "Only that I am so deeply indebted to you already, I should be tempted to ask one thing more. This granted, the day would be a perfect one to me." He paused, and she looked so sweetly thoughtful, so staidly discreet, so unconscious altogether, he grew bolder, adding, "It has been, oh, so long! since my mother gave me pinks and kissed me; yet ever since, the two gifts have been associated in my mind. I have had so few of either in my life, that I am tempted—"

He paused, for though she spoke no word, she looked up into his face so shocked and frightened and distressed, he bitterly repented having spoken in such a manner.

"Forgive me," he said, presently. "I would not have pained you so much for the world, believe me. I cannot tell you how deeply interested in you I am; how—my dear child, if I do not say good night at once I shall frighten you more than ever. Only assure me that I am quite forgiven; I cannot go without that."

She put out her hand to him in silence; he pressed it in his, touched it gently to his lips as he said good night, and was gone. And far into the night this grave man sat, and thought of his home, in which Kate appeared as its guardian spirit, and all was peace and harmony.

In the days that followed he met her often, but never again alone. And when the rumor reached him that Mrs. Corson and Kate were to leave town for a few weeks, he went over at once and had an interview with Mrs. Corson, and telling her of his love for her daughter, begged permission to woo her for his wife. For answer, she gave consent, but counseled him against haste.

"I am going to take Kate away for a month," she said, "and I do not wish you to speak to her upon this subject until our return. This absence will prove you both; not that I doubt your sincerity, but this sudden passion is so unlike any former act of your life, and marriage is a step that should be taken with caution."

With this he was obliged to be content. He saw Kate but once before her departure, and not knowing the precise time of her return, he was apprized of it by seeing that demure young lady out among the garden beds one evening when he came home to dinner. Mrs. Corson, looking out, saw the expression of his face when he discovered Kate, and was at once convinced that his determination was unchanged. Directly after dinner he called, and the two went out into the garden to inspect the flowers. They gathered a few pinks, and then Kate sat down on a bench near the beds, and Pembroke told her that old, sweet story—the first time in his life he had told it to any woman—yet Kate fancied he told it well. Perhaps it was because it was the first time she had ever heard it; but the perfume of the pinks was not sweeter than this story seemed to her.

So it came about that Kate Corson married before either of her sisters, and in due time she came to reign over Pembroke Carroll's home. Under her dominion it grew brighter and lovelier to him than it had ever seemed to him in the days of his boyhood, and he declared it was all owing to those blessed pinks that he came to know how sweet and fair his wife was.

THE OLD MAN HIMSELF.

Not long since a western merchant who wanted to do some sight-seeing and buy his fall stock at the same time, entered a dry goods jobbing house on Broadway and accosted the first person he met with, "Are you the proprietor here?" "Not exactly the proprietor," was the reply. "At the present I'm acting as shipping clerk, but I am cutting my cards for a partnership next year by organizing noon prayer-meetings in the basement."

The stranger passed on to a very important-looking personage with a diamond pin, and asked, "Are you the head of the house?" "Well, no; I can't say as I am at present, but I have hopes of a partnership in January. I'm only one of the travelers just now, but I'm laying for a $2,000 pew in an up-town church, and that will mean a quarter interest here in less than six months."

The next man had his feet up, his hat back, and a twenty-five cent cigar in his mouth, and he looked so solid that the stranger said—

"You must run this establishment, do you not?"

"Me? Well, I may pretty soon. At present I am the bookkeeper, but I am expecting to go into a church choir with the old man's darling, and become an equal partner here."

The stranger was determined not to make another mistake. He walked around the store until he found a man with his coat off and busy with a case of goods, and he said to him—

"The porters are kept pretty busy here, I see."

"Yes," was the brief reply.

"But I suppose you are planning to invest in a gospel hymn-book and sing the old man out of an eighth interest in the firm, ain't you?"

"Well, no, not exactly," was the quiet reply, "I'm the old man himself."

PECULIARITIES OF GREAT MEN.

Aaron Burr always forgot to return a borrowed umbrella.

Charlemagne always pared his corns in the dark of the moon.

Byron never found a button off his shirt without raising a row about it.

Homer was extremely fond of boiled cabbage, which he almost invariably ate with a fork.

Napoleon could never think to shut a door after him, unless he was mad about something.

Pliny could never write with a lead pencil without first wetting it on the tip of his tongue.

Socrates was exceedingly fond of peanuts, quantities of which he always carried in his pockets.

The Duke of Wellington could never think to wipe his feet on the door-mat unless his wife reminded him of it.

George Washington was so fond of cats that he would get up in the middle of the night to throw a boot-jack at them.

Shakespeare, when carrying a codfish from the village grocery, would almost invariably try to conceal it underneath his coat.

When the wife of Galileo gave him a letter to mail he always carried it about him three weeks before he thought of mailing it.

Christopher Columbus always paid for his paper promptly, and being an attentive reader he always found out when the worlds were ripe.

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard," is all very well; but if the sluggard will go to a picnic, the ant will come to him.

The Monk and His Lord.

A legend of the olden time,
When "Holy Church" was in her prime,

Tells of a monk, unknown to fame;
No ancient record holds his name:

His daily task, the meal to spread
On which his holy brothers fed.

As in his cell he mused one day,
Just as he bowed himself to pray,

The blessed Saviour from on high
Appeared before his wondering eye.

A gracious smile was on his face,
His radiant presence filled the place.

The monk knelt down in humble prayer,
Delighted, for his Lord was there.

As thus he worshipped in his cell,
High noon had come; he heard the bell

That called him forth the meal to spread,
On which each day his brothers fed.

What shall he do? That gracious face,
While he is gone, may leave the place.

He heard the call; to duty went.
And when his hour of toil was spent,

Released from duty by the bell,
Came quickly to his humble cell.

His patient Lord still lingered there,
With pleasant smile and gracious air.

Then first His lips the silence broke;
These were the words the Master spoke:

"Had'st thou been false to duty's call,
Thou had'st not found me here at all."

So runs the legend; doubt who will,
But blessing waits on duty still.

And he who serves his brother best,
Gets nearer God than all the rest.

"JOE."

"Hadn't you heard de news? Why, sah, he done gone dead. Yes, sah, been dead an' buried for a hull week. Dat's de reason he didn't come around any more wid his apples and popcorn."

"What; your little Joe dead?"

"Dat's de truf, sah. Come home one day all stuffed up wid a cold, an' in twenty-four hours we had him in his shroud. It was awful sudden, an' I can't realize dat he's gone. Las' night we found ourselves waitin' snpper for him, an' in de middle ob de night we wake an' find ourselves callin' his name. It comes powerful hard on us, it does, an' we can't speak of it widout our hearts swellin' up big 'nuff to bust. He was de only chile, you know, an' we had built up some powerful hopes on him."

"Joe was a good boy."

"'Deed he was. He neber gin us one hour's trouble, an' dar wasn't a bad h'ar on his head."

There came a pause, and the old man seemed nervous and uneasy. He started to go, hesitated, and finally said:

"You don't know nuffin 'bout Heaben fur suah, do you?"

"No."

"Well, has you got any ideas?"

"Yes, a few."

"You see, all de wimmen has come in to console my ole woman, an' one of 'em says dat de big, grown-up folks go to one part ob Heaben, an' de chil'en to anoder part. If dat's true, den we can't jine little Joe when we git up dar; maybe we can't eben see him. Dat's what makes his mudder take on so. We's got purty old now, an' we'll soon git de summons to go, but if de hope an' 'spectashun ob meetin' dat boy in Heaben am taken away from us, we might as well hang ourselves in de woodshed."

"You need have no fears. Heaven is not fenced off to separate the young from the old."

"All piled in togedder."

"Yes, an' plenty of room for all."

"Will we know our Joe when we git up dar?"

"Yes."

"An' he'll know us?"

"Yes."

"Dat's de way I hold, but de ole woman she's kinder 'fraid dat I doan' know fur suah. Say, boss?"

"Yes."

"Please do de ole man a favor. Take your pen and write down dat. Heaben am not fenced off, an' dat we shall fin' our little Joe clus by de pearly gates, waitin' an' watchin' to welcome us as we march in wid de percession. It will make de ole woman feel a heap easier, an' help her to b'ar up under dis 'fliction."

The "certificate" was written and handed to him, and he carefully put it away, and said, as he was ready to go:

"I'm a fousan' times obleeged, an' de swellin' in my heart has gone down over half. It wrung us powerful hard to see dat boy on his dyin' bed, but when we war told dat we shouldn't be able to git up to him in Heaben, we was clean dun fur. Day to you, boss, I'ze gwine right off home, an' chirk up de ole woman wid de blessed news."

A YOUNG SPECULATOR.

A farmer asked a boy what he would work for him for, one year. The farmer was close at a bargain, and the boy knew it.

Says the boy, "I will work for you if you will give me one grain of corn for the first week, two grains for the second, four for the third, and doubling each week until the fifty weeks or year is out."

"Good," said the farmer.

The boy began work, and took one grain for the first week, two for the second, four for the third, eight for the fourth, sixteen for the fifth, thirty-two for the sixth.

"Hold on," said the farmer, "you are taking too many."

"Not at all," said the boy, "I am but carrying out the contract."

The farmer began to figure how many grains the boy would take in fifty-two weeks, and to his astonishment he found that he would be entitled to 1,456,593,257,463,808 grains. He could never pay it, and agreed to give him fair wages if he would let him off from the contract.

A ship on the broad, boisterous and open ocean, needeth no pilot. But it dare not venture alone on the placid bosom of a little river, lest it be wrecked by some hidden rock. Thus it is with life. 'Tis not in our open, exposed deeds that we so much need the still voice of the silent monitor, as in the small, secret, every-day acts of our life.

The first poetic "fragment" commenced in these words: "I sipped the nectar of her lips. I sipped and hovered o'er her. Her father's hoof flashed on the scene. I'm wiser now and sorer."

A woman always bears the consequences of love, but she generally manages to make some one else bear the expenses.—Yonkers Gazette.

SUMMER WORRYING.

"I am indignant at such weather," we heard a lady exclaim, the other day. But when you think of it, is it right to feel thus about the weather? It is the one thing which beyond others it is entirely out of our power to modify or reconstruct. We must accommodate ourselves to the weather the Lord sends, and they who are wise adopt the comfortable philosophy of the shepherd of Salisbury Plain, and consider whatever weather comes the best they could possibly have. Of course a rainy spell when one has distinctly set out on a pleasure tour is something of an interruption. Time at a seaside or mountain hotel is worth its weight in gold, and when the winds are cold and the verandas wet, and the gamut of indoor occupations has been conscientiously gone through, there comes a sense of dreariness which is unknown to people at home. Many of us, too, are something like Mrs. Poyser in our secret hearts, and do not enjoy a holiday as we ought. You have not forgotten how pithily she expressed her opinion? "I'd sooner ha' brewin' day an' washin' day together than one o' these pleasurin' days. There's no work so tirin' as danglin' about, and not rightly knowin' what you're goin' to do next, an' keepin' your face in smilin' order like a grocer o' market day, for fear people should na think you civil enough." Mr. Howells, in his dainty fashion, has written about the drawbacks of a day's pleasure excursion, showing them with that half-veiled irony which is more delightful that it represents experiences which most of us have shared. Fret we, or fume we, or take we our hot or our cold days pleasantly, it makes no difference to the sun. Here we are in the summer solstice, and presently the fervid rays will ripen the corn, and purple the cluster, and sweeten the juices of the apple and pear. Why worry at summer? Why not accept its blessedness with serenity and gladness? And do let us use common sense and cultivate calmness, and even languor, when the skies are tropical. To drive ahead with the task which November will find an easy one, when July is pouring ardent beams upon our heads, is simply folly. If we cannot take a full vacation let us at least vacate some of our cares, and give a truce to worry, which numbers its victims among our nervous population by thousands and tens of thousands. The mosquitoes are a pest and a plague, no doubt. But canopies over the beds and bars in the windows and doors are a protection from them indoors, and distressing as they are, the little marauders have a reason for being. They are the devourers of invisible larvæ which else would breed death, the tiny scavengers which keep the malaria of the swamps from penetrating farther than it now does, with its fatal breath. They have their work as well in nature's economy. And the plain old farmer is not far wrong who tells you it is a sign of health when they are plenty. Some of us have laughed at the good-humored though rather broad satire of Josiah Allen's wife, but haven't we, like herself, met women whose lives were the summer long a constant fight with flies, so that they had not an hour's peace? Poor souls! Let us be tranquil, though flies now and then invade our precincts. If fly-brushes and fly-traps will not drive flies out, let them not put to flight our smiles, our pleasant looks, and our patient words.—Christian Intelligencer.

GET TO THE BOTTOM OF THINGS.

As the boy begins, so the man will end. The lad who speaks with affectation and minces foreign tongues that he does not understand at school, will be a weak chromo in character all his life; the boy who cheats his teacher into thinking him devout at chapel, will be the man who will make religion a trade, and bring Christianity into contempt; and the boy who wins the highest average by stealing his examination papers will figure some day as a tricky politician. The lad who, whether rich or poor, dull or clever, looks you straight in the eye and keeps his answer inside of truth, already counts friends who will last all his life, and holds a capital that will bring him a surer interest than money. Then get to the bottom of things. You see how it is already as to that. It was the student who was thoroughly grounded in the grammar that took the Latin prize; it was that slow, steady drudge that practiced firing every day last Winter that bagged the most game in the mountains; it is the clerk who studies the specialty of the house in off-hours who is to be promoted. Your brilliant, happy-go-lucky, hit-or-miss fellow usually turns up to be the dead weight of the family by forty-five. Don't take anything for granted; get to the bottom of things. Never be a sham yourself, nor be fooled by shams.

Mr. Vennor, the meteorologist, was strolling through the streets of Montreal recently, when he encountered a stranger, who asked:

"Be you the man who shies weather prophecies at the people?"

"I believe I am the person you refer to," he modestly replied.

"Where do yon expect to go to when you die?"

"I hope to go to Heaven."

"Glad to hear you say so," remarked the stranger. "There's a chap who ain't no friend of mine and who's goin' to hell, sure; but if you was goin' too I couldn't depend on the temperature long enongh to scorch him."

A country girl at a fashionable hotel in New York noticed that all the guests used only their forks in eating their pie. Upon her return home she reported the fact to the old lady, who comforted her by observing, "You shouldn't mind 'em, Jemima; it's all because they're too lazy to use their knives."

A clergyman being asked why he accepted the call (one of many) with the largest salary, replied that "he desired to go where there was the most sin—consequently located where money was the most plenty."

A certain amount of opposition is a great help to a man. Kites rise against and not with the wind. Even a head wind is better than none. No man ever worked his passage anywhere in a dead calm.

Were we as eloquent as angels, yet should we please some men, some women, and some children, much more by listening than by talking.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 3, 1881.

THE Springfield races have passed off quite successfully this week, though they do say there has been an unconscionable amount of gambling in the way of pool selling, considering the high moral tone of the association. How is this, Mr. President Stearns?

THE drouth is becoming a serious matter in some of the Middle and Western States. Rain has not fallen for weeks, the fields are dry as ashes, vegetation and some of the crops are nearly ruined, and a serious water famine is threatened. In Illinois and Iowa the drouth has been partially relieved by rains this week, and there was a heavy rain in portions of Canada on Thursday.

IT seems that the Garfield fund is not altogether dead, after all. It is stated that $125,000 of Government 4 per cents have been placed with the United States Trust Co. of New York, and a certificate of their deposit handed to Mrs. Garfield. If she does not draw the income, it will go on accumulating for the benefit of the children after the death of their parents. The fund, it is said, has reached the sum of $156,000, and the bonds cost $145,000.

THE selectmen of Franconia, N. H., a Democratic body, have done a graceful act in giving the name of Mount Garfield to the mountain adjoining Lafayette on the northeast, heretofore known as Haystack Mountain. As a rule, the wisdom of honoring living persons in this manner may well be questioned, but in this case there will be few, if any, to find fault, while it is peculiarly fitting that Lafayette, which has Mount Lincoln on one side, should now have Mount Garfield on the other.

NEW YORK is not troubled with any reverence for ancient landmarks, and the oldest building in the city is to be razed, to make room for a more pretentious structure. The doomed building is the Washington Hotel, on the corner of Broadway and Battery Place, which was built in 1742 by a British Admiral for a residence, and was in its day the finest house in the country. During the Revolutionary period it sheltered most of the commanders of the British forces, and Major Andre was a guest under its roof just before he made his fatal journey up the Hudson. It is a fortunate thing that the Old South Church is not located in New York. Had it been, its site would have been utilized long before this for a business edifice.

A terrific gale prevailed along the Southern coast last Saturday night, causing a great deal of damage to property and large loss of life. Several vessels were wrecked, and at Port Royal, S. C., forty lives were lost by the washing away of a ferry house. At Savannah, Ga., about 50 dwellings and many public buildings were seriously damaged, while it is estimated that over 100 lives, mostly negroes, were lost in that vicinity alone. The pecuniary loss will be very great. The South Carolina rice crop was very seriously damaged by the storm.

Edward Musgrave, manager of the Musgrave Alpaca Co. of Chicopee, has swindled his partners out of $100,000, and decamped for parts unknown. The banks in Springfield, Holyoke and Greenfield hold a large amount of the company's paper, and the remaining partners, Messrs. Anderton and Dunn, have turned over all their property for the benefit of their creditors. The assets will fall considerably below the liabilities, as the company has been doing a losing business for some time.

The steamer State of New York, of the Hartford and New York line, struck a rock or snag near Goodspeed's Landing Sunday evening, and stove a big hole in her bottom. She filled rapidly, and was run upon the beach, where she lies with the after part sunk to the hurricane deck. All the passengers were saved, but the baggage master was drowned while saving the baggage. The steamer is somewhat broken, but will be raised in a few days.

It hardly seems possible that men can be found so utterly lost to a sense of decency as to trade in a nation's grief. But last week the New York market was reported almost empty of black and while muslins, cambrics, etc., speculators having bought nearly all the available stock in the country, in anticipation of the President's death. It is pleasant to think that their plans are likely to be defeated by the President's recovery.

A ship-load of Percheron horses from France arrived in New York last week. They were imported by M. W. Dunham of Wayne, Ill. The lot comprises over 100 grown stallions, 50 mares of all ages, and the rest stallion colts of various ages. The lot includes some of the choicest stock to be got in France, and they cost from $1000 to $1800 each.

The Boston Charitable Mechanics' Association have postponed the opening of their exhibition till Tuesday, the 13th inst., in order to allow sufficient time for the full completion of their elegant new exhibition building. Exhibits are now being received and located, however.

H. N. Wheeler, editor of the Quincy, Ill., Herald, recently called Garfield a bigger scoundrel than Guiteau, and had for a month been publishing articles of this sort. The citizens of the place last Saturday showed their opinion of him by hanging him in effigy.

In the year 1880 the transactions of the New York clearing house amounted to the almost fabulous sum of $37,000,000,000. Of this volume of business no more than $1,500,000,000, was effected with cash, or about 4 per cent.

HOPE AGAIN REVIVED.

One week ago to-day President Garfield was seemingly lying at the very gateway of death, and all hope of his rallying had been abandoned. To-day he is still alive, and there are good grounds for hoping that he may yet recover. His symptoms were as alarming as they well could be last Saturday, but toward night there was an unexpected change for the better, and there has been since that time some marked improvement in his symptoms, showing that his great vitality is again asserting itself. The inflamed parotid gland has been discharging freely through several incisions, as well as through an opening made by itself in the ear; the pus is of a healthy character, and the gland has decreased very much in size. The stomach continues to perform its functions quite faithfully, the stupor has all passed away, and the President feels that he is better. The wound is resuming its activity somewhat, and is said to be doing as well as could be expected. On Wednesday his pulse dropped to 95, for the first time since August 8, but has ranged higher since that. On the whole, the President is believed to be on the upward road, and slowly gaining strength, for which the people are devoutly thankful. But he is not out of danger, and there is yet need for the earnest prayers of all good men that he may make steady progress toward restored health. Should he continue to improve, he will be moved as soon as possible to a more healthy locality, probably to Long Branch.

The Louisville Courier-Journal bases its faith in the ultimate recovery of the President upon the fact that "there is a man in a stone's throw of us as we write who is a pretty live man yet, who lay in bed 18 months with a bullet through the body and a shattered leg, and in that time he fell off from 190 to 75 pounds. He had pyæmia badly, and gangrene, and chills, and diarrhœa, and erysipelas, and had to be nourished again and again, for a week at a time, by enemata, because his stomach rejected food, and got so weak that he was unable to indicate that he was conscious, and was worried with morphine, and was cut into a dozen times for pus cavities and abscesses. He had everything that anybody has said the President was threatened with, and had it bad."

The pickle business on Long Island has become an important branch of industry. The picking of cucumbers began two weeks ago, but the crop this year will be light. One concern has contracted for the delivery of 32,000,000 at one dollar per 1000. The usual product for an acre is 100,000 cucumbers, and it costs about one-third of the selling price to pick them. The grower nets about $65 an acre. The market price for cucumbers in New York is $2 to $2 20 per 1000.

A big bill board for a circus was recently erected on the public square at Great Barrington. Taking advantage of the fact that the ground had been donated to the town exclusively for park purposes, five opponents of circuses destroyed the gorgeous pictures, and challenged the circus managers to prosecute them.

The body of a young woman was found in a swamp at Flushing, L. I., on Friday week, by a hunter, the head and arms wrapped in one paper package, and the trunk and severed limbs in another a few feet distant. The remains were considerably decayed, and there is no clue to their identity.

An angry wife chased her tippling husband out of a saloon at Menomonee, Wis, late one night, but lost sight of him, and went home alone. He was next morning found drowned in a deep well, into the unguarded mouth of which he had fallen in his hasty flight.

Francis C. Pease of Rockland, Me., shot his wife dead in a Boston boarding house Wednesday night, and then shot himself fatally. No cause for the deed is known. Pease was 23 years old, and his wife 18.

The third and fourth tracks of the New York Central, between Rochester and Buffalo, are being pushed ahead rapidly, and it is expected that a portion of the distance will be in use this week.

Capt. Howgate is now believed to have stolen half a million of dollars, and is supposed to have fled to Canada with his mistress and a large sum of money, leaving his family entirely destitute.

Three Michigan girls made up a party and eloped with a young man. By going to three different ministers, he married all of his companions, and then they went on a tripartite bridal tour.

The right of bicycle riders to use sidewalks is to be tested legally at Wakefield, where a stalwart pedestrian pushed a bicycle out of his way, throwing the rider on a pile of stones.

Reports from Tombstone, Arizona, state that the entire population of the mining town of Eureka, New Mexico, numbering 70 persons, has been massacred by the Indians.

Lieut. B. L. Edes of Washington and Lieut. Lyman G. Spaulding of Portsmouth, N. H., were blown to pieces Monday in Newport harbor while planting torpedoes.

John Hancock's chair, in which he sat when he signed his name to the Declaration of Independence, now stands in St. Paul's Church at Norfolk, Va.

The reported appointment of C. P. Clark as general manager of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad is now denied.

The steamer Trenton was wrecked this week near Quoin Point, South Africa, and 200 souls were lost, only 27 persons being saved.

St. Thomas Sunday school hold their annual picnic in Dewey's grove, east of the village to-day, and invite all their friends to join them. A large platform has been built in the grove, and music for dancing will be furnished by a first-class orchestra.

Lawyer A. R. Barker was tried before the Springfield police court Tuesday for his recent jail breaking, and was held in $500 for the grand jury in December. He seems to stand a fair chance of remaining behind the bars for quite an extended period.

Dr. J. L. Maloney of North Adams, whose wife, formerly Miss Kate Feency of this place, recently left him and returned to her old home, has been arrested on the charge of adultery with Mrs. Jennie Spry, who says he is the father of her 4-months-old child, which he fails to support as he agreed to do.

The startling report was current on the street the first of the week that Rev. B. M. Fullerton was sick beyond recovery at his new home in Waltham, but the only foundation for the report seems to have been the fact that he was quite sick for a day or two after a trip to the Vineyard a couple of weeks ago.

A few cases of chills and fever are reported, some in this village and some in other parts of the town. The "shakes" have never been known to originate hereabouts until quite recently, and our board of health might well look into the subject and see what malarial influences are at work around us which can be overcome or avoided.

Some of our seasiders have returned, but they are wishing they hadn't. Mrs. Moore, who has been spending some weeks on the Bay of Fundy, tells of having fires every evening for comfort, while the air has been so cold at times that furs were almost a necessity. We would like a little of that kind of weather stirred in with the temperature we have been having this week.

Judge Robinson was on the steamer Rose Standish in Boston harbor at the time she broke a piston rod Monday afternoon, splintering the cylinder head, sides and cross-head, and causing a good deal of alarm among the 400 or 500 passengers for a time. The Judge insists, however, that he was not the man who is reported to have buckled on seven life preservers and bewailed the lack of room for more.

The centennial celebration of the battle of Groton Heights and the burning of New London is to be celebrated with great pomp and ceremony at Groton, Ct., next Tuesday and Wednesday, with an oration by J. R. Hawley, a sham fight by a large military and naval force, extensive fireworks, etc. The celebration is expected to be "immense" in every way, and a big crowd of spectators is also expected. The New London Northern road will sell excursion tickets to the celebration at about half fare.

The annual illumination at Martha's Vineyard comes off this evening, and the New London Northern road advertises its annual excursion to that point, tickets for the round trip being sold at this station for $4, which includes berth on the steamer. Excursionists will take the 6.42 a.m. train for New London, from which point the fine steamer City of Boston will convey them to the Vineyard, and remain there until 10 a. m. Monday, when it will return to New London in season for the afternoon train north.

George W. Calkins, son of Enos Calkins of this place, who for the past five years has been principal of the Catskill (N. Y.) Academy, and for some years prior to that was assistant principal in the Lockport (N. Y.) Union school, has just accepted a call to the principalship of the high school at Passaic, N. J., at a liberal increase of salary, and will enter upon his duties next Monday. Mr. Calkins is a careful, judicious and successful instructor, and the Passaic school is fortunate in securing a master so well qualified for the position.

Go away from home to get the news. Some brilliant and imaginative correspondent on Wednesday sent the following "special dispatch" from Palmer to the Boston Globe, which appeared in its columns Thursday morning: "This is the hottest day of the season, 96° in the shade. Charles D. Fish, freight agent of the New London Northern railroad at this station, Andrew Grant, mail agent between New London and Palmer, and A. Pinney, superintendent of the carpet mill here, were overcome by the heat." As all these gentlemen were at work as usual that day, they do not seem to have been nearly as badly "overcome" as that correspondent was.

Over 500 people availed themselves of the opportunity offered by the New London Northern railroad last Saturday to visit Lake Pleasant and witness the illumination and fireworks in the evening. The managers of the road have decided to give one more opportunity to visit the Lake in the evening, and will repeat the excursion to-night, the train leaving Palmer for the Lake at 6.10 p. m., and starting on its return at 11 p.m. The return train will run through to Stafford. The fare for the round trip from Palmer will be 75 cents, as before, with the additional privilege of remaining over Sunday at the Lake, and returning on any of the Monday trains.

The first heat of the trot on the park last Saturday afternoon was won by Jos. Thompson's horse in 3.07, but the next three heats and the race were taken by J. F. Holbrook's horse in 3.15, 3.12 and 3.10, and he displayed such staying qualities that his friends were confident that another heat would have reduced his time to 3 minutes. R. L. Goddard, Thomas Blanchard and C. H. Robbins were the judges of this and also of the foot race, in which Lorenzo Calkins and Thomas Conry were the contestants, Conry being declared the winner in 7.02. Much dissatisfaction was expressed with this decision, as Calkins was crowded to the outside of the track on the home-stretch, where he was tripped by somebody's foot and fell. He was ahead at the time, and would have undoubtedly won the race but for this. Between 300 and 400 persons witnessed the race, and the receipts at the gate were $64.80.

"Three fishers" went to Blanchardville the other evening to bring home some of the finny tribe which was reported to be frisking around in that quarter in great abundance, and after considerable angling one of them had a tremendous bite. He gave a pull at his pole, when it snapped in two in the middle, and the triumphant fish sailed rapidly off down stream with the detached portion. So big a fish could not be given up; "Jim" knew it must be an eel two or three yards long, and so he gave a vigorous chase, finally overtaking and laying hold of the broken pole, when he carefully pulled in the line, and landed—a "pout" about three inches long. Another member of the party succeeded in capturing an eel about the same length, but the third one came home empty-handed, convinced that he could pull more money out of congealed water in a day than he could of fish out of the fluid article in a week.

There seemed to be a little misunderstanding about the meeting of the Improvement Association last Monday evening, most of the members having an impression that it was to be only a meeting of the executive committee. The meeting was therefore adjourned for one week, and we are requested to urge every member of the association to be present at the district court room at that meeting, next Monday evening, at 7.30 o'clock. The association now numbers nearly fifty members, but should number many times that. We understand that some of our citizens say the association is doing nothing. How much do they expect it to do, on a capital of less than $60? It has already expended some $50 on sidewalk improvements, and is debarred by its constitution from incurring liabilities beyond the amount of money in the treasury. If the growlers and the rest of the citizens will take hold and give the association their support financially and morally, it can be made a grand success in good time. It ought not to be left for fifteen or fifty citizens to do the work which belongs to all. Let each member of the association make it his or her business to be at the meeting Monday evening if possible, and then let as many more come in and join, hand and purse, in helping along the good work.

This hot weather is too much for the thirsty souls who are in the habit of cooling their parched throats with fire water, and several have been before the district court to be thawed out lately, after being badly frozen by a too liberal indulgence in the cooling fluid. Michael Prindable, Thomas Rooney, Thomas Kenney, Thomas Callahan and Emory McGregory were fined for this cause, and let off on payment, but Thomas Madden was out of funds and had to go to jail. The latter was also up on a couple of other complaints, being discharged for lack of evidence on a charge of breaking glass, and committed for disturbing the peace, lacking the $10.95 charged him therefor. James McMahon, for a similar complaint, paid $11.37. Last week Friday Thomas Morrison was up for an assault on George Tracy in Twiss's saloon at Three Rivers, and was fined $11.70, but appealed. Patrick H. Dunley, foreman in the woolen mill at North Monson, was up the same day to answer to a charge of violating the labor law, in employing minors more than 50 hours a week. It was shown that the hours of work had been from 65 to 70 per week, and he was fined $112.80 on two cases, which was paid by the owners of the mill. On Tuesday Charles Wilhelme of Wales, for an assault, paid a fine of $5, without costs.

LUDLOW.

Wm. M. Gregory has taken the grading on the Jenksville road.

WALES.

The ball game played last Saturday on the Wales ground by the Monson club and the Wales nine resulted in a victory, 7 to 3, for the Monsons. Our club goes to Monson to-day.

Telephone poles are being drawn to connect with the Brimfield line to Palmer, and telephones will be put in at E. Shaw's office, E. D. Shaw's office, Hubbard Bros'. store, E. Cady's store and Royce Hotel. They expect to get them to running next week, when a long felt need will be supplied.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Henry Cutler met with a slight accident at his mill, getting his foot caught in the dryer, by which he lost the end of one toe.

Frank Shaw, for several years employed by W. E. Stone & Co., has obtained a situation with Messrs. Curtis & Co., the Springfield clothiers, where he will remove at once with his family.

D. B. West of Holyoke, formerly employed by the paper company at this place, has come back to work for Henry Cutler, manufacturing dryers, which have been greatly improved of late. These dryers are in use all over the country and in Europe. One is to be shipped to Germany at a very early day.

BRIMFIELD.

The telephone company are setting poles to extend their line from Fosket's Mills to Brimfield Center and from there to Wales.

The former members and graduates of the Hitchcock Free High School formed an alumni association Tuesday night with the following officers: President, E. W. Norwood; vice presidents, O. F. Brown and Salem D. Charles; secretaries, Fannie Warren and Alice M. Bacon; treasurer, E. H. Morgan; historian, W. W. McClench; necrologist, Laura M. Spaulding; executive committee, Lizzie Ward and Rebecca Lincoln. The association will hold a reunion in August, 1885, and once in five years thereafter.

HAMPDEN.

S. C. Spellman has rented his store which has been occupied by Charles I. Burleigh & Co. for a storehouse, to E. M. Hitchcock of Springfield, for a drug store. He takes possession immediately.

Arba S. Thresher, who died on Tuesday, was one of the old inhabitants of the town, living near the Monson line. He had been in feeble health for years. He was of a retiring disposition, and was esteemed by all who knew him. His only son and child, A. O. Thresher, was in Montreal at the time of his death, on his way to Chicago, but a dispatch reached him in time for him to be at the funeral, which occurred on Thursday.

WARREN.

The schools in the village commence next week.

Rev. Mr. Canfield returns to his charge in Brooklyn this week.

Mr. Walker has closed his knitting shop, and contemplates leaving town.

The Woman's Board met with Mrs. Barker Ramsdell Wednesday afternoon.

Messrs. Blair and Keyes have sold out to S. P. Rollins, who will open a fancy goods store.

Mr. Barnard, the jeweler, has taken the room formerly occupied by Mr. Warriner's shoe store.

The repairs at the Methodist church are fairly under way. An addition of thirty feet is to be put on the rear, and the church raised two feet. Mr. Cheney is doing the work.

THORNDIKE.

Col. and Mrs. Stever have returned from their vacation at Hyannis.

The new tenement houses, in the course of building, have progressed rapidly this week. Others, it is said, are soon to follow.

A new anthem book, "The Chapel Choir," will be introduced into the services at the Congregational church, next Sunday.

A new street has been opened opposite the Congregational church. The location is one of the pleasantest and healthiest in the village.

Within the past few weeks the dog nuisance has come to the front again. Several farmers in the north part of the town have suffered severely.

D. B. Bishop will take charge of the coal business hitherto carried on by the Thorndike Co. Mr. Bishop is preparing the yard for the fall trade.

The fire department was reorganized the other night, with two divisions, one for the upper, and the other for the lower mill. Geo. Wilson was chosen chief engineer, N. K. Story and Peter Cahill foremen.

WILBRAHAM.

The Fall term of the Wesleyan Academy commenced Wednesday.

The common schools of the town commence next Monday.

Miss Frank Carter has moved to Palmer, where she will go into partnership with Mrs. Collins in a fancy goods store.

Wells Phelps has moved into the Luther Bliss place, which he recently purchased, and is busy repairing the buildings.

The Eastern Hampden Medical Association met with Dr. James Foster on Thursday afternoon, and discussed the subject of "Cells."

The Tyro Society, composed of the young people of the village, gave a public entertainment at the Congregational parsonage on Tuesday evening, with the following programme, which was interspersed with music: Opening address, Gertie Wetherbee; declamation, Mary Howard; reading, Earnest Hoyt; question, "Resolved: That it is better to stay East than emigrate West." Aff., Edwin Howard and Minnie Warren; Neg., Frank Howard and Myra Bumpstead; reading, Louis Richards; declamation, May Merrick; paper, Henry Day and Mary Howard; closing address, Annie Warner.

THREE RIVERS.

Gould & Heath lost a fine market horse last week by colic.

Chas. W. McFarlin is "away down the Providence river" on his vacation.

The village schools commenced their Fall term Monday with the same teachers as last term.

Geo. A. Lane, late overseer of weaving in the Palmer Mills, has accepted a similar position in the mills of the Columbian M'f'g Co. at Greenville, N. H.

The young people's meetings in the Y. M. C. A. rooms will hereafter commence at 7.30 o'clock instead of 8. The meetings are all well attended, and there has been a good interest all through the hot weather.

The pastor of the Union church will speak upon "The Lord's Work, and His Workers," Sunday morning. Communion service will take place in the afternoon, when there will be additions to the church, both by profession and by letter.

The foundation for the addition to the cloth room building of the Otis Co. is all in, and the brick work is being pushed as rapidly as possible. The company will soon put up a large cotton house on the lot between the mills and the school house, and are already at work upon the foundation.

MONSON.

W. J. McElwain is now traveling in Indiana.

Father Kelly is the new pastor of St. Patrick's church.

G. H. Newton's whaling party are at Columbus, Ohio.

Rev. Mr. Maxham, of Stafford, Conn., will preach in Central Hall on Sunday at 5 p. m. The public are invited.

Some of the public schools began Monday, and the remainder will commence next Monday. Indications bespeak a large attendance.

The law being "off" on most game birds Sept. 1st, the hunters have been busy the past few days. Quite a party went to Holland after ducks.

Messrs. Le Roy and Howard Styles collided teams near North Monson last Saturday evening, smashing both wagons and bruising the occupants.

The Monson first nine beat the Wales first nine at base ball at Wales last Saturday 7 to 3, and the Monson second nine beat the Wales second nine at Monson 49 to 20.

The grounds in front of school house No. 1 are being filled and graded, an improvement they have long needed, and which will add much to the appearance of that part of the village.

A handsome stone drinking fountain is promised for the common near the Congregational church, in place of the present unsightly one. There ought to be two or three others in different parts of the village, one near the Methodist church and another near Bills' store.

Monson Academy opened Wednesday with an attendance of 80. The academy building has been renovated internally during the Summer vacation, and presents an attractive appearance. Prof. Cummings and his assistants are doing all in their power to give the institution an impetus, and the outlook is certainly brighter than for several years.

Quite a breeze was raised in this village last Saturday evening by the arrest of F. W. Hall, the newly-arrived grocery and hardware dealer, by Inspector Mountain of the Boston police force, on a charge of swindling. J. F. Costello, a pal of Hall's, was arrested at the same time. They were taken to Boston and held for trial the last of this week. Costello obtained bail, but Hall's friends allowed him to languish. It seems that they were connected with a large gang of swindlers in Boston and Cambridge, whose plan was to buy up stores in different localities, pay for them mainly with notes made out and indorsed by different members of the gang, and which were of course worthless, then sell the goods as best they could for cash, and before the notes came due decamp and try the same game at another place. One Wolfe of Boston was their first victim, and they bled him to the amount of $1500. Before the notes which they had given Wolfe of Boston became due, Hall & Costello, who were the working members of the gang, left Boston and coming to Monson bought out Whipple & Le Roy, paying a small amount in cash and the balance in notes. They then began shipping goods away, and had they been allowed time would have made a rich haul (Hall), but an item in a Boston paper concerning their operations there met the eye of Whipple, who disclosed their whereabouts to the Boston police, who wanted them for the Wolfe affair. Prompt action secured both men and blocked their little game here, so that Messrs. Whipple & Le Roy will lose but little by their transactions with them, as most of the goods sent away have been recovered. A traveling watch dealer is "out" a valuable watch which he sold Hall, taking pay in the ever-ready notes. Hall was a young man of pleasing, modest appearance, rather over-polite, but with a manner rather calculated to disarm suspicion.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The shooting season commenced on Thursday. Now look out for the bags of partridges.

W. L. Roberts and H. E. Johnson will enter the Boston Dental College October 1st, for the Fall course.

The boundary stones of Storrs and Eddy streets have been set the past week. Now if those who are occupying the highway will vacate, these streets will be much improved.

We believe the oldest native of Ware who is now living here is Miss Lovila Wheeler, who is within a few months of being ninety years of age. She is still so energetic that she does the housework that would be thought a heavy task for many of our ladies who are half a century younger.

Nelson, youngest son of James M. Pratt, cut his foot most severely on Tuesday, by stepping upon a piece of broken glass, making an incision of about an inch, and severing an artery, which bled quite profusely. The wound was dressed by Drs. D. W. and W. W. Miner, and the patient is doing as well as could be expected.

By the kindness of A. F. Richardson, town clerk, we learn that the number of deaths in Ware during the first six months of 1881 were 43, while in the same time last year there were 57. Of those who have died this year ten were under five years of age, thirteen over sixty, the oldest being eighty. Ten died of consumption and five of pneumonia.

The Otis Company are making active preparations to supply the growing demand for tenements. On East Main street they are putting in the foundations for two double tenement houses; they are also to move the three old tenement houses on this street back, and in their place put up two blocks containing four tenements each, making twelve new tenements in all. The new tenement block on Canal street is expected to be ready for the masons next week.

Rev. Dr. Perkins delivered an excellent discourse last Sunday morning to the young, and especially to those who are about leaving home. He says that "the excuse is sometimes made that the young are led away by their evil associates," which he thought was but a poor excuse, as "they have no business to have the evil associates to lead them away." Altogether the sermon was one we wish every young man and woman in town could hear and would heed.

FIRES.—Hateley's large pork packing establishment in Chicago was burned last week Friday night, with about 4,000,000 pounds of meat and other property to the amount in all of about $1,150,000. Some 500 men were thrown out of employment.——All the business part of Plano, Texas, comprising 57 buildings, was burned last Saturday. Loss $100,000.——The Union Stove Company's works at Everett were burned Saturday night. Loss about $75,000.——Faxon's paper mill in East Lee was destroyed by fire Sunday afternoon. The Worcester South Agricultural Society, whose grounds are located in Sturbridge, have just completed a grand stand and barn, which will add much to the accommodations of the grounds and to the attractions of the fair. The grand stand is 50 feet long, covered with a good roof, built in a very substantial manner, and will seat 500 persons. The seats afford an excellent view of nearly the whole ground, and will no doubt be appreciated by the public. The barn is 100 by 26 feet, and contains ten box stalls, each 10 by 12 feet, under lock, and 28 common stalls; the box stalls will be furnished free for the use of horses entered in the trotting classes, and the common stalls will be used for feeding transient horses. These new buildings, with the large number of covered cattle sheds built by the society last year, make the grounds as well equipped and convenient for both the public and animals as any in the State. The society last year was out of debt, and had money in the treasury after paying every premium. This year they offer $1100 in premiums on neat stock, farm products, manufactures and miscellaneous articles, and $712 on horses. They also offer five prizes for a bicycle race the first day of the fair, the 1st a gold medal valued at $10, 2d a nickel plated cyclometer, 3d a silver medal, 4th a bronze medal, 5th a hub lantern; entrance free, and they hope to see the clubs in the vicinity well represented. This is a change from the original programme, on account of the bicycle clubs not allowing members to compete for money. An entrance fee of five per cent will be required, entries to close at 12 m. the first day. The entries in the trotting classes close Monday, Sept. 12, at 9 p. m., a fee of ten per cent required. The track is being put in good condition, and the executive committee will spare no effort to make the fair of '81 the most attractive and successful of any ever held there.

Is it possible that a remedy made of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., make so many and such marvelous and wonderful cures as Hop Bitters do? It must be, for when old and young, rich and poor, pastor and doctor, lawyer and editor, all testify to having been cured by them, we must believe and doubt no longer. See other column.—Post. 2w24

SCRIPTURAL.—"Simmons Liver Regulator is certainly a specific for that class of complaints which it claims to cure. Of its beneficial effects we do know something; and from personal experiments, it is our opinion that its virtues have not been exaggerated by the many flattering notices of the press. If any of our fellow-beings are suffering from hepatic disorders, and have doubts in relation to the efficacy of this popular preparation, we can only offer them the simple and candid argument of Philip to Nathaniel, 'Come and see.' Try the proposed remedy, and then you can judge for yourselves."—Rev. RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

Comfort.

If the night is dreary,
It leads to the day;
If the heart is weary,
It learns to pray.
If, standing lonely,
The tears fall fast,
We know it is only
Till life is passed.

'Tis all in measure
Of each day's share—
The pain and pleasure,
The joy and despair.
We lose on the morrow
The ache of to-day;
The sweet and the bitter
Must both pass away.

OUR NORTHERN BOUNDARY.

The northern boundary of this country is marked by stone cairns, iron pillars, wood pillars, earth mounds and timber posts. A stone cairn is seven and a half feet by eight feet; an earth mound is seven feet by fourteen feet; an iron pillar seven feet high, eight inches square at the bottom and four inches at the top; timber posts four feet high and eight inches square. There are three hundred and eighty-five of these marks between the Lake of the Woods and the base of the Rocky Mountains. That portion of the boundary which lies east and west of Red River Valley is marked by cast-iron pillars at even-mile intervals. The British place one every two miles, and the United States one between each British post. Our pillars or markers were made at Detroit, Mich. They are hollow iron castings, three-eighths of an inch in thickness, in the form of a truncated pyramid, eight feet high, eight inches square at the bottom, and four inches at the top, as before stated. They have at the top a solid pyramidal cap, and at the bottom an octagon flange one inch in thickness. Upon the opposite faces are cast in letters two inches high, the inscription: Convention of London," and "October 20th, 1818." The inscriptions begin about four feet six inches above the base and read upwards. The interiors of the hollow posts are filled with well-seasoned cedar posts, sawed to fit, and securely spiked through spike-holes cast in the pillars for the purpose. The average weight of each pillar when completed is eighty-five pounds. The pillars are all set four feet in the ground with their inscription faces to the north and south, and the earth is well settled and stamped about them. For the wooden posts well-seasoned logs are selected, and the portion above the ground painted red, to prevent swelling and shrinking. These posts do very well, but the Indians cut them down for fuel, and nothing but iron will last very long. Where the line crosses lakes, mountains of stones have been built, the bases being in some places eighteen feet under water, and the tops projecting eight feet above the lake's surface at high water mark. In forests the line is marked by felling the timber a rod wide and clearing away the underbrush. The work of cutting through the timbered swamps was very great, but it has been well done, and the boundary distinctly marked by the commissioners, the whole distance from Michigan to Alaska.

GIVE THE BABIES WATER.—Dr. Murdoch says that "cholera infantum and kindred diseases carry off most children that die before they are six years of age, and these diseases may almost always be traced to food and drink. If fed by the bottle, the milk is frequently sour, and the child is often thirsty, not hungry. It wants water, not food; but not getting it, it drinks the milk, which it cannot digest, then follows vomiting, purging, and cholera infantum." Give plenty of cold water (without ice) to children in hot weather. They will not take too much unless overheated; and a child who drinks often of cold water is much less likely to get overheated than one who is deprived of it. He says, "Plenty of water is, in most cases, a powerful preventive against the terrible scourge of cholera infantum."

In speaking of a newly wedded pair, a gentleman said of the husband: "The trouble with John is, he has no mind of his own." "Oh, that will make no difference; Sarah will always be ready to give him a piece of hers," responded a lady.

A Pittston, Me., man went to drown a cat the other day, and three men by violent effort succeeded in getting hold of him as he was sinking the third time and fished him out. The cat didn't even get wet.—Boston Post.

Youth and age have too little sympathy with each other. If the young would remember that they may be old, and the old remember that they were once young, the world would be happier.

"What plan," said one actor to another, "shall I adopt to fill the house at my benefit?" "Invite your creditors," was the surly reply.

Hugging sorrow is not the way to lessen it, though, like the nettle, trouble stings less when it is firmly grasped and not feared.

A homely young girl has the consolation of knowing that when she is sixty she'll be a pretty old girl.—Boston Post.

SIGNS THAT HAVE BEEN PROVED.

The male child born in January becomes a robust healthy man, remarkable for hale appearance and heavy avoirdupois. Hon. A. H. Stephens was born in January.

The woman born in February is of a retiring disposition, domestic, and very effeminate. Dr. Mary Walker was born in February.

The man born in March is free of guile, fierce as a lion, and not ambitious for political preference. Samuel J. Tilden was born in the blustering month of March.

April's child shall succeed in his undertakings, and perform all his promises. Kelly, the motor man, was born in April.

The child of May will court the muses and be famous in the world of letters. The Sweet Singer of Michigan was born in May.

The man born in June will be an Apollo of beauty, and make no enemies. Gen. B. F. Butler was born in June.

The man born in July is of a very peaceful, non-combative nature, and mild and winning in his utterances. Senator Mahone was born in July.

August's child is not aspiring, is statesmanlike in all his actions, and loves party above self. Boss Tammany Kelly was born in August.

The man born in September is full of patriotism and a warm love of his country and its constitutions. Jefferson Davis was born in September.

The child of October is neither envious, malignant, nor imperious, but is of a very forgiving and forgetful nature. Senator Conkling was born in October.

The person born in November is an object of commiseration and charity, and will be unable to keep the wolf from the door. William H. Vanderbilt was born in November.

December's child will cultivate the arts of peace and entertain a firm hatred of traveling. "There's no place like home," is a motto he will strictly adhere to. Gen. U. S. Grant was born in December.

HOW TO EAT WATERMELON.—Instruction in eating watermelon is given by the Baltimore American, which should be good authority, as it is published in the melon region. The hotel plan of cutting a watermelon like a tulip, and putting a lump of ice in it, is condemned, because ice should never touch the pulp; but a burial of the uncut melon in ice for two days is wise. Then cut lengthwise, and eat between meals. "People deal unjustly with this fruit sometimes by eating a hearty meal first, and then topping off with a melon, and then if a moral earthquake sets up in the interior, they charge it to the melon. The watermelon was intended as an episode—an interlude—a romance without words—a nocturne in green and red—not to be mingled with bacon and greens. Its indulgence leaves a certain epigastral expansion, but this is painless and evanescent. The remedy is to loosen the waistband, and—take another slice."

HOW TO COME IT OVER HORNETS.—James T. Bell's account, in the Canadian Entomologist, of the easy capture of hornets may possibly serve as a useful hint to some agricultural reader in an emergency. The nest was unexpectedly found in a stump during a walk in the Belleville forests:—

"A few days after, taking advantage of a cool morning, I sent my two boys to the woods with a small bottle of chloroform and a hard rubber syringe. According to directions, they injected about a drachm of the liquid into the hole, and threw a handkerchief over the entrance. In about five minutes they opened up the nest, when they found the inmates in a perfect state of slumber, and transferred them without trouble to their cyanide bottles. In about an hour they returned, bringing me forty-eight specimens of the insect."

FISHING.—We went out after codfish. Catching codfish is like drawing water with a rope and bucket. It is a very gamey fish; Limburger cheese isn't much gamier. It keeps up a perennial smell that grows stronger and more decided as the years creep slowly by, Lorena. When the Springtime comes, gentle Annie, the old codfish that hangs on a nail away back in the darkest corner of the cellar, discounts the noisy onions piled up on the middle of the floor, and then it doesn't half try. The dryer it gets the louder it grows. You must be blind if you could not hear the flavor of a two-years-old codfish. But when he is new he is quiet, and you miss the old familiar bouquet.—Burlington Hawkeye.

Nothing is more reprehensible and thoroughly wrong thau the idea that a woman fulfills her duty by doing an amount of work far beyond her strength. She not only does not fulfill her duty, but she most signally fails in it, and the failure is truly deplorable.—There can be no sadder sight than that of a broken-down, over-worked wife and mother—a woman who is tired all her life through.—Sanitary Magazine.

The proprietor of a drug store was recently putting up a prescription, and being in doubt about it, asked of the cashier who sat near, "Jennie, how many scruples does it take for a drachm?" "I've seen you take a dram without any scruples," was the instant reply. The proprietor concluded that when he wanted any more information he would consul his dispensatory.

HOW TO GET SICK.—Expose yourself day and night, eat too much without exercise; work too hard without rest; doctor all the time; take all the vile nostrums advertised; and then you will want to know

HOW TO GET WELL,

Which is answered in three words—take Hop Bitters! See other column.—Express.

Because it adds to personal beauty by restoring color and lustre to gray or faded hair, and is beneficial to the scalp, is why Parker's Hair Balsam is such a popular dressing. 6

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

NECESSITATING A SURGICAL OPERATION—LOVING MOTHER ATTEMPTS TO TAKE A PAIR OF SHEARS FROM HER CHILD.

PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle. 1m22

PROTECTION FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE, INTERMITTENT FEVER, GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER, LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER, NAUSEA, ARE THE

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use. If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Prepared only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.

Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

THE PRESIDENT'S WOUND

A PARALLEL CASE IN ARMY LIFE.

BY DR. DAVID KENNEDY, ONE OF THE SURGEONS ON DUTY AT THE U. S. A. GENERAL HOSPITAL, WEST PHILADELPHIA, now of RONDOUT, N. Y.

In the issue of the Philadelphia Record of the 27th of July was published an article relating to the case of Capt. William Palmer, now Quartermaster Second Brigade New Jersey State National Guard, who was wounded at the battle of Mossy Creek, East Tennessee, in winter of 1863. In that article the striking resemblance of the case to tha of President Garfield, in many particulars, was pointed out, the authority for the statement being the brave captain himself. A still better authority is Dr. David Kennedy, then surgeon U. S. General Hospital, West Phildelphia, who had charge of the case, and performed the operation of removing the detached bone, and finally extracted the bullet, the entire treatment being perfectly successful—Capt. Palmer living to this day in the bloom of health. Dr. Kennedy does not hesitate to say that many of his patients, both in military and civil practice, owe their lives to the wonderful healing and strengthening powers of his medicine called "Favorite Remedy." The doctor is in possession of an autograph letter from Capt. Palmer, attesting his indebtedness for his present good health to this medicine—"Favorite Remedy"—which he says has doubled the obligation which he felt to the doctor for the treatment of the captain's terrible wound.

While Dr. Kennedy is engaged in the introduction of "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession at Rondout, N. Y., and performs all the minor as well as capital operations of surgery. Address as above. 4w21

"He and She."

"She is dead!" they said to him. "Come away;
Kiss her and leave her—thy love is clay!"

They smoothed her tresses of dark brown hair;
On her forehead of stone they laid it fair;

Over her eyes, that gazed too much,
They drew the lids with a gentle touch;

With a tender touch they closed up well
The sweet, thin lips that had secrets to tell;

About her brow and beautiful face
They tied her veil and her marriage lace,

And drew on her white feet her white silk shoes—
Which were the whitest no eye could choose—

And over her bosom they crossed her hands,
"Come away!" they said; "God understands."

And there was silence, and nothing there
But silence, and scents of enlantere,

And jasmine, and roses, and rosemary;
And they said, "As a lady should lie, lies she."

And they held their breath till they left the room,
With a shudder, to glance at its stillness and gloom.

But he who loved her too well to dread
The sweet, the lovely, the beautiful dead,

He lit the lamp and took the key
And turned it—alone again, he and she.

He and she; but she would not speak,
Tho' he kissed, in the old place, the quiet cheek.

He and she; yet she would not smile,
Tho' he called her the name she loved erewhile.

He and she; still she did not move
To any one passionate whisper of love.

Then he said, "Cold lips and breasts without breath,
Is there no voice, no language of death?

"Dumb to the ear and still to the sense,
But to heart and soul distinct, intense!

"See now; I will listen with soul, not ear;
What was the secret of dying, dear?

"Was it the infinite wonder of all
That you ever could let life's flower fall?

"Or was it a greater marvel to feel
The perfect calm o'er the agony steal?

"Was the miracle greater to find how deep
Beyond all dreams sank downward that sleep?

"Did life roll back its records dear,
And show, as they say it does, past things clear?

"And was it the innermost heart of the bliss
To find out so what a wisdom love is?

"O perfect dead! O dead most dear,
I hold the breath of my soul to hear!

"I listen as deep as to horrible hell,
As high as to heaven, and you do not tell.

"There must be pleasure in dying, sweet,
To make you so placid from head to feet!

"I would tell you, darling, if I were dead,
And 'twere your hot tears upon my brow shed;

"I would say, though the angel of death had laid
His sword on my lips to keep it unsaid.

"You should not ask vainly, with streaming eyes,
Which of all deaths was the chiefest surprise,

"The very strangest and suddenest thing
Of all the surprises that dying must bring."

Ah, foolish world; oh, most kind dead!
Though he told me, who will believe it was said?

Who will believe that he heard her say,
With the sweet, soft voice, in the dear old way:

"The utmost wonder is this: I hear
And see you, and love you, and kiss you dear;

"And am your angel, who was your bride;
And know that, though dead, I have never died."

—Edwin Arnold.

AUNT SUKIE'S LUCK.

"Well, now, you look sort of sickly and spindling like. Yor aren't hearty, be you, mister?"

The speaker was a tall, gaunt specimen of a woman past middle age, almost masculine in physique. Her complexion made you think of a russet apple with the sunshine on it, so bronzed was it, and the hair was too gray for so young a woman. At first you thought she was old, but a nearer approach reminded you that she could not have passed forty. The calico dress was scrupulously clean, and, although not in the mode, became her with striking grace. The faded shawl seemed honored by its wearer. She looked at you sharply as she talked, and a shrewd smile crept to her lips, as if she had some hidden fountain of content.

What striking and unique characters one meets in the by ways of New England struck out of the native granite. They seem rough hewed at first, until you find them suffused with an inner grace, the magic touch of a Divine Artist.

I was waiting at a little station among the hills for the through express. It was a solitary place, only one house in sight, the horizon outlined by darkling pines and the sandy bluff, on which the desolate structure stood, affording one a view of a still-flowing river, flashing down through the evergreens. It was in June, and the hills were beginning to burn with strange fires. Carmine, emerald and russets flickered against stately backgrounds of darker hue. The robin, the blue-bird and the crow mingled their contented notes in the sunny air. I had an hour and a half to wait, and because I had nothing better to do I was strolling back and forth on the platform nursing my own grief, which lay heavy on my heart. The words of the woman halted me in my self-imposed task, and a careless curiosity caused me to enter into conversation. How often His angels come to us in strange disguise!

"Yes, mister, what you say is true. The Lord A'mighty does shut us in dreadful dark corners, I expect without even a star or nothing for a glint o' light. It does beat all how sort o' rough He appears."

"You know something about it, auntie?" I called her so, for though no older than I, she had had a rich experience, I saw at once.

"Law, yes, I have," and her eyes took on a far-away expression, as if she was looking into the unseen and eternal; "you won't believe it, mister, nohow. You'd think I was deceiving you."

"Tell me about it, if you will."

We seated ourselves on a low bench, in sight of the glowing woods, the sunlight flitting through the clear morning air, fragrant with the fresh odor of the year.

"You see I was just past eighteen when Josiah married me. He was in a powerful hurry. He had just bought a farm; the mortgage was to be worked off; he needed a wife. They did say—you wouldn't believe it—that I was handsome. A Boston chap had asked me to marry him before that, and the folks were rather anxious, for he was rich; but Josiah and I had loved each other since we were children, and I said no. Well, we were married and the farm had a mistress. I knew all about work, and was strong and hopeful. We didn't have any such fixings as that city chap would have bought, but we loved each other, and our poverty was no hindrance to that. We made butter and fatted cattle. The next Spring Josiah raised garden sass, and that year we managed to pay two hundred dollars on the mortgage. It was hard work, and we both were a little tired. I was not quite as strong as the Summer came on."

Here she stopped as if lost in reverie; her face took on that abstracted look again.

"And how was it the next year?" I inquired.

She gave a sigh.

"Mister, my luck began then," and a dawning smile fluttered over her thin lips; "that is, I called it so in my hot wrath. Little 'Siah came to us the second Winter, and from the first he was a piece, so cunning and so cross. I called him possessed some days, but Josiah said he was only powerful healthy. He was our first-born, and he twined about our hearts as the partridge-vine clings to the warm earth. But the Spring was coming on; I was ambitious; I was at work again before my strength came back. I crawled about the house more like a shadow than a young girl not yet twenty. Broken rest at night and long days of ceaseless work took the spunk out of me. I kind of murmured in my heart, but Lord forgive me, for that was only the beginning.

"Josiah had just got the planting done, a powerful large lot, when he was taken sick; never was sick before. Typhoid fever, the doctor said, and he would have a hard one. I did just break down then. I was so weak I just laid 'Siah by his father and then crept up stairs to the south chamber. The moon was full and seemed to mock me, the fields, green as they were, only made my heart ache. I charged the Lord foolishly. I rebelled at my condition. I said it was cruel. He doesn't care. I heard some noise below and then I thought, how sinful; perhaps Josiah will die; he needs you now, and here you are giving way to despair. I did not see my folly, but I plucked up a little courage and went down.

"What a Summer that was! Josiah kept growing worse until he seemed dead in all but breathing. Crazy! oh, how he raved! Some of the time he seemed to think I had married the Boston man and he was living alone on his farm, and then he would pray. Those prayers were the finishing stroke. Josiah was not a professor. I had only done my duty, but all the time I rebelled; I almost cursed God. Again and again I stole up to the south chamber, when Josiah was quiet, and thought, and thought, and thought, until it seemed as if I should go mad. One night I came down more desperate than ever. Josiah seemed asleep, and little 'Siah was beside him. I threw myself down by the bed, and all at once Josiah began to pray. He never did such a thing before. His delirium had not left him, but he seemed inspired. I never could tell what he said; leastwise I didn't try. God knows; but the baby and me he took right to God A'mighty. The moonbeams seemed a shining ladder, and the Lord himself came right down. He pointed to His bleeding side and his bruised hands, and I thought I heard him say, 'For you.'

"I don't know, mister, but you are tired. Josiah went to death's door. He seemed to cross over and then for love o' me came back. It was not until the frost came that he could do any work. Again and again I rebelled, but Josiah's prayers brought me back, for strange as it may seem, when the delirium left him he kept on praying, and it was the Lord's voice calling me. We laid up no money that year. The doctor's bill and the wages of the hired man took all the profits and left us a little more in debt. Little 'Siah had been pining all the season. I was overworked—had never gained any strength, and he felt it. How we loved him as he would 'poor' his father's head, his little wee face trying to smile. I made an idol of my child. When the white frost came and Josiah could just crawl about and do his chores, little 'Siah grew worse, and in a week he died. Perhaps you never lost a child; you don't know then. We buried him under the apple tree, our dear little boy. The night he died he crept up to his father, as he kneeled beside him, and Josiah he prayed, and the words seemed to open the gates to that city where the children are, and his spirit fluttered away.

"And then I gave up. I cursed God in my heart. I asked for death. Weeks passed, but I lay in a stupor, the doctor said I must be roused or die. I had thought it was evil luck for a creature to have religion. I believed in nothing. The Spring came. Josiah was strong again. One day he laid a single Mayflower in my thin hand. 'God watches over the flowers, Sukie,' he said, and then my tears began to flow. I had not been able to cry for months. These little Spring petals spoke to me. I came to myself; I began to pray. I said, 'I will not die.'

"Another Autumn May Flower came to us, a calm, placid sprite. I had something to live for and I rose up with new courage. The red leaves fell on 'Siah's grave, but I knew he was beyond the reach of a dying life. I began to look for the Lord's face. Days came when I seemed to be in a little hell of my own, but afterwards there came peace. I was finding my luck was the Master himself, terrifying, as He was to the disciples on the lake at first, but on a nearer approach a Deliverer."

Here the woman ceased. I had been intensely interested. I cannot put tone and bearing upon paper, or the winning expression of her calm face; I had found bread.

"But that was long ago," I said, hoping she would continue her narrative.

"Yes, sir; the years went on. The farmer's life is a hard one; you can't realize it. It's a tough battle to pay a mortgage and live—not much time for play. The children came, five of them in all, healthy, happy children, but making lots of work for a mother. We had reached the last payment on the mortgage and May Flower was fifteen. We had worked hard, but the years followed one another with no great changes. I thought my luck had turned, and then came that awful diphtheria. May Flower was sick two days. The third day, the blooming girl whose beauty we had worshipped, faded, and the flower was plucked by the gardener. The four remaining children were soon taken. In two weeks' time we had but one child. The hillocks were fresh in the orchard, four of them beside little 'Siah. So sudden was the blow, so anxious the days, that I had not time to think of my grief. But last of all Josiah was taken, wearied out with watching and sorrow. His strong constitution held at bay the terrible disease for weeks. One night, when the crisis came, the medicine became displaced. I was worn out, and the watchers were absent. It could not be helped. He prayed with me, his dying lips not faltering as he commended me to God. He said five children were waiting for him, and he seemed to see them as he drew nearer the end, and at midnight I was a widow.

"You say I must have felt forsaken. I did not feel at all for weeks. I simply breathed; but when in the early Spring I crawled out to the apple tree where the six mounds were beginning to grow green, and fell upon the sod, I left the awful burden at the feet of Him who was immortally sure. It was God's way, and it was well. Do I not mourn? Yes and no; not for them, but for myself, and yet I rejoice."

I never shall forget the expression that flitted across her face as she told me her story. There was a great peace in her heart, I knew; for its calm rested on her brow. I heard the whistle of the coming train, and knew we must part soon forever.

"Mister, you seem sort of down-hearted, as if you were a little rebellious; there is something better than children and husband; it's Him. Acquaint thyself with Him."

The noisy train parted us, I to the east and she to the west, but the sermon had been preached, and I thanked her.

THE RETURN OF THE OYSTER.

The oyster is a peculiar article of diet. Other things are eaten as a matter of course—the oyster is eaten specially. He is not customarily connected with conviviality. He is not eaten as chops and steaks are, because it is necessary to devour him that the pangs of hunger may be assuaged, but he is swallowed as a luxury, not that life may be sustained, but that it may be made more sedate and comfortable. Easy of digestion, he is an apology for midnight gormandizing. He rounds off the theatrical and operatic dissipation, and like the stage and the assembly, he has his seasons. When others retire from urban dissipation he also retires. Like those who swallow him he has his vacation. For awhile he is relieved from assassination and subsides into an aristocratic retirement. In this he is protected by legislation. He enjoys his honeymoon in tranquil waters. He spawns contentedly from May to September. He may be good to eat through all the Summer, but he is protected by prejudice against eating him, as well as by law. Thus he is enabled to perpetuate his race, and to make sure that his descendants will be devoured gratefully by future ages. He did not, perhaps, set the fashion of summer leisure, but he encourages it and shares its joys. Unlike mankind, he can be happy staying at home. He is native to a watering-place, and is not obliged, for hot weather happiness, to take car or steamboat. Safely lodged, at least somewhere in the neighborhood of his wife, the waters generally murmur above him, and he takes his constant bath without the trouble of undressing. The tradition is that he may be crossed in love, but the roughness of his amorous wooing never makes him thin, though possibly it may sometimes make him green or yellow. But he tastes never a whit the worse for his chromatic changes, and is particularly good when there are shades of violet observable in his constitution. Deficient in power of locomotion, he is gently assisted when his apotheosis is at hand. He is carefully carried to the place in which he will receive his final culinary touches, and from which he will depart only to be carried to the festive board, there to be washed down the throats of those who lovehim in a flood of mild Sauterne. A future which the most ambitious nature might revel in the prospect of is before him. He will bring a fillip to jaded appetite. He will lend a new charm to digestion. He will stimulate inventions of cookery, and give a peculiar thrill to deglutition. Morning and evening he will receive the attention of the swallowers. He will be preliminary to chops and eggs and coffee and other first-fruits of the early day. He will modestly keep the soup company at dinner. He will pass through the ordeal of the fry in his delicate coat of crumbs and of batter. He will reach perfection upon the gridiron, like the excellent St. Lawrence; he will even submit to the humble and somewhat commonplace stew; or, appearing in a naked simplicity of rawness, he will be brought forward reposing upon one-half of his original homestead, and being daintily taken upon the fork, will slip down, perhaps, the throat of beauty, to be followed by nameless delicacies, by none of which he will be rivalled in relish. Who would not envy the fate of this lamellibranchiate mollusk?

The oyster is a fortunate creature, if it be fortunate to be much mentioned in history. People who have swallowed an enormous number of oysters figure in anecdote, and are considered to have done something meritorious. The Roman who first formed oyster beds, which he did at Baiæ, is known to have been Sergius Orata, who had the happiness to live in the time of Augustus, and who is known to have made a great deal of money by the exercise of his ingenuity. To-day it is mentioned in all encyclopædias that Apicius, a contemporary of Trajan, was the first who taught the world to pickle oysters. His fame rests upon that fact. There was an Apicius distinguished for his love of lobsters; there was another who set up a school of cookery; but the oyster-pickling Apicius has a distinct fame, and survives freshly in classical dictionaries. When George the First came to England from Hanover, the royal cooks could not please the royal palate in the matter of oysters until it was discovered that his majesty liked them stale, as he had always been in the habit of eating them. When Mr. Thackeray came first to Boston, certain of his admirers asked him to supper. There were, among other delicacies, gigantic oysters. The novelist could not comprehend that he was to swallow one of these in an undivided state, but being shown the way, and having accomplished the feat, he observed that he felt "as if he had swallowed a baby."

We do not know that it has ever occurred to anybody to make a gastronomical almanac, but it would certainly be a pleasanter compilation than those calendars which are put forth by the proprietors of patent medicines. Every month would be marked by the dainties which it produces in the greatest perfection; in one column shad would be glorified, and in another this fruit or that rare vegetable. Each season has its charms of production, whether fish, flesh or fowl; yet nothing is as impatiently waited for as the oyster, nothing is more contentedly eaten, and nothing makes less trouble in the stomach, unless it happens to be stale. Then, indeed, he is diabolical, and so thoroughly incapable of digestion that the man who has bolted him might as well make his will and bid his weeping family farewell. To the whole body of oyster-eaters we present the compliments of the season; and may no such a catastrophe befall them.—N. Y. Tribune.

A negro preacher described hell as ice-cold, where the wicked will be frozen to all eternity. When asked why, he said: "'Cause I don't dare tell dem people nuffin' else. Why, if I say hell is warm, some o' dem ole rheumatic niggers 'll be wantin' to start down the very fus' frost."

It is estimated of the oldest Mason that if he was laid end to end he would reach around the State.

Song of the Clam.

On the ocean shore, where the billows roar,
And the winds and the ripples flirt,
In the tumbling foam I've built my home,
And there I live and squirt.

Where the sunbeams flash and the breakers dash
On the home of the storm and the wreck,
I grapple my foe, the stern clam hoe,
As it snatches me forth by the neck.

And then I am the happiest clam,
For in some watering place,
I find my lot in some cast-iron pot
With the remnant of my race.

A mad caress I lovingly press
On the matron's ruddy mouth,
As I run my race through her handsome face
On my journey down—well—South.

Oh! who would not be a clam like me,
By maidens' lips embraced?
And men stand by with jealous eye
While I gripe the fair one's waist.

Who better than I in chowder or pie,
Baked, roasted, raw or fried?
I hold the key to society,
And am always welcome inside.

What human line compares with mine?
They call me happy—I am;
And if you would know what life is, go
And hire yourself out for a clam!

MAKING THINGS OVER.

Maria," said Mr. Jones, upon one of his worrying days, "it seems to me you might be more economical; now there's my old clothes, why can't you make them over for the children instead of giving them away?"

"Because they're worn out when you've done with them," answered Mrs. Jones. "It's no use making over things for the children that won't hold together; you couldn't do it yourself, smart as you are."

"Well," grumbled Jones, "I wouldn't have a closet full of things mildewing for want of wear if I was a woman, that's all. A penny saved is a penny earned."

That was in April. One warm day in May Mr. Jones went prancing through the closets looking for something he couldn't find, and turning things generally inside out.

"Maria!" he screamed, "where's my gray alpaca duster?"

"Made it over for Johnny."

"Ahem! Well, where's the brown linen one I bought last summer?"

"Clothes bag!" mumbled Mrs. Jones, who seemed to have a difficulty in her speech at that moment. "Just made it into a nice one!"

"Where are my lavender pants?" yelled Jones.

"Cut them over for Willie."

"Heavens!" groaned her husband: then in a voice of thunder, "Where have my blue suspenders got to?"

"Hung the baby-jumper with them."

"Maria!" asked the astonished man in a subdued voice, "would you mind telling me what you have done with my silk hat; you haven't made that over for the baby, have you?"

"Oh, no, dear!" answered his wife, cheerfully, 'I've used that for a hanging basket. It is full of plants and looks lovely."

Mr. Jones now never mentions the word economy, or suggests making over—he has had enough of it.

TWO WAYS OF LOOKING AT THINGS.

Two boys went to hunt grapes. One was happy because they found grapes. The other was unhappy because the grapes had seeds in them.

Two men, being convalescent, were asked how they were. One said: "I am better to-day." The other said: "I was worse yesterday."

When it rains, one man says: "This will make mud." Another: "This will lay the dust."

Two children, looking through colored glasses, one said: "The world is blue;" and the other said: "It is bright."

Two boys, eating their dinner, one said: "I would rather have something other than this." The other said; "This is better than nothing."

A servant thinks a man's house is principally kitchen. A guest, that it is principally parlor.

"I am sorry that I live," says one man. "I am sorry that I must die," says another.

"I am glad," says one, "that it is no worse." "I am sorry," says another, "that it is no better."

One man counts everything that he has a gain. Another counts everything else than he receives a loss.

One man spoils a good repast by thinking of the better repast of another. Another one enjoys a poor repast by contrasting it with none at all.

One man is thankful for his blessings. Another is morose for his misfortunes.

One man thinks he is entitled to a better world, and is dissatisfied because he hasn't got it. Another thinks he is not justly entitled to any, and is satisfied with this.

One man makes up his accounts from his wants. Another from his assets.

THE DRUNKARD'S WILL.—I leave to society a ruined character, wretched example, and a memory that will soon rot.

I leave to my parents, during the rest of their lives, as much sorrow as humanity in a feeble and declining state can sustain.

I leave to my brothers and sisters as much mortification and injury as I could bring on them.

I leave to my wife a broken heart, a life of wretchedness and shame, to weep over my premature death.

I give and bequeath to each of my children, poverty, ignorance and low character, and the remembrance that their father was a monster.

A wonderful and useful invention is the common sand blast. Marble, coated with wax where the inscription is desired, can be cut away by it, leaving the raised letters. Plate glass covered with fine lace, except where the pattern is traced, can likewise be cut with beautiful figures without injury and at small expense. The blast will not injure the naked hands, but will whittle away the finger nails speedily. Steel thimbles are little protection, but a wrap of soft cotton guards them completely. Anything hard is cut at once, but anything soft and yielding is uninjured.

New York is enforcing a law against young men sending their wives back to their parents to be supported. Something new turns up every day to brush the roseate hue and gaudy glitter from the face of matrimony.—Detroit Free Press.

None have less praise than those who hunt for it.

AN INDIAN JUGGLER'S TRICKS.

There is nothing very remarkable in the appearance or dress of our conjuror. An elderly man, short and sparely made, dressed in dingy, white cotton, with very tight sleeves to his robe and very tight legs to his drawers, he might have been a respectable servant out of place, but actually was a small land owner who had taken to conjuring for his amusement. When he entered the room he spread a white cloth upon the floor and sat down upon it with his back to the wall, the door of the room being on his right hand. His spectators were disposed of in the following fashion:

Mr. Smyth sat on a chair nearly in the middle of the room, I was sitting on a sofa near the door, the Parsee merchant stood in the door about an arm's length from me. The servants stood about in groups, the largest group being between the door and conjuror. As soon as he had settled himself he turned to the Parsee and asked for the loan of a rupee. The peddler at first demurred a little, but on being guaranteed against loss, he produced the coin. He was going to put it into the conjuror's hand, but the latter refused and told the Parsee to hand it to Mr. Smyth's bearer.

The bearer took it and at the request of the conjuror, looked at it and declared it to be really a rupee. The conjuror then told him to hand it to his master. Mr. Smyth took it, and then followed this dialogue:

Conjuror.—"Are you sure that is a rupee?"

Smyth.—"Yes."

Conjuror.—"Close your hand on it and hold it tight. Now think of some country in Europe, but do not tell me your thoughts."

Then the conjuror ran over the names of several countries, such as France, Germany, Russia, Turkey and America,—for the native of India is under the impression that America is in Europe. After a moment's pause, Mr. Smith said he had thought of a country.

"Then open your hand," said the juggler; "see what you have got and tell me if it is a coin of the country you thought of." It was a five-france piece, and Mr. Smyth had thought of France. He was going to hand the coin to the conjuror, but the latter said, "No, pass it to the other sahib." Mr. Smyth accordingly put the five-france piece into my hand; I looked closely at it, then shut my hand and thought of Russia. When I opened it I found, not a Russian but a Turkish silver piece about the size of a five-france piece or of our own crown piece. This I handed to Mr. Symth and suggested that he name America, which he did, and found a Mexican dollar in his hand. The coin, whatever it was, had never been in the conjuror's hand from the time the rupee was borrowed from the Parsee merchant. Mr. Smyth and his bearer had both of them closely examined the rupee, and Mr. Smyth and I turned over several times the five-france piece, the Turkish coin and the dollar; so the trick did not depend on a reversible coin. Indeed, it could not, for the coin underwent three changes, as has been seen. I need only add, for the information of those who know not India, that a rupee is only about the size of a florin and therefore about half the weight of a five-france piece. The juggler performed several other tricks that day, but they were of a common-place kind, and in no way comparable to the coin trick, which I have never seen rivaled by any conjuror in India or Europe.—University Magazine.

THE CHAMPION FISH STORY.

An Eastern tourist had been spinning some incredible fish yarns, when one of the party turning to an old mountaineer, said:

"Bill, that gets away with fishing in this country, don't it?"

"Wal, I don't know 'bout that."

"Do you mean to say that you have caught more and larger fish?"

"No; but I've caught some purty big fellers."

"Come, now, tell us the weight of the largest trout you ever caught."

"Wal, I can't exactly tell as to the weight, but you folks can figger on it. Now, you know it is over 200 miles around this yer lake. Put that down. As I said before, I don't know the weight of the biggest trout I ever yanked out, but I did haul one up on the beach, and after I landed him the lake fell three feet, and you can see by the water-mark over yonder it hasn't riz since."—Nevada Journal.

If you ask the average man plumply, "Is it wrong to defraud a doctor, a lawyer, or an editor?" he would doubtless say yes; but it would be a feeble, perfunctory yes—one that merely trembled on the epiglottis, and did not lift up the liver and ramify the soul. The popular mind is debauched on this subject and needs educating. We could publish cases in our own experience that would draw tears to the eye of a Nihilist. It seems fair to add that these remarks are more in sorrow than in anger; and that we stand ready to recant, if our delinquents will prove to us practically that we are wrong.—Exchange.

An extract from the letter of a recent immigrant: "I'm wurking on the roads here at Saratogy, but I don't intend to do it long. Shure, Mike Mulhooly, who left home three years ago come next Aister, has a rich young lady to drive him around the city wid a beautiful span, and he sitting up behind an' his arms folded loike a foine gintleman entirely."

"Smith," said Jones, the other day, "did you ever consider the differentiation of absoluteness as compared with the indissoluble absolute?" "No-o-o," said Smith, "don't think I ever did. But did you ever consider why a pig's tail kinks to the left?" And that is the reason why Jones calls Smith a diaphanous ignoramous.

"Did your son contract any bad habits while in college, Mrs. Mulvany?" "Sorra the wan of thim, sorr; he conthracted all the good ones he had whin he wint there, and small enough they were, sorr, without any conthraction. It's losin' he'll be on the conthract, I'm belavin'."—Burlington Hawkeye.

The correct thing is buy-sigh-kle—not buy-sic-kle.—Boston Transcript. Ah, what a relief to know that. It removes a prodigous amount of gloom and indecision and so forth from off our mind. We thought it might be pronounced bick-why-cley.—Norristown Herald.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1881.

CONGRESSMAN REED of Maine has accepted an invitation to address the Republican State Convention at Worcester.

THERE are shocking reports of dreadful loss of life, as well as of property, by the terrible forest fires which are raging in Michigan. It is estimated that 500 people have perished in the flames, and that 5000 people are homeless. Dead bodies are being brought in from every direction. Whole townships have been swept away, houses, crops and everything, and great destitution must ensue. There was a heavy rain at Bay City Wednesday night, which it was hoped would extend over the burning districts. An appeal for aid for the sufferers was issued on Thursday by the mayor of Detroit, asking for money, clothing, food and other supplies.

ANOTHER Indian war seems imminent, this time with the Apaches in Arizona. It was reported the first of the week that Gen. Carr and his entire command, numbering over 100 men and officers, were massacred on the 30th ult., but this report was happily untrue. It seems that Gen. Carr that day arrested an Apache medicine man who had been fomenting trouble, and when his men were camping for the night they were attacked, their own scouts turning against them. The soldiers fought gallantly and repulsed the Indians, and that night retreated, reaching Fort Apache safely the next day, having lost eight men. The Apaches are now very generally on the war path, and a number of white settlers have been killed.

ANOTHER train robbery occurred in Missouri Wednesday evening, bolder and more successful than the recent one on the Chicago and Rock Island road at Winston. The western express on the Chicago & Alton road was stopped by nine masked men with a red signal and obstructions on the rail, in a dense wood two miles west of Glendall. The men were armed with Henry rifles and at once took possession of the train, robbing the express safe and cleaning out the pockets of every passenger of all that was valuable. They then disappeared in the woods. A large posse of men was soon in pursuit, and Gov. Crittenden has issued a proclamation calling upon the people to rise and exterminate the robbers. It is high time this was done. If such lawlessness is to prevail in that State, people will take good care to keep out of it, and leave it to the tender mercies of the ruffians.

AT the suggestion of Gov. Hoyt of Pennsylvania, Tuesday was observed in several States as a day of fasting and prayer for the recovery of the President. The Governors of some other States appointed Thursday, and others Friday. Gov. Long appointed Thursday, recommending that all business be suspended from 10 a. m. to 12 m., and that the people during that time should unite, in the meeting house or at home, in fervent prayer for the President. His recommendation was observed with a general heartiness and reverence which showed how deeply the people feel the President's condition to be a personal, as well as a national affliction, and from all parts of the Commonwealth earnest prayers ascended to the Great Physician that His healing grace might be bestowed upon the stricken President. The day was also generally observed throughout New York State, and special services of impressive power were held at Long Branch.

CONSIDERABLE discussion is going on in some quarters relative to the President's inability to discharge his official duties, and the duty of the Vice President to assume the functions of the Presidential office. We do not see the occasion for any such action at present certainly. The country cannot always get along without a President, of course, as it practically has for the past two months, but it can get along for many weeks yet, unless something unusual turns up. The constitution is unfortunately very vague on this point. It does not say anything about the Vice President becoming acting President, but this seems to be the only thing to be done, should the President's sickness be a long one. If he recovers, he is clearly entitled to resume the duties of the office to which he was elected; and in the meantime there can be no objection to the Vice President acting for him, when the occasion requires. But there is nothing for him to do now anyway, and he should wait until there is.

Disastrous drouth and forest fires continue to prevail in Canada, Michigan and some other portions of the country. Many houses have been burned in North Ontario, where bush fires are raging in every direction, filling the air with smoke, which became so dense in many places Monday as to necessitate the use of lamps, while the air was stifling. Railroad travel is seriously impeded, and prayers are being offered in the churches for rain. In Michigan large tracts of woodland have been burned over, and farm buildings, crops and stock have been destroyed, causing an immense amount of damage, while it is reported that several small villages have been burned, and the railroad and telegraph lines are suffering severely.

Another tragedy came to light at New Haven last week Friday, in the discovery of the dead body of Mrs. Mary Forbes in the Quinnipiac river. It is not known whether it is a case of murder, suicide or accident. Mrs. Forbes had not been seen for three weeks. New Haven is attaining an unenviable notoriety for mysterious crimes of this sort.

The recently destroyed town of New Ulm, Minn., is being rapidly rebuilt, and in a short time few traces of the tornado's path will be visible. The cash contributions have amounted to $37,188, and the new houses, built by direction of the relief committee, are now nearly all completed.

A Jaundiced Day.

Nature had an extremely bilious turn on Tuesday. Dog days had plainly been too much for the good old dame, and just as they passed away she nearly collapsed from exhaustion. The long drouth, the muggy, vitiated and smoky atmosphere, had so debilitated her that her liver ceased to perform its functions, and the bile forced its poisonous way to every part of her system. Her temperature jumped up to an unusually alarming point; circulation and respiration almost ceased; her countenance assumed the brassy hue of a book agent's cheek, and the Millerite physicians were convinced that a speedy dissolution was inevitable. But they made a miscalculation, as many other physicians have done in similar circumstances. Dame Nature summoned to her aid all her reserve forces, and with one mighty effort threw off the biliary incubus so completely that at night no traces of it were left.

It was a day long to be remembered, calling vividly to mind the accounts of the famous Dark Day of a century ago, when, at noon of May 19, 1780, an awful darkness settled down over New England, continuing until midnight, and fowls went to roost, birds ceased their songs, animals displayed much terror, and men and women didn't show much else. The atmosphere was noticed to have a peculiar yellowish appearance Tuesday morning, which grew in intensity until noon. The heavens seemed as though made of burnished brass, and the greenish-yellow light was very uncomfortable to the eyes, while it caused many curious transformations in colors. It was like looking through a smoked glass. The grass and green leaves assumed a brilliant emerald splendor. Purple blossoms became pink, and pink scarlet; blue turned to green, and white to yellow. People's faces looked yellow and sickly, and there was a weird luster to the streets and buildings. The little light which penetrated to the interior of the buildings seemed like the reflection of a distant conflagration in the night. It became so dark that lamps had to be lighted generally in houses, stores and factories, their white light bearing a close resemblance to the electric light, while the latter gave so blue a light as to be practically useless. Fowls huddled together, though they did not go to roost, while the birds ceased their singing, and an almost ominous silence pervaded all nature. This lasted until about 3 p. m., when the gloom gradually wore away, the sky assumed its natural hue, and the sun made its appearance, a welcome harbinger of pleasanter things. The phenomenon extended over the whole of New England, and also over central and northern New York, and in many places schools were dismissed and factories shut down for want of lighting facilities.

Opinions differ as to the cause of the phenomenon, but it seems probable that it was due to smoke from the forest fires, coupled with the excessive moisture of the atmosphere, and the absence of all wind. It is not strange that to many people the unnatural darkness indicated the approaching end of the world, though few of them, probably, are now sorry that they were mistaken.

THE PRESIDENT.

The long-desired, but equally dreaded, removal of President Garfield has been successfully accomplished, and he is now breathing the pure sea air at Long Branch. It became evident at the close of last week that he could not much longer hold his own in the malaria-laden air of Washington, while the patient himself manifested the utmost anxiety to get away from there. Prompt steps were therefore taken for his removal to Long Branch, where he desired to go. Everything that affection and skill could suggest was done to effect the important change with the least possible fatigue, and at 5.40 a. m. Tuesday he was taken from the White House in an express wagon to the special train, and in about seven and a half hours the 250 miles were accomplished, and the President was safely quartered in the elegant cottage of C. G. Francklyn of New York, which had been offered for this purpose free of rent. During the journey the President's pulse showed improvement rather than the contrary, and he enjoyed the trip hugely, but the excitement of anticipation and realization of course told on his strength, and his sleep was considerably broken. Wednesday was unfortunately the hottest day of the season at Long Branch, and the President's pulse and temperature ran up to a high point. But on Thursday both were lower, the pulse touching 94 once, and the President felt better with the cooler air. No radical change is expected for a day or two, but it is believed that the Lord has heard the prayers of the people, and that the President has made a start on the road to convalescence. All the physicians accompanied him on his journey, but on Wednesday Surgeons Barnes and Woodward and Dr. Reyburn were dismissed, it being felt that so many physicians were not needed. Dr. Bliss remains in charge of the case, with Drs. Hamilton and Agnew, who will alternate in their attendance. Mrs. Dr. Edson has also retired from her post as nurse, the President preferring that none but male nurses shall be with him now.

Thomas A. Marvin, alias Morton, alias Merritt, etc., who recently married a young woman at Richmond, swindled a bank out of several hundred dollars on worthless checks, and in a few days deserted his bride, seems to be the most-married man of anybody in the country outside of Utah. Fifteen wives have been brought to light so far, and a large section of country remains yet to be heard from. He now languishes in jail, and will not be likely to embark in any more matrimonial ventures for some time to come.

Mr. Moody, the evangelist, will sail for Europe with his family on the 24th inst., and Mr. Sankey goes to-day. They expect to be gone two years or more, and to labor most of the time in Scotland and the northern part of Europe.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Charming evenings this week.

A cooler wave struck us yesterday.

The evenings are lengthening very perceptibly.

Travel continues very heavy on the railroads.

Rev. D. H. Ela, D. D., preached at the Methodist church last Sabbath afternoon.

Misses Laura and Lucia Stoughton, of Otsego, Mich., are visiting friends in this place.

Dog-days have departed according to the almanac, but dog-day weather still tarries.

Rev. B. M. Tillotston will preach in St. Paul's Church to-morrow morning and evening.

Washerwomen found their clothes looking as though they had been through saffron water Tuesday.

Judge Robinson's daughter May has entered the Girls' Latin School at Boston, passing a very successful examination.

Dr. S. Ruggles and H. N. Sedgwick have been enjoying a carriage drive through the northern part of the State this week.

The new counters are in position in the banking room on Church street, but it will be another week, at least, before they are ready for use.

Communion services will be held at the Methodist church at Four Corners on Sabbath afternoon; also baptism and reception of members.

Wm. B. Davis has bought of J. M. Converse the Barrett house and thirteen acres of land adjoining, a little west of the village, for $2500.

Quality tells, after all. Most people preferred kerosene to the kind of daylight furnished Tuesday forenoon, in spite of the difference in price.

"Distance lends enchantment to the view." This is especially true when looking at that big powder wagon, which occasionally passes through the village.

A temporary bridge has been built over the Swift river near Barrett's Junction, for the convenience of the firm who are about to put in a dam and soapstone works at that point.

Rev. S. S. Martyn of New Haven will again preach at the Congregational church to-morrow morning and evening, and Rev. S. A. Read at the Baptist church in the afternoon.

Miss Dora Chapman of Westboro has accepted the clerkship in White, Hellyar & Co's. store made vacant by the departure of Mrs. Sexton, who has resigned on account of poor health.

The Boston & Albany Railroad advertises an attractive excursion to the Thousand Islands and down the St. Lawrence to Montreal, to start Sept. 19. Tickets will be sold for $14.15, and are good until the 27th.

Wednesday was the hottest day yet, by all odds. The air was about as oppressive as it well could be; thermometers went up to 99 in the shade, and the temperature seemed like that of an oven. It was just "too utterly too," but the afternoon heat was tempered by a good breeze, which made it a little more endurable, and the evening was quite comfortable.

The poles of the American Rapid Telegraph Co. have been re-set through the town this week, to carry the wires further from the telephone wires. This has had to be done for a large part of the distance between here and Boston, as well as on other parts of the line, the current on the Rapid wires being so strong as to interfere with telephonic communications over the other wires.

At the session of the probate court held in Springfield Tuesday, administration was granted on the estates of—Hezekiah Root of Ludlow, L. H. Brigham administrator; Mary A. D. Merrick of Monson, Charles Merrick administrator. These wills were also approved—Solomon B. Brewer of Wilbraham, Amos D. Brewer executor; Irene Eddy of Monson, George Eddy executor.

Something over fifty people from this vicinity attended the centennial celebration at Groton, Ct., this week. The programme was carried out admirably in the presence of an immense crowd of people, and to the satisfaction of all. There was a tremendous rush of passengers on the New London Northern road, the cars being packed inside and outside, but they were all handled without an accident of any kind.

A party of ten of our citizens went to Lyme, Ct., last Monday, on a hunting excursion, returning Wednesday evening flushed with success and delighted with their trip. They had a fine time shooting along the banks of the Connecticut, and brought down over 500 birds, mostly rail. We do not propose to rail at their performance, but will merely add that it was a "rale" fine string of rail which J. A. Smith sent to the editor, and we can only say, Moral—more rail.

Complaint is made that shade trees through the village and town are mutilated without any regard to their beauty or usefulness, for the convenience of telegraph and telephone wires. This is an outrage on the rights and comfort of the people which cannot be too strongly condemned, and should not be permitted. We have altogether too few shade trees along the highways to allow any of them to be mutilated in this way. If they interfere with the wires let the wires be carried around them, but do not spoil the trees. We invite the attention of the selectmen to this matter.

The band gave their last lawn dance of the season Wednesday evening. The dances have not proved largely remunerative, although they have furnished a small amount to apply on the band's indebtedness. The concert Wednesday evening was enjoyed by quite a concourse of people. There is no denying the fact that the band play exceedingly well, and deserve to be well sustained by the citizens. The members have pluckily persevered in the face of many discouragements, and it is suggested by a citizen that it would be no more than fair now for the people to chip in and remove the balance of their debt, which is now about $100. The suggestion is a good one, and ought to be carried out. Who will set the ball in motion?

Business would have been dull the past week at the district court but for our liquor saloons, which furnished a good quota of cases. John Sullivan paid $6.20 for drunkenness last week Friday. On Saturday Samuel Laplant was arraigned for an assault, but the case was continued two weeks. On Monday Thomas Cary was committed because of inability to pay his fine for drunkenness, and Wm. Fitzpatrick suffered a similar fate from the same cause on Wednesday. Frank Spooner of Belchertown was found lying by the roadside Wednesday night thoroughly dead drunk, having left his horses on the street for a number of hours, with a little boy in the wagon. The boy and horses were cared for and Spooner was arraigned Thursday afternoon, after he had returned to consciousness, and paid $6.30 for his spree. Patrick Sullivan of Ware was committed for the same offense, being out of funds.

We don't like to say it, but it is nevertheless a fact that the season of prayer for the President, appointed by Gov. Long to be observed throughout the State on Thursday forenoon, passed by without any public observance whatever in Palmer. Places of business remained open as usual, and there were no services in any of the churches. This was no doubt due to the fact that all the churches are at present without a pastor, and there was no clergyman in the village to take the matter in hand. Certainly the heart-felt desire of our people for the recovery of the President cannot be doubted, and many earnest prayers were unquestionably offered during the day for his restoration to health.

Mr. Gibbs of New York, president of the National Petroleum Gas Co., addressed a few of our business men at the office of Lawyer Gardner Tuesday forenoon, on the prospects of a gas company in this place. He stated that every company which he has organized is doing a good paying business, and demonstrated by figures that a company organized here, which could dispose of 5000 feet of gas per day, would pay its stockholders 6 per cent easily, after the first year, while the cost to consumers would be less than is charged in cities. No effort has yet been made to secure subscriptions for stock, and very likely none will be made at present, owing to the lateness of the season; but it is hoped that steps will eventually be taken in this direction which will result in the organization of a company and the construction of works which shall give us the convenience of gas throughout the village.

About 25 members of the Improvement Association attended the meeting at the court room Monday evening, and there was a general interchange of views on the opportunities and prospects of the association, and a discussion of the best measures to be adopted to increase its usefulness and pecuniary resources. All present seemed to feel that something should be done to draw the people of the village together more and increase the sociableness of the community, and it is probable that, with this in view, a series of entertainments of some sort will be held during the coming months. As an entering wedge in this direction, it was voted to have a clam chowder on the Weeks House lawn next Wednesday afternoon, to which the whole village is invited. The chowder will be served from 4 to 7 o'clock, with bread and butter, cake, coffee, etc., at the merely nominal price of 25 cents. The association will make no canvass of the place, but housekeepers throughout the village are requested to contribute bread, butter, sandwiches, cake, pickles, sugar or milk, sending them to the vestry of the Baptist church any time between 2 and 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon—the earlier the better. [Let every lady in the place consider this a personal request to contribute of her good things.] The Palmer Cornet Band have kindly volunteered to furnish music for the occasion, and it is earnestly hoped that all our citizens will manifest their interest in the association and its objects by being on hand, while the savory chowder is expected to attract those—if there be any such—who do not feel any special interest in the association. Should the weather be rainy or unfavorable, the chowder will be served in the vestry of the Baptist church. The committee having the arrangements in charge are: C. B. Fisk, A. H. Willis, H. H. Sanders, Mrs. C. L. Gardner, Mrs. J. F. Holbrook and Mrs. L. E. Child.

LUDLOW.

The case of Lucius Simonds against the town for $500 damages received last April on the highway near the Orchard was heard by the Palmer selectmen as referees the other day, Congressman Robinson appearing for the plaintiff and Lawyer Long of Springfield for the town. The decision was reserved.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. S. A. Read preaches at the Baptist church on Sunday.

Two persons united with the Union church last Sunday on profession of faith, and three by letter.

The mills shut down, and business generally was suspended between the hours of 10 and 12 Thursday, and a union meeting was held in the Union church at 11 o'clock, when many earnest prayers were offered for the recovery of the President.

WARREN.

The library is expecting some new books in a few days.

The high school commenced on Monday with a large number of scholars.

Public services were held in the Congregational church Thursday forenoon.

The boot shops and some of the factories were closed Tuesday, also some of the schools, it being too dark to see to work.

Mr. Melvin has sold his interest in the Warren Herald to H. M. Converse, formerly of the Easthampton Euterprise. Mr. Converse took possession on Wednesday.

BONDVILLE.

M. D. L. Town is erecting a building near the depot for his grain business.

We think Wednesday was the hottest day this season, the thermometer standing at 102° in the shade.

R. L. Bond, the coal dealer, has just received his Fall supply, and is retailing it at $6.75 per ton.

C. E. Dickinson, formerly baggage master at this station, has been appointed agent on the main line at West Brimfield.

Daniel Quirk, of New Hampshire, has bought of Luther Collis a building lot just across the river, and will build a house thereon.

BRIMFIELD.

Mrs. Jemima Grover celebrated her 107th birthday last Saturday, a good number of her descendants visiting her on that day. She remains in bed much of the time, and is quite deaf, though in pretty good health generally.

Rev. L. H. Cobb, D. D., of Oberlin, Ohio, secretary of the American Home Missionary Society, made Brimfield a short visit last week Thursday, for the purpose of laying the claims and needs of the West before Rev. Mr. Atkins for consideration, and to persuade him to go to Dakota. It is rather likely that Mr. Atkins may accept the call, and go to take charge of an important Congregational church in Custer City.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

On Wednesday the thermometer registered 98° in the shade.

O. F. Benedict has started this week on a western trip, and will be away two or three weeks.

On Thursday the schools were closed and several attended the meeting for prayer for President Garfield at the Street. Business at the mills went along as usual.

Messrs. Cutler & Co. are going to have their stationary engine thoroughly overhauled and repaired, which will delay them several days, unless there is more water in the river.

C. A. Fuller lost his pocketbook, containing about fifty dollars, on Wednesday evening. It was afterwards picked up and taken to him by Mrs. Hollingsworth, who was suitably rewarded.

HAMPDEN.

John P. Stockton, Jr., and family of New York city are visiting Mrs. Stockton's friends here.

Mrs. Calvin Stebbins of Lebanon, N. H., is spending a few weeks here visiting her father, Marcus Beebe.

The three societies here united Thursday evening in a public prayer meeting for the recovery of the President, at the Congregational church.

There are unpleasant rumors in and about Glendale (Wilbraham), implicating individuals of high standing, which, if true, must make unpleasant feelings. For the reputation of those concerned, all hope the reports are groundless.

Wm. P. Chaffee and wife, with Andrew Beebe and wife, returned home from a few weeks' visit in Ohio and Michigan, last Saturday. They had a pleasant time all around, but report a severe drouth in Ohio, and vegetation and crops suffering much.

WALES.

F. E. Sibley is away on a short vacation.

The Monson ball club beat the Wales nine 21 to 8 last Saturday.

H. M. Needham, Esq., and family have returned to Brooklyn, N. Y.

The pastor of the Baptist church will deliver a temperance lecture in the vestry next Sunday evening.

The hours of prayer for the restoration of the President were observed at the Baptist church on Thursday.

The Beacon Mill has been silent all the week, caused by the giving out of the main shafting. A new segment is being put on the water wheel, and they expect to start again Monday. The Wales Mill is starting up, and will in course of two weeks be in full operation.

The dark day reached this section of the globe as well as elsewhere, and was the cause of considerable speculation, one party recommending people to read the second chapter of Joel, and they might get some light on the subject. The mills were obliged to suspend operations in certain portions, and stores and private residences were lighted by lamps at portions of the day. Various cases of sickness during the day were reported, and old people referred to the similar phenomenon 100 years ago.

MONSON.

H. White has the lumber ready for his new house, and the frame will be put up at once.

Henry E. Aldrich has placed a telephone in his livery stable. It will be a convenience to his patrons.

The score of the ball game between the Monson and Wales clubs last Saturday was: Monsons 21, Wales 8.

John Brockbank, who went to Colorado in the Spring for his health, is a well man again, and returns some time this month.

Services of prayer for the recovery of the President were held Thursday forenoon at the Congregational and Catholic churches.

At the new straw works of Gage & Reynolds the presses are in, also some of the machines, and the engine is expected every day.

Geo. E. Grout is settled in his new store, and the public will find it a very neat and pleasant place to purchase anything in his line.

Monson loses one of her best citizens in the removal to Holyoke of R. O. Fenton. The best wishes of all his friends go with him and his family.

Arba Squier has the contract for remodeling the South Monson depot, and will push the work rapidly. He has had a large force of men in his employ all this season, and says that while it was almost impossible to get additional help two months ago, now he can hire a plenty every day.

BELCHERTOWN.

The warmest day of the season was last Wednesday. Thermometer 95° in the shade.

There was a union prayer meeting at the Congregational church Thursday, from 10 a. m. to 12 m., to pray for the recovery of President Garfield.

The second annual Morse reunion was held in Slate's Grove, South Belchertown, the 31st ult., with A. W. Morse as president and M. A. Morse secretary. After sociability had ruled until age returned to the scenes of youth, and youth was encouraged to higher attainments, all, to the number of one hundred, sat down to the bountifully loaded tables until hungry nature cried enough. At this point Mrs. Harriet Morse Cummings stepped to the organ, and soon the musical talent of five generations made the grove echo with the beautiful songs of Zion. And then, that all the elements in man's nature might be fed, the president called upon Jesse Morse for a historical address, which he gave to the delight and profit of all. The other speakers were A. W. Morse of Belchertown, Lawyer H. C. Davis of Ware, Prof. Harwood of Newton, S. S. Morse of Holyoke, M. A. Morse of Belchertown and Messrs. Benj. Davis, A. J. Davis, F. F. Sherman of Ware. With Mrs. Harwood at the organ a parting hymn was sung, and a happy company separated to meet again (D. V.) at the same place the last Wednesday in August, 1882, with M. A. Morse as orator and Mrs. F. G. Shaw of Belchertown poetess.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Several bar-room rows are reported recently.

All the newspaper correspondents at the Orchard are at a loss for items.

The public used to hear a good deal about the young ladies' industrial club, but it don't sew much now.

The population has grown at an alarming rate during the past few weeks, and they won't be taxable for 20 years yet, and only part of them then.

Rev. F. M. Sprague has had his August vacation, and occupied his pulpit at the evangelical church last Sunday. Miss Annie M. Hill, the organist, who has spent a few weeks with friends in Newton, was also at her post.

There is a prospect that some of the young rowdies who hang around the iron bridge Sundays and evenings and insult people, especially ladies, will get a thrashing, even if the party administering it does have to pay a fine for assault and battery.

Louis Morin, at one time a partner in the grocery firm of Wight, Rivers & Co., and who has spent about 28 months in Colorado, has returned and purchased an interest in the grocery firm of Wm. P. Emory & Co. The firm now consists of Wm. P. Emory, H. D. Packard and Louis Morin.

A certain nautical drummer—he carries considerable sail—struck the Orchard the other day and made a mash—of himself. He was about to alight from the passenger wagon and stood on the side of the vehicle and surveyed the situation, and then made a grand leap, floundered and flopped on the ground, and even the linen duster could not cover his confusion.

We would like to in-choir how those young ladies have succeeded in learning the art of smoking cigarettes. It is not known why they wish to smoke them, but it is believed that they have read that the tobacco used in them is from old cigar stumps picked up on the street, and being too modest to put their lips to those of the horrid men, do the next best thing and put between their lips what has previously been between these of some man.

The attention of our readers is invited to the attractions offered by the New England Manufacturers' and Mechanics' Institute, at their new building on Huntington Avenue, Boston. This grand exhibition is contributed to by over one thousand exhibitors, from all parts of New England, comprising nearly every branch of manufactures, many of them in active operation, showing methods of making boots and shoes by machinery, pottery, glass manufactory, looms for weaving, etc., etc. All classes of sewing machines, artistic work of all kinds. It is estimated that there are in all ten acres of shops and factories. At night this exhibition is lighted by thirty electric lights, and three thousand gas burners. Horse-cars, from all railroads, make connections direct with the exhibition. Excursions will be arranged for from all the principal cities and towns in New England, and the total attendance is estimated at not less than half a million.

The coroner's jury at New Haven in the case of Jennie Cramer charges James Malley, Jr., with being criminally responsible for her death, while Walter Malley and Blanche Douglass are held to be morally responsible for the same crime. An examination of the stomach and other organs of the dead girl revealed the presence of arsenic in sufficient quantities to have caused death. The trial of the Malleys began at West Haven on Monday, there being five counts against them.

The New England Fair at Worcester this week has been a great success, and has drawn together a great concourse of people. Wednesday was the most notable day, the presence of Gen. Sherman, Gov. Long and other notables proving a greater attraction than the exhibition of stock, which has been very fine.

A young woman at Attleboro recently died of cerebro-spinal meningitis, after suffering for 105 days. The medical records, it is said, describe no other case where a patient sick with that disease has endured so long.

The resignation of Superintendent Doole, of the Westboro Reform School was accepted by the trustees at their meeting last week Friday. Magazines, Etc.

There is hardly a literary man in America whose writings have been more wisely read than those of Dr. J. G. Holland, nor one whose name is better known among the people. It is said that nearly 600,000 copies of his books have been sold, to say nothing of the enormous sale each month of Scribner's Monthly, over which he presides as editor-in-chief. The Century Co., publishers of Scribner's (to be known as "The Century Magazine" after October), will soon issue a portrait of Dr. Holland, which is said to be a remarkably fine likeness; it is the photograph of a life-size crayon drawing of the head and shoulders, recently made by Wyatt Eaton, and will be about the size of the original picture. It is to be offered in connection with sub scriptions to The Century Magazine.

The version of Abraham Lincoln's famous Gettysburg speech printed in St. Nicholas last June raised a newspaper discussion of the correctness of its wording. It has since been shown that several forms of the speech exist. First comes the draft written beforehand by Mr. Lincoln; in the delivery of the speech, however, he made a few slight variations from the draft, and thus gave rise to the stenographically reported versions published soon afterward in the newspapers; the other and last form is that which he himself perfected, and copied in his own handwriting for the Soldiers' and Sailors' Fair at Baltimore in 1864. This last version—undoubtedly the one he would wish posterity to consider authentic—is to be given in the forthcoming September number of St. Nicholas.

The publishers of Rev. Dr. Robinson's "Spiritual Songs for the Sunday School" have just issued a little book containing only the hymns of that work and selling for one-half the money. It will be a most desirable supplement to the large book, greatly increasing its usefulness. The new edition is prettily bound in flexible red cloth, and costs but 20 cents. The complete tune edition, bound in stiff boards, covered with red cloth, with red edges, costs 40 cents to schools in quantities. It is said that the sales of the latter work have mounted up into the scores of thousands since its issue a year ago. The Century Co., New York.

WICKEDNESS.—Not a bad heart, but a diseased liver, is often the cause of violence of temper, vindictiveness, and sometimes crime; for, when the spleen is affected, the heart is clogged in its better impulses, for want of action to carry off the bile.

"I have used Simmons Liver Regulator, not only once but often, and can confidently assert it has done me more good than any other medicine I have ever used. I think it is the greatest medicine for diseased liver made in the world. Many of my neighbors have used it, and all will say as much, if not more, than I do for its virtues.

CATARRH has never yet been mastered by douches, smokes, inhalations, or any other merely local remedy. DR. WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE is an inoculative, constitutional remedy which is absorbed by the infectious poison and kills the spores, wherever located. It is a wonderful discovery—an infallible cure at any stage. The CURE is sold by druggists, or DELIVERED by D. B. DEWEY & Co., Agents, 46 Dey Street, New York. Pamplets, with full explanations and overwhelming proofs, mailed free. s

Is it possible that a remedy made of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., make so many and such marvelous and wonderful cures as Hop Bitters do? It must be, for when old and young, rich and poor, pastor and doctor, lawyer and editor, all testify to having been cured by them, we must believe and doubt no longer. See other column.—Post. 2w24

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.—It seems strange that any one will suffer from derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization. It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the BEST BLOOD PURIFIER ever discovered, effectually curing scrofula, syphylitic disorders, weakness of the kidneys; erysipelas, malaria; all nervous disorders and debility, bilious complaints and all diseases indicating an impure condition of the blood, liver, kidneys, stomach, skin, etc. It corrects digestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it ACTS LIKE A CHARM, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

BAKER'S PAIN PANACEA cures pain in man and beast. For use externally and internally.

DR. ROGER'S VEGETABLE WORM SYRUP instantly destroys worms and removes the secretions which cause them.

It is a foolish mistake to confound a remedy of merit with the quack medicines now so common. We have used Parker's Ginger Tonic with the happiest results for rheumatism and dyspepsia, and when worn out by overwork, and know it to be a sterling health restorative.—Times. See adv. s

CENTAUR LINIMENT.—Invaluable to families and owners of horses. For sale everywhere.

Entering In.

The church was dim and silent
With the hush before the prayer;
Only the solemn trembling
Of the organ stirred the air.
Without the sweet, still sunshine,
Within the holy calm,
Where priest and people waited
For the swelling of the psalm.

Slowly the door swung open,
And a little baby girl,
Brown-eyed, with brown hair falling
In many a wavy curl,
With soft cheeks flushing hotly,
Shy glances downward thrown,
And small hands clasped before her,
Stood in the aisle alone,—

Stood half-abashed, half-frightened,
Unknowing where to go,
While like a wind-rocked flower,
The form swayed to and fro;
And the changing color fluttered
In the little troubled face,
As from side to side she wavered
With a mute, imploring grace.

It was but for a moment—
What wonder that we smiled,
By such a strange, sweet picture
From holy thoughts beguiled—
When up rose some one softly,
And many an eye grew dim,
As through the tender silence
He bore the child with him.

And I—I wondered (losing
The sermon and the prayer)
If, when some time I enter
The "many mansions" fair,
And stand abashed and drooping
In the portal's golden glow,
Our God will send an angel
To show me where to go!

HOW TO PRESERVE THE TEETH.

The following directions for the care of the teeth have been issued by the Medical Committee of the National Dental Hospital, London:

The teeth should be cleaned at least once a day, the best time being night,—the last thing. For this purpose use a soft brush, on which take a little soap, and then some prepared chalk, brushing up and down and across. There is rarely any objection to the friction causing the gum to bleed slightly.

Avoid all rough usage of the teeth, such as cracking nuts, biting thread, etc., as by so doing even good sound teeth may be injured.

When decay is first observed, advice should at once be sought. It is the stopping of a small hole that is of the greatest service, though not unfrequently a large filling preserves the tooth for years.

It is of the greatest importance that children from four years and upwards should have their teeth frequently examined by the dental surgeon, to see that the first set, particularly the back teeth, are not decaying too early; and to have the opportunity of timely treatment for the regulation and preservation of the second set.

Children should be taught to rinse the mouth night and morning, and to begin the use of the tooth-brush early (likewise the toothpick.)

With regard to the food of children, to those who are old enough whole meal bread, porridge, and milk should be given. This is much more wholesome and substantial food than white bread.

If the foregoing instructions were carried out, comparatively few teeth would have to be extracted.

TAKE PLENTY OF SLEEP.—Plenty of sleep is requisite to health, particularly to brain-workers. The more sleep the brain gets the better does the brain work. All great brain-workers have been great sleepers. Sir Walter Scott could never do with less than ten hours. A fool may want eight hours, as George III. said, but a philosopher wants nine. The men who have been the greatest generals are the men who could sleep at will. Thus it was with both Wellington and Napoleon. The greatest speakers in the House of Commons have been the men who go to sleep there as much as they like. This explained the juvenility of the aged Palmerston. Sleep is in many cases the best of medicines. When you take to your bed, get all the sleep you can out of your bedstead, even although, to quote Dick Swiveller's saying, you have to pay for a double-bedded room, confessing that you have taken a most unreasonable amount of sleep out of a single bed. You will be banking a whole store of recuperative energy. It is safe to say of any man that if he sleeps well he will do well.

He was a grave and reverend college professor, and he was enjoying the air on one of the wharves. "Do you catch many mackerel this year?" he asked of a hardy fisherman. "Well," the son of Neptune replied, "we seine some." "Pardon, young man," exclaimed the man of letters, "you mean we saw some." "Not by a hornfull," replied the fisherman. "Who ever heard of sawing fish? We split 'em, sir, we split 'em, but we never saw 'em." The man from the college seemed mystified. He turned away and sighed at the ignorance of the times.

An Illinois justice has decided that "courting is a public necessity, and must not be interrupted; therefore, if a young man wanted to kiss a girl, he might put her father out of the room first if he liked." This is a big bid for immigration to that state.

A little girl, hearing it thunder, exclaims: "I guess God is putting His children to sleep, for I hear Him pull out his trundle-bed."

An evening prayer of a little five-years-old: "I thank Thee for keeping me safe and good all day, just as I didn't 'spect you to."

Four things come not back; the spoken word, the sped arrow, the past life, the neglected opportunity.—Oscar.

A little girl seeing an old lady take out her false teeth, said: "Mrs. M., can you take out your tongue, too?"

Said a little girl of four: "What are the stars? Are they God'a eyes?"

ALMOST A TRAGEDY.

It was Sunday evening. Angelica had invited her "best young man" to the evening meal. Everything had passed off harmoniously until Angelica's seven-years-old brother broke the blissful silence by exclaiming:

"Oh, ma! yer oughter seen Mr. Lighted the other night, when he called to take Angie to the drill, he looked so nice sittin' 'long side of her with his arm—"

"Fred!" screamed the maiden, whose face began to assume the color of a well-done crab—quickly placing her hand over the boy's mouth.

"Yer oughter seen him," continued the persistent informant, after gaining his breath, and the embarrassed girl's hand was removed; "he had his arm—"

"Freddie!" shouted the mother, as in her frantic attempt to reach the boy's auricular appendage she upset the contents of the tea pot in Mr. Lighted's lap, making numerous Russian war maps over his new lavender pantaloons.

"I was goin' to say," the half-frightened boy pleaded, between a cry and an injured whine, "he had his arm—"

"You, boy!" thundered the father, "away to the woodshed."

And the boy made for the nearest exit, exclaiming as he waltzed, "I was only goin' to say, Mr. Lighted had his army clothes on, and I'll leave it to him if he didn't!"

And the boy was permitted to return, and the remainder of the meal was spent in explanations from the family in regard to the number of times Freddie had to be "talked to" for using his fingers for a ladle.—Yonkers Statesman.

REAL HOMES.

Will it not be well for parents to reconsider thoughtfully the question of home-making? Do your children love their home? Do they prize it? Is it the "dearest spot on earth," or a mere boarding-house? If there is a fault, whose is it? If a lack, who is to blame?

Home-making, be it remembered, is a work in which all have a part. Fathers may not shirk their duty by saying that it is "woman's business." Neither can it be done without forethought, direction, and effort. Oftentimes it involves the sacrifice of selfish comforts and pleasures. The happy tumult of the youngsters' play may disturb your after-dinner doze. A "children's hour" in the early evening, given up to games and entertainments, in which you are their companions and leaders, may not be so agreeable as to spend the time at play, the club or in neighborhood gossip. But you are under bonds, morally, to give yourselves to your family as the need requires. If you do no more than to "raise" your children, you have, before God, no right to have any.

Make your house a real home—cheerful, bright, beautiful in spirit, happy in all its expressions,—and you will be a good deal better fitted to begin enjoying heaven at once, when you get there.—Golden Rule.

HOW THE QUEEN OF THE TURF TRAVELS.—Maud S. is now seven years old, and weighs 960 pounds. In going from one place to another she travels only on first-class passenger trains, and has a special car for her exclusive use. It is one of the finest horse cars on the New York Central railroad, and is fitted up in the most comfortable manner. A large stall is arranged in the forward end of the car, all the four sides being thickly upholstered with leather softly padded to prevent any possible injury. Four men besides Capt. Stone accompany her. Of these one is her driver, and two of the others are grooms, who ride constantly with and wait upon her as carefully as though they were maids and she a veritable princess. She rides backwards, thus preventing draughts which might arise from the side doors or the ventilating apparatus of the car. Maud is, of course, allowed to ride free over the Vanderbilt lines, and on account of belonging to William H. Vanderbilt, most railway lines "pass" her.

A HELPING HAND.—The poor give more than the rich. This proposition holds good as a general principle. Money is by no means the only thing to give in this world; neither do large gifts necessarily contribute more to the happiness of the receiver than small gifts. Go into any country and converse with the people. Ask who ministers most to their happiness. You will very likely be told some venerated clergyman, whose salary has never been more than enough to barely support him; or some poor widow who goes from house to house, like a ministering angel, wherever sorrow and suffering demand consolation and relief. It is astonishing how much one without money can give. A kind word, a helping hand, the warm sympathy that rejoices with those who do rejoice, and weeps with those who weep. No man is so poor, no woman is so poor as not to be able to contribute largely to the happiness of those around them.

Here is a positive fact that occurred in one of the public schools in this city recently: A small boy was asked to name some part of his own body. He thought a moment and then replied: "Bowels—which are five in number, a, e, i, o, u, and sometimes w and y."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

A little girl joyfully assured her mother the other day that she had found out where they made horses; she had seen a man finishing one. "He was nailing on his last foot."

HOW TO GET SICK.—Expose yourself day and night, eat too much without exercise; work too hard without rest; doctor all the time; take all the vile nostrums advertised; and then you will want to know

HOW TO GET WELL,

Which is answered in three words—take Hop Bitters! See other column.—Express.

Because it adds to personal beauty by restoring color and lustre to gray or faded hair, and is beneficial to the scalp, is why Parker's Hair Balsam is such a popular dressing. 8

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

NECESSITATING A SURGICAL OPERATION—LOVING MOTHER ATTEMPTS TO TAKE A PAIR OF SHEARS FROM HER CHILD.

PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle. 1m22

CARTER'S IRON PILLS

—FOR THE—

BLOOD, NERVES AND COMPLEXION.

We recommend CARTER'S IRON PILLS to every woman who is weak, nervous and discouraged; particularly those who have thin, pale lips, cold hands and feet, and who are without strength or ambition. These Pills quiet the nerves, give strength to the body, induce refreshing sleep, enrich and improve the quality of the blood, and purify and brighten the complexion. They cure palpitation of the heart, nervousness, tremblings, nervous headache, leucorrhœa, pains in the back, and other forms of female weakness. Remember that Iron is one of the constituents of the blood, and is the great tonic. CARTER'S IRON PILLS are also valuable for men who are troubled with nervous weakness, night sweats, &c. PROTECTION FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE,
INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE

PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use. If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Prepared only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS

Are the mildest ever known, they cure Headache, Malaria! Disease, Biliousness and Indigestion.

THESE

PILLS

Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and Nervousness. Sold by all Druggists.

25 Cents per Box. 1y7

THE PUREST AND BEST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

A combination of HOPS, BUCHU, MANDRAKE and DANDELION, with all the best and most curative properties of all other Bitters, makes the greatest Blood Purifier, Liver Regulator, and Life and Health Restoring Agent on earth.

No disease can possibly long exist where Hop Bitters are used, so varied and perfect are their operations. THEY GIVE NEW LIFE AND VIGOR TO THE AGED AND INFIRM.

To all whose employments cause irregularity of the bowels or urinary organs, or who require an Appetizer Tonic and Mild Stimulant, Hop Bitters are invaluable, without intoxicating.

No matter what your feelings or symptoms are, what the disease or ailment is, use Hop Bitters. Don't wait until you are sick, but if you only feel bad or miserable, use them at once. It may save your life. It has saved hundreds.

$500 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help. Do not suffer or let your friends suffer, but use and urge them to use HOP BITTERS.

Remember, Hop Bitters is no vile, drugged, drunken nostrum, but the purest and best medicine ever made; the INVALIDS' FRIEND & HOPE," and no person or family should be without them.

D. I. C. is an absolute and irresistible cure for drunkenness, use of opium, tobacco and narcotics. All sold by druggists. Send for circulars.

MERCHANDISE & SHIPPING TAGS Blank or printed to order at Journal Office.

My Coat.

My poor, dear coat, be faithful to the end:
We both grow old; ten years have gone,
Through which my hand has brushed thee, ancient friend;
Not more could Socrates have done.
If weakened to a threadbare state,
Thou still must suffer many a blow,
E'en like thy master brave the storms of fate—
My good old coat, we'll never part—oh, no!

I still can well remember the first day
I wore thee—for my memory's strong!
It was my birthday; and my comrades gay
Chanted thy glories in a song.
Thy poverty might make me vain;
The friends who loved me long ago,
Though thou art poor, will drink to thee again—
My good old coat, we'll never part—oh, no!

This fine-drawn rent—It's cause I'll ne'er forget—
It beams upon my memory still;
I feigned one night to fly from my Lisette,
And even now her grasp I feel.
She tore thee, but she made more fast
My fetters, while she wronged me so;
Then two whole days in mending thee she passed—
My good old coat, we'll never part—oh, no!

Ne'er drugged with musk and amber hast thou been,
Like coats by vapid coxcombs worn;
Ne'er in an ante-chamber wert thou seen
Insulted by the lordling's scorn.
How wistfully all France has eyed
The hand that ribbons can bestow!
The field-flower is thy button's only pride—
My good old coat, we'll never part—oh, no!

We shall not have those foolish days again
When our two destinies were one;
Those days so fraught with pleasure and with pain,
Those days of mingled rain and sun.
I somehow think, my ancient friend,
Unto a coatless realm I go:
Yet wait awhile, together we will end—
My good old coat, we'll never part—oh, no!

—Beranger.

MY COUSIN JANET.

I was twenty-seven when cousin Janet Gray came to live with us. Janet was our only living relative. Her mother and mine were cousins, and when Mr. Gray died she made the girl promise to come to us.

Mother and I lived quietly in a little cottage on the edge of a pleasant town in Massachusetts. My father had been dead seven years. He had left us a modest income, and I had a situation as book-keeper in a large establishment on the street.

I had not even seen Janet since we were children, for her home was in Pennsylvania, and we were not given to straying from our own hearthstone. Consequently, I was not prepared to see anything quite so lovely as the girl who stood in our little sitting-room when I came in from the store one stormy October night.

An exquisite figure clad in deep mourning. Two slender hands clasped closely before her and a sweet face whose weariness and pallor went straight to my heart. I loved her then, my little darling! I who had never loved any woman but my dear mother.

Her hair was tinted with bronze, and her eyes were like two purple pansies.

She turned when I entered the room, and advanced a step to meet me, when mother said:

"Charles, this is your cousin Janet."

I thought I had never seen anything quite so heavenly as the flitting smile which played over her delicate features, when, for an instant, that little white hand rested on my own.

I have neither time nor space to tell you of all the enchanted days that followed. We did not go out a great deal because of Janet's recent bereavement, but there were long, cosy and delightful evenings at home, which made the dull routine of business less irksome.

As the first sharp bitterness of her sorrow wore away, she grew more than ever charming. Mother became deeply attached to her, and I would have died a thousand deaths to have saved my darling a moment's pain.

In January I assisted her to get some music scholars, among whom was Etta Julian, daughter of a wealthy Southern lady—the aristocrats of our little town.

Every Saturday Janet went to the brown mansion to give her little pupil a lesson. Here she met Walter Julian, the eldest son.

He was a handsome young fellow, tall, slender, and elegant in figure, with curling hair and handsome black eyes, long lashed and expressive. The sort of a man who is always successful with women.

I knew how it would be when he brought her home one afternoon in his cutter. I was at home with a slight cold when they drove up.

Janet came in flushed and excited. She was unusually gay that evening, and I watched her with a jealous pain gnawing like a hungry beast at my heart.

What were my chances against this elegant gentleman? I was a thick-set, broad-shouldered, common-place looking fellow, with brown hair and a sandy beard and dark eyes.

I had none of Walter Julian's grace and ease of manner, but oh, the warm and passionate heart that beat in my breast for my sweet cousin Janet!

Every day she grew more radiantly lovely. A brilliant color glowed in her delicate cheeks, and her eyes were like stars of brightness.

In April she received her dismissal from Mrs. Julian.

Janet laughed rather bitterly when she showed me the lady's note—a curt, cold line, with no word of explanation.

"Do you understand that Charlie!" she said, with flaming eyes and cheeks of carmine. "She dismisses me because her son, her son loves me! Yes, loves me," she cried passionately, "even as I love him—deeply, truly, tenderly! Oh, heaven pity me!"

And she threw herself upon the sofa, burying her face in the cushion, and weeping convulsively.

I put my own pain aside and tried to comfort her. It seemed impossible that even so haughty and aristocratic a family as the Julians should despise Janet; she was so fair and graceful—so perfect a lady, despite her position.

But Walter Julian haunted the house continually.

I did not like him; it was hardly natural that I should, considering the fact that he was my rival.

At last his visits ceased. Janet made no comment, but I read the suffering in the white face and heavy eyes.

I heard one day of young Julian's engagement to a young lady who was visiting at his home.

It was well that Janet should know this; so after satisfying myself of the truth of the rumor, I made mention of it at home in my cousin's presence.

She turned her gray eyes wistfully for an instant upon me, and then fell like a broken lily at my feet. My poor darling!

I raised her in my arms and called mother, who sent me out of the room.

For a week Janet went about like a little white ghost, and at the end of that time Walter Julian came to see her.

He rode out on horseback. It was in May. The apple trees were fragrant masses of bloom, and Janet and I were lingering by the gate in the soft twilight.

He looked wretchedly. He was haggard and flushed, and there were dark rings under his handsome eyes.

He walked straight toward her with outstretched hands, and as I turned to enter the house I heard him say hoarsely:

"My darling, I cannot bear this!"

An hour later, Julian on his horse was tearing madly down the road, while under the blossoming trees my cousin lay sobbing in wildest abandonment.

Mother coaxed her into the house, while I, feeling utterly wretched, took my hat and went for a stroll.

Before morning Janet was talking, laughing and raving wildly in her chamber, singing snatches of songs which she and Julian had sung together, and calling on me to take her away, to save her from some terrible evil which seemed to pursue her.

The physician, whom we at once summoned, pronounced it a case of low, nervous fever.

In the sorrowful days which followed, Janet in her delirium revealed the substance of that last interview with Julian.

My darling had never doubted that his love for her had been as pure as her own for him; but in that last visit he had shown the blackness and baseness of the heart under that pleasing exterior.

His engagement and marriage with another woman need never separate two who loved so well, he had said.

And Janet sent him from her with scorn and indignation, writhing with anguish over her broken idol.

It was well for Walter Julian, well for my father's name, also, that he went away and kept himself out of my path.

There were days when my cousin went to the shores of the River of Death that there was murder in my heart for the man who had wrought the cruel thing.

She drifted back to us at last, a white, frail creature, with big sorrowful eyes, and a sharp little chin, with such fragile hands that I could not look at her without tears.

I was her willing slave. I carried her up stairs and down. I read to her, waited upon her—and worshipped her more and more, if that were possible, as the days went by.

By this time the Julians were in Europe. Walter was married.

All that summer Janet was delicate. I thought she was mourning over her lost love, though she never mentioned his name.

I had made up my mind that I would go away as soon as she grew strong.

I had been offered a good situation in a distant city, which I had decided to accept, with the hope that absence might starve out my love for her.

But as the time of my departure approached it seemed impossible for me to leave her.

It was the first week in September. I went out and threw myself down under the big apple tree in the garden, and laid my face upon my folded arms. It was Sunday.

Everything in nature seemed quiet, peaceful and beautiful, the skies were fair and blue, the crickets chirped cheerily; mother's late, old-fashioned posies bloomed lavishly on either side the garden walk.

I was going to leave Janet, my little love, who cared not at all for me. I was utterly miserable.

Not all the brightness and peace of the Sabbath morning could heal the soreness at my heart.

I do not know how long I had lain there when Janet herself came down the walk. I knew her footstep—I did not look up.

She paused beside me.

"Go away, Janet," I said, as ungraciously as possible; "I want to be alone."

"Charlie, don't send me away," she said, with a curious inflection in her voice.

I lifted my head to look at her.

She blushed crimson under my gaze, but her eyes met mine sweetly, truthfully. I read therein something which stunned and dazzled me with rapture.

I raised myself to a kneeling posture, and buried my face in the soft folds of her dress, while her little cold slim hands ruffled my hair carelessly.

"Janet, dearest," I stammered, "can you, do you care for me?"

"You are a stupid old darling, Charlie Russell, not to know that I have loved you all summer, and have been waiting for you to speak."

I staggered to my feet again, and folded her close to my breast, and kissed the shining rings of her hair, which had grown out after her illness, and kissed the white brow, the closed eyes, the flushed cheeks, and the sweet, red lips—forever my own.

"I never loved Walter Julian," she whispered; "I loved the man I thought him to be. Charlie, I was so afraid you would go away without a word!"

I did not go to New York.

Janet and I are married. Mother lives with us, and the delight of our life is a tiny baby girl—our baby, Janet's and mine, bearing the name, Marian.

Walter Julian is a dissatisfied, reckless gambler, and his wife is a dashing leader in society.

"Does it, after all, pay to be honest?" a disappointed young man writes. No, my son, not if you're honest for pay it doesn't. Not if you are honest merely because you think it will pay; not if you are honest only because you are afraid to be a rogue; indeed, my dear boy, it does not pay to be honest in that way. If you can't be honest because you hate a lie and scorn a mean action; if you can't be honest from principle, be a rascal; that's what you are intended for, and you'll probably succeed at it. But you can't make anybody believe in honesty that is bought and sold like merchandise.—Burlington Hawkeye.

A BRAVE GIRL.

A young man called, in company with several other gentlemen, upon a young lady. Her father was also present, to assist in entertaining the callers. He did not share his daughter's scruples against the using of spirituous drinks, for he had wine to offer.

The wine was poured out, and would have been drank, but the young lady inquired:

"Did you call upon me or papa?"

Gallantry, if nothing else, compelled them to answer:

"We called upon you."

"Then you will please not to drink wine—I have lemonade for my callers."

The father urged the guests to drink and they were undecided. The young lady added:

"Remember, if you called upon me, then you drink lemonade; but if upon papa, why, in that case I have nothing to say."

The wine glasses were set down with their contents untasted. After leaving the house, one of the party exclaimed:

"That is the most effectual temperance lecture I have ever heard. Indeed, it was sown in good ground."

True, and it took root, sprung up and is now bearing fruit. The young man from whom these facts were obtained, broke off at once from the use of all strong drink, and is now a clergyman, preaching temperance and religion. He now sees his former dangerous position, and holds in grateful remembrance the lady who gracefully and still resolutely gave him to understand that her callers should not drink wine.

THE WIDTH OF THE DOOR.

"I want a piece av board sawed off, planed on the outside," said Mr. Donlevy. "We had a few friends in at the house last night to a christenin', and the lower panel av the dure got kicked out in the merriment."

"How wide do you want the piece cut?" asked the carpenter.

"The width av the dure, av course," replied Mr. Donlevy.

"And how wide is the door?"

"Well, it's as wide as a chair is long, jist. Ye kin jist lay a chair across to kape the childer in an' the pigs out, an' it fits as though it wur matched fur it."

"But all chairs are not the same size," said the carpenter.

"Aw, thundher an' turf! yer thicker headed nor a railroad spike; the chair comes up jist even wid the edge of the window-sill."

"But how high is the window sill?" asked Mr. Chips.

"Bother the badgerin' tongue o' ye," growled Mr. Donlevy, "it's only the wideness av me hand barrin' the thumb higher than the rain-wather barrel that sthands outside, and av ye can't make it from that ye lave the job, and I'll take it to some carpinther that understhands his business and knows the measure av a dure in his head widout makin' a chatechism av himself. Say, can ye cut me the pace aff the size av that, ye leather-headed wood-butcher, ye, or will I go find a man av yer craft that has half the sinse he wor born wid?" And he had to go find one.—Hawkeye.

HE GOT HIS DINNER.

A good story is told of a couple of farmers who lived a few miles apart. One day one called on the other, happening around at dinner time. The person called upon, by the way, was a rather penurious old fellow. He was seated at the table enjoying his dinner. The visitor drew up to the stove, looking very wishfully toward the table, expecting the old farmer to invite him to dine. The old man kept on eating.

"What's the news over your way, neighbor?" Still eating. "No news, eh?"

"No, I believe not." Presently a thought struck the visitor. "Well, yes, friend, I did hear of one item of news that's worth mentioning.

"Ha, what is that?"

"Neighbor John has a cow that has five calves."

"Is that so? Good gracious! What in thunder does the fifth calf do when the others are sucking?"

"Stands and looks on just as I do, like a fool."

"Mary, put on another plate."

KNEW WHEN TO QUIT.—"I think I may be excused for a little show of pride in saying that I knew when to quit Wall street," he observed, as an elevated train carried them over that great thoroughfare.

"So you used to speculate, eh?"

"Yes, I was on the street for seven years."

"Made your pile, I suppose?"

"Yes, I made and lost money the same as the rest. At one time I could draw my check for $93,000, and that isn't so bad for a man who went into Wall street with only $40 in his pocket."

"And you knew when to quit?"

"Yes, sir."

"That was when—when?"

"That was when I had enough left to pay my fare to Elmira and hire a boy to carry my satchel up to my father-in-law's house," was the reply.

"I've been to see Mrs. Tittletattle," said Mrs. Telltale, "and the way she ran on about you was perfectly scandalous." "So she's been talking about me, has she?" asked Mrs. Brown, quietly. "Yes, indeed she has," replied Mrs. Telltale with emphasis. "What a nice time you two must have had," said Mrs. Brown, with a sweet smile.

Exit Summer.

The golden-rod is yellow;
The corn is turning brown;
The trees in apple orchards
With fruit are bending down.

The gentian's bluest fringes
Are curling in the sun;
In dusty pods the milkweed
Its hidden silk has spun.

The sedges flaunt their harvest
In every meadow nook,
And asters by the brookside
Make asters in the brook.

From dewy lanes at morning,
The grapes' sweet odors rise;
At noon the roads all flutter
With the yellow butterflies.

By all these lovely tokens
September days are here,
With Summer's best of weather,
And Autumn's best of cheer.

A MODEL FARM IN DAKOTA.

Twelve miles northwest of Fargo, Dak., is a farm which is declared by every one who has seen it to be a model in equipment and management, and the claim is made good by the splendid crop which it has produced this year. The owner is John B. Raymond, United States marshal for Dakota, who went to the war when he was sixteen years old, and served till it was over. The farm is only two years old, and this is the first crop. Mr. Raymond was recently requested to furnish a few totals from his account book, and the reckoning stands as follows: "Before we receive a return from our crop we shall have invested $55,000. That includes the purchase of our land, the erection of five barns, a dwelling-house, an elevator capable of holding 100,000 bushels of wheat and oats, all the stock and machinery necessary to run the farm, and all the cost of breaking the land, planting and reaping the crop and delivering it at the market. We have 2,000 acres in wheat and enough oats to keep our stock. We shall get about twenty-five bushels to the acre, which will be 50,000 bushels from the entire place. We shall save out our seed wheat for next year, and can then sell the crop for about $50,000." This is a return of about ninety per cent upon the investment, or a dividend of forty-five per cent a year, for the farm lay idle the first twelve months after its purchase. To the question, "Do you consider it an advantage to own your own stock, and do your own work?" Mr. Raymond replies: "There are as many ways of farming as there are of going to heaven, and you will find that every farmer likes his own method best. I consider it twenty-five per cent cheaper to own my machinery and stock, and believe it is more economical to borrow money to buy stock and machinery than to hire the work done."

FENCES.

It is of course next to impossible to do away with fences altogether. Division fences of some kind are desirable, yet thousands of miles of useless fences exist throughout the country, and which the thoughtful farmer should seek to remove as circumstances will permit. Few realize how costly a fixture the farm fence is, and it is only by the presentation of aggregated facts that an interest is aroused in the matter and attention secured. Illinois is said to have ten times as much fence as the whole of Germany, and it is claimed that Dutchess county, N. Y., has more than all France, Germany and Holland combined. A few years since, in South Carolina, the improved land was estimated to be worth $20,000,000, while the fences at the same time had cost $16,000,000. The annual cost of replacement is at least a tenth of the first cost. A calculation made some eight years since placed the cost of the fences in the United States at $1,300,000,000. More than forty years ago Nicholas Riddle said the fences in Pennsylvania had cost $100,000,000. In Ohio they have cost a still larger sum, while in New York, only a few years since, the estimated cost of the fences was $144,600,000. Some time in the future many fences now in use will disappear, and boundaries will be marked with fruit and shade trees or neat hedge-rows.

GENIUS AND TALENT.—There doubtless is a marked distinction between men of genius and men simply of talent. Talent repeats; genius creates. Talent is a cistern; genius a fountain. Talent deals with the actual, with discovered and realized truths, analyzing, arranging, combining, applying positive knowledge, and in action looking to precedents. Genius deals with the possible, creates new combinations, discovers new laws, and acts from an insight into principles. Talent jogs to conclusions to which genius takes giant leaps. Talent accumulates knowledge, and has it packed up in memory; genius assimilates it with its own substance, grows with every new accession, and converts knowledge into power. Talent gives out what it has taken in; genius, what has risen from its unsounded wells of living thought. Talent, in difficult situations, strives to untie knots, which genius instantly cuts with one swift decision. Talent is full of thoughts; genius, of thought. One has definite acquisitions, the other indefinite power.

MARRYING IN CHICAGO.

Penelope Stiggins lived in Boston. Her father had gained great riches by selling codfish. He had formerly been a professor at Hartford, but went into mercantile life that he might amass wealth and build a telescope so powerful that his theory of the sun's spots would be proven true, and his enemies humbugged. When the money was secured he had forgotten about the telescope. Penelope was his only child, and she loved her father dearly, kissing him fondly every evening after he had come from the store and changed his clothes. She was not partial to codfish.

One day Penelope was seated alone in her boudoir (Boston for room) reading a treatise on horizontal cleavage in red sandstone, when Clytemnestra Quirk came in. The two girls chatted for a while on the progress of rationalism in Europe.

"Have you seen that dashing Mr. West from Chicago, recently, Pen?" asked Clytemnestra, suddenly changing the subject of conversation.

A bright flush mantled the girl's brow as she said softly, "I am going to marry him."

Not a word was spoken for at least a second. Then Miss Quirk said, "Why do you marry this man?"

"Let me tell you," replied Penelope. "You know I am cultured—too much so, perhaps. When, therefore, Mr. West invited me, soon after his arrival in Boston, to attend one of the Wednesday organ concerts, I consented, little knowing what awaited me.

"When the first piece was over (I remember it was the 'Tannhauser' overture), I sat quite still, the tears rained down my face, but no words would come. Then it was I knew in an instant how perfectly sympathetic were my companion and myself; if he had at that moment uttered one of the commonplace or conventional criticisms one hears so often, I should have hated him forever. But he did not; he only said, very quietly, after I had recovered myself a little, 'I am so thankful that you heard it first with me,' and I replied, 'If only it might last forever.'"

* * * * *

Two weeks later the marriage took place, and Penelope is now a resident of Chicago. The wild, free life of the golden West suits her exactly, and on Monday afternoons when she is hanging out the clothes, and the southwest breeze hums merrily through the clothespins in her mouth, and careens her eyeglasses to leeward, she thinks of the Wagner concert, and says softly to herself, "After all, I can still tread on the cat's tail when the feeling of loneliness comes over me."—Chicago Tribune.

WHAT DOES DEW COME FROM?

The general belief is that soil obtains water from the air at night by absorption and condensation to such an extent as to be of the "utmost agricultural value," and that in times of drought this moisture of the air invigorates and sustains plants which otherwise would perish. The observations of Prof. Stockbridge show the soil, from May to November, both at the surface and five inches deep, to be warmer than the air, so it is hardly possible that the moisture on the surface in the morning was deposited from the air. A more reasonable conclusion is that the vapor which rises from the surface is condensed as it comes in contact with the cold air. The phenomenon of so called "dew fall" is usually attributed to the supposed fact that soil and plants are colder than the air at night, and so condense its moisture in the form of "dew." The "dew" on the ice-pitcher is the common illustration to prove the theory; but, as we have seen, the conditions in this case are the reverse of those with soil and plant, which are both warmer than the air at night, while the ice-pitcher is colder. Further investigations were made in the study of this question. A tin box, without top or bottom, was filled with soil and placed in growing grass: the next morning the grass was loaded with dew, but not a trace appeared on the box, and the temperature of the soil was sixty-six degrees and of the air sixty degrees. This experiment was repeated many times with the same results. Then a loose tin cover was placed on the box; in the morning the top of the cover was dry, but the under side was thickly studded with drops of water—dew.

NURSING WRONGS.—A man strikes me with a sword and inflicts a wound. Suppose instead of binding up the wound I am showing it to everybody; and after it has been bound up, I am taking off the bandage continually, and examining the depth of the wound and causing it to fester, till my limb becomes greatly inflamed and my general health is materially affected; is there a person in the world that would not call me a fool? Now, such a fool is he, who by dwelling upon little injuries or provocation, causes them to agitate and inflame his mind. How much better it would be to put a bandage over the wound and never look at it again!

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1881.

GEN. AMBROSE E. BURNSIDE of Rhode Island died suddenly of heart trouble at his home in Bristol, Tuesday, at the age of 57 years. Gen. Burnside served with credit and ability in the war as a corps commander, though he failed when put at the head of the army of the Potomac. He served as Governor of Rhode Island from 1866 to 1871, and in 1875 was elected to the United States Senate, being re-elected for another term last winter. In the Senate, he has not held a very commanding position, though he has been a safe and upright legislator, and was generally esteemed by all who knew him.

THE news from the President the past week has been encouraging in the main, although there are some developments which cause the greatest anxiety, and which show the many dangers yet to be overcome before he can be considered as safely on the road to convalescence. The parotid gland is practically healed, the wound is doing well, and there has been no further disturbance of the digestive organs. The members of the cabinet have been admitted to the President's bedside, and his brief conversations with them have shown that his mind is perfectly clear, and that he retains a lively interest in public affairs. Improvement is also shown by the fact that since Tuesday the President has been permitted to occupy a reclining chair for an hour or so every day. But on Sunday the doctors acknowledged that there was trouble with the right lung, although claiming that it was past the worst. On Thursday they also officially admitted in a guarded manner that he is suffering from blood poisoning—"septic accidents" they term it. His pulse and temperature run pretty high every day, and as long as his blood is tainted there is danger of abscesses appearing on the other lung or on the liver. His fluctuations are many, and new complications may appear at any moment. Yet, on the whole, there has been an improvement which gives good ground for continued hopefulness that his wonderful vitality and the people's prayers will yet bring him safely through all his difficulties.

THE MICHIGAN FIRES.

The first reports received last week concerning the destruction of life and property by the forest fires in Michigan conveyed but a faint idea of the appalling disaster, which grows in magnitude with each fresh report. The loss of life, which was at one time put as high as 500, is now believed not to exceed 300, and will perhaps not come up to that; but this is bad enough, and the destitution and suffering are terrible. The relief committee at Port Huron, in asking for aid, say: "We have returned from the burned district of Huron and Sanilac counties. We have seen the burned, disfigured and writhing bodies of men, women and children. Rough board coffins contained the dead, followed to the grave by a few blinded, despairing relatives. Crowds of half-starved people were at some of the stations asking bread for their families and neighbors. We hear of more than 200 victims already buried and more charred and bloated bodies newly discovered. Already more than 1500 families are found to be utterly destitute and houseless. They huddle in barns, in schoolhouses, in their neighbors' houses, scorched, blinded, hopeless. Some still wander, half-crazed, around the ruins of their habitations, vainly seeking their dead. Some in speechless agony, wringing their hands refuse to be comforted. More than 10,000 people who only a week ago occupied happy, comfortable homes are to-day houseless and homeless sufferers. They are hungry and almost naked when found, and in such great numbers and so widely scattered that our best efforts and greatest resources fail to supply their immediate wants."

The burned district, one correspondent writes, "comprises a tolerably regular tract about 60 miles in length, north and south, and half as wide, bounded on the east by Lake Huron and on the north by Saginaw bay, the south end being 75 miles or so north of Detroit, and which includes nearly all of Sanilac and Huron counties. In the territory there was of course a great proportion of unimproved land, but it was a good and prosperous farming region, wheat being a chief product. There were many thriving villages, a large portion of which, as well as of the settlements, were in the region near the lake shore. The worst of the fire and the greatest loss of life were near the middle of the burned tract." The disaster was caused by the long prevailing drouth and the numerous fires started by farmers to clear their land. Everything was dry as tinder, when on Monday, the 5th inst., a strong gale from the southwest kindled the flames in hundreds of places. The wind increased so as in some places to destroy buildings and actually take people off their feet, and those who saw it describe the rush of the conflagration as a hurricane of flame, and say that the very air seemed to be fire. At the village of Bad Ax, where the Huron county buildings were, it began to grow dark in the forenoon from smoke, and in a few hours the pitchy blackness was like that of a close cellar, so that it was impossible to see a foot. It was known that there were fires three miles south, but there was no thought of danger until suddenly there came a lurid glare, the flame and wind immediately followed, and in 30 minutes 53 of the 55 buildings in the place were in ashes. The courthouse was of brick, covered with slate, and there people went for protection. The building escaped destruction, and those within it were saved, although they suffered badly from heat. There were no lives lost here, but this was exceptional good fortune. At Verona it was known Monday morning that there was no fire within eight miles of the place, but at 1 o'clock the wind came up and filled the air with flame, the fire leaping from point to point with awful rapidity.

Samuel Robinson lived near Cedar Springs, and when the fire swept down upon him he put his wife and two children in a buggy, and made a dash for life. He crossed a long stretch of corduroy at a gallop, the fire hissing and crackling on all sides, singeing the horse's mane and the hair and eyebrows of the fugitives. The smoke blinded them, and the heat caused intense pain, but they reached Millington safely, half-blinded and crazed. At Haughton Creek was a settlement of about a dozen families, who were forced to take refuge in a large well, where they sat for four long hours, overcoming the fierce heat by throwing water over themselves, and finally coming out to find all their possessions destroyed. Four miles west of Minden a visitor found, after the fire, the ruins of a house, and near the foundation the remains of the father, mother and two children, all burned in a horrible manner. A dead new-born infant lay beside the mother. West of Tyre on Wednesday, there were found seventeen bodies of men, women and children lying in an open field. At Cato a widow and five children took refuge in a well and were suffocated. Similar reports are received from every direction.

The following villages were burned: Bad Ax, Verona, Forest Bay, Richmondville, Charleston, Anderson, Deckersville, Harrisonville and Sandusky. Port Hope, Minden and Ulby were partly burned. The great loss in villages is nothing to that in the country. Reports from Saginaw, Tuscola and Lapeer county, one tier back from the lake, do not approach the losses in the shore counties, although in each of these counties hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property has been destroyed.

About 700,000 acres, or more than 1000 square miles of country have been burned over, and from 10,000 to 12,000 people are absolutely homeless and destitute. Whole families have been left entirely naked. A correspondent saw people on the road from Port Austin to Cass City digging potatoes and corn that had been roasted by the fires; it was all they had left. Within thirty miles of Cass City, 125 families were sleeping in the fields with no covering whatever, some being so stripped that they were ashamed to show themselves, and had sent in one or two persons to obtain supplies for three or four naked families huddled together.

Relief measures have been promptly taken throughout the country, but the sufferers will need assistance for some time to come, and over 500,000 bushels of wheat are needed at once for seed, or there will be no crop next year.

Sitting Bull and his band were forcibly removed last Saturday from Standing Rock Agency to Fort Randall. The old chief refused to go, but a company of soldiers induced him to change his mind.

Robert Williams of White Mill, Va., had a quarrel with his wife the other day, and while she was gone after a warrant for his arrest his two daughters chopped his head off with an ax and then fled.

Rev. Dr. Thomas of Chicago, the Methodist clergyman who questioned the inspiration of some portions of the Old Testament, has been found guilty of heresy by the Council.

More than 20,000 people attended the great stallion race at Boston, Thursday, for a purse of $10,000. The race was won by Santa Claus, his time being 2.17¾, 2.18 and 2.19.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Fair week will find Milligan with as well a selected stock of Boots, Shoes and Rubbers as were ever shown in Palmer. Special attention will be given to ladies', misses' and children's Goat and Grain Shoes, men's, boys' and youth's kip and calf boots.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The autumnal equinox occurs next Thursday.

The wind was very in-dust-rious Thursday afternoon.

Rev. F. E. Cleaves of Springfield preaches at the Baptist church to-morrow.

Elder A. Morse, of Union, Ct., will preach at the Advent chapel on Sunday.

J. H. Gamwell has bought of C. E. Blasdale his farm above the carpet mill for $1600.

Rev. W. S. Jagger baptized four persons at the Methodist church last Sunday, and six were received into full membership. Mr. Jagger will exchange to-morrow morning with Rev. Mr. Manson of Bondsville.

There was a handsome sight in the northern sky Monday evening a little after 8 o'clock, a bright band of light appearing and gradually extending its way entirely across the heavens, and then breaking up into light clouds and drifting away.

White, Hellyar & Co. have been receiving quantities of new and seasonable goods during the past week, and a visit to their store shows shelves and counters piled up with a big stock worth looking at. They have something to say about it in another column.

A train of 18 cars took 1000 Springfield excursionists to Boston yesterday morning, the fare for the round trip being $1.25. Our turn will probably come next. A few Palmer people sent into Springfield for tickets, and boarded the train here as it stopped for water.

The band has decided to round out the cattle show next week with a grand ball at Wales Hall Wednesday night. Posters are up giving particulars, and as the proceeds of the evening will be applied to the reduction of their debt, their hopes of a large attendance ought to be fully realized.

Rev. T. B. Thayer, D. D., of Boston, preached at the Universalist church last Sunday, Rev. Mr. Tillotston, who was expected to preach, being called home to St. Johnsbury to attend a funeral. The pulpit will be occupied to-morrow and the following Sunday by Rev. J. S. Gledhill, of Conneautville, Pa.

The passenger train on the New London Northern Railroad which now leaves for New London at 6.42 a. m., returning at 8.43 p. m., will be discontinued after this week. This train was put on to accommodate the summer travel, and has been very well patronized most of the season. It will probably be put on again next summer.

A lady subscriber, who knows a good thing when she sees it, writes of the JOURNAL that "it is the most welcome paper I receive." That, by the way, is the verdict of our subscribers generally, but modesty prevents our saying much about it, and so we only keep quietly at work, endeavoring to make each issue additionally welcome.

The steamboat train from the north did not reach Palmer last Saturday evening until 9 o'clock, its northern connections being delayed by an accident above Brattleboro, where a freight train was thrown from the track on West river bridge. One brakeman was killed, another severely injured, and 13 cars completely wrecked, some of them falling 50 feet into the river. The north end of the bridge was also demolished.

A session of the probate court was held at the district court room on Tuesday, when the following business was transacted: Administration granted on estates of Homer S. Day of West Springfield, Henry S. Lee, administrator; Addie B. Stevens of Westfield, Jane Copely administratrix. Accounts were rendered on the estates of Lomena K. Paine of Monson, Abigail S. Coburn of Wales and John Ratigan of Brimfield.

The church of the Divine Paternity at New York, of which Rev. C. H. Eaton, formerly of this place, is pastor, was reopened last Sunday with a memorial service in honor of the late pastor, Rev. E. H. Chapin, D. D. The interior of the edifice has been remodeled and decorated at a cost of $20,000, and a tablet consisting of a bronze medallion life-size portrait of the eminent divine has been erected by the ladies of the congregation. The exercises were participated in by Rev. Dr. T. C. Sawyer of Boston, Rev. Dr. E. C. Bolles of Salem, Rev. Dr. Henry W. Bellows, and the pastor.

The amusement season will be opened at Wales Hall next week Friday by the well-known New Orleans Minstrels. They have just returned from a tour in Maine, and the Portland Press says of their entertainment in that city: "The minstrels proved themselves an excellent organization. Their jokes were new, and their specialties good. The brass band played well, giving music instead of noise. Mr. Benjamin performed some remarkable feats on the cornet. Welby and Pearl exhibited as fine clog dancing as has been seen in this city, and are the best dancers that have been here. The Clipper Quartette, in their plantation melodies and dances, were very good, and Mrs. Gorton played a baritone solo with taste and skill."

This village loses its oldest resident in the death of Mrs. Peggy Knox, which occurred at her residence yesterday. Mrs. Knox was the daughter of John Shaw, whose wife was Margaret King, and was a direct descendant of John King, the first settler in this town. She was born in the old house now standing near the foundry, but which was then situated at the head of Foundry street, on Main street, and she had always lived on the farm which she inherited from her father's estate. Her marriage with the late Col. Cyrus Knox resulted in the birth of nine children, only four of whom are now living—King, David and Cyrus, all well-known residents of this place, and James, station agent at Ware. Mrs. Knox had been in failing health for some time and the end came peacefully at an early hour yesterday morning. Her funeral will occur at 2 p. m., on Monday.

The clam chowder on the Weeks House lawn Wednesday afternoon, under the auspices of the Improvement Association, was a success, socially and financially. An accomplished "chowderist" from New London was secured to compound that savory article, and his success was evident from the way in which it disappeared, while at 7 o'clock the big kettle was entirely empty. Our best people turned out in good numbers, and after the gastronomic feast the evening was spent in social converse, enlivened by the excellent music of the Palmer Cornet Band, whose playing was much complimented on every side. The whole entertainment was a most auspicious beginning of the series which it is hoped will follow in the coming months. The gross receipts from the supper were $34, and the association will net about $27. The members of the association desire to especially acknowledge their indebtedness to the band, and to thank them for their generous musical contribution to the pleasures of the evening.

The preparations for the annual exhibition of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society next Tuesday and Wednesday are now about completed. The track has been put in good condition, some needed repairs have been made, and with favorable weather a large number of entries and a good exhibition are confidently expected. The fairs of the society have been growing better and better for some years, with a steadily increasing attendance, and this year will probably be no exception in these respects. Arrangements have been made with the New London Northern Railroad for the sale of tickets at all stations from Amherst to Willimantic at 25 cents more than half fare, these to include admission to the exhibition. On the Ware River road tickets will be sold from Barre and stations south of there at one-third less than regular rates. The Palmer Cornet Band will furnish music on Wednesday, and the usual attractions of the afternoon trots are to be augmented by the addition of a new class for members' horses without a record, best 3 in 5 to wagon.

When the modoc from Boston drew in at this station last Saturday evening, a carriage wheel, minus the hub and several spokes, was discovered resting on the braces under the forward express car, while the steps at the rear of the third car were bent back until they nearly touched the steps of the next car. It was evident that there had been a collision of some kind, but the engineer had seen nothing on the track, and nobody on the train knew anything about it. Remembering the fame of the Tenneyville crossing, some men drove down there, and found Merrick Parker of Wales lying in the ditch by the road-side, somewhat bruised, and with the fragments of his buggy scattered around promiscuously. An examination of the wheel tracks showed that Parker had apparently driven across the track directly into the gutter and stopped there, with the rear of his buggy close to the track. When the train came along the frightened horse probably backed, when the wheel was taken off, the shock causing him to back again against the car steps, when the buggy was demolished and Parker thrown out. It was a pretty narrow escape for the man, who had doubtless been making too many calls at our liquor saloons for his own welfare.

THREE RIVERS.

L. A. Holmes has opened a dental office near the post office.

James Rossbottom has sold a building lot near the Athol railroad to E. Pratt.

The pulpit of the Baptist Church will be occupied to-morrow by Rev. F. E. Cleaves, of Springfield.

BELCHERTOWN.

The annual cattle show will be held Friday, Oct. 7th.

There have been several cases of diphtheria in this place during the past two weeks. Wilson Hamilton has had 7 children all sick at one time, and two of them have died during the past week. The others are in a critical condition.

MONSON.

Geo. H. Newton's Whaling Expedition is in Chicago this and next week; after that they visit the St. Louis fair. Last week they were in Minneapolis at the great Northwestern fair, and the exhibit attracted eight thousand people one day during the week. His Royal Highness, the Prince of Whales, is reported as being thoroughly embalmed, and is called one of the most novel and successful schemes that has been put on the road during the year.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

C. S. Fuller has purchased a building lot on Maple street, opposite the residence of Hiram Hanks, containing 70 rods, for $325.

Wm. Whiting of Holyoke has been elected agent of the Collins Paper Co., in place of C. O. Chapin, resigned, and Wm. K. Baker is treasurer. Mr. Whiting expects to be able to purchase about three-fourths of the stock at the rate of $160,000 for the whole, and take the management into his own hands. They will make a fine loft dried writing paper. It is not expected that there will be any change in the help at the mill before Jan. 1st.

LUDLOW.

One was received into the First Congregational Church on profession of faith on Sunday last.

F. F. Fairbanks was kicked in the face by his horse last Saturday, but fortunately it did not injure him seriously.

The parish committee of the First Church has decided to drive a well at the parsonage, the water from the present well being of a very poor quality.

The many friends of Miss Mabel C. Ray will be pleased to learn that she has just entered Moody seminary for a four years' course. Miss Ray has been a very efficient and successful teacher during the year or two that she has taught in town.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

C. E. Dickinson is to be appointed postmaster here.

Farmers in this vicinity have commenced cutting their corn and report a good harvest.

Now the law is off, game is reported plenty for this section, but not much has been taken as yet.

J. P. Eastman, section foreman, is about to start for Boston to have his left arm operated upon. We wish him success and the recovery of the use of it.

A. W. Crossman & Son have a contract for 100,000 brick to be shipped at once to the Ludlow Manufacturing Company; also for a million or more to go east.

WARREN.

Rev. Mr. Forbes exchanges with Rev. Mr. Wilder of North Brookfield Sunday.

The new teachers in town were examined at the high school room last Saturday.

Mr. Whipple cut off a part of two fingers while fixing a machine last Saturday.

The fire company and band have been busy preparing for the muster at West Brookfield to-day.

Thomas Turner, the physiognomist, delivered a free lecture in Brigham's hall Tuesday evening.

The "concreters" have been in town, and the walks on Main, Quaboag and Southbridge streets have been extended.

The ladies' temperance union gave a fruit festival in the town hall Tuesday evening, with tableaux and music for entertainment.

The room in the town hall formerly occupied by Barnard, the jeweler, is to be occupied by a merchant tailor. It is also reported that a new doctor is coming to town.

THORNDIKE.

The raceway to the lower mill is being enlarged.

Some wild land has been reclaimed on Pleasant street.

Mr. Bishop has put in a new pair of scales in his coal yard, and has made other improvements.

The citizens here were disturbed again the other night by a drunken brawl, in which one of the number received a severe wound in the nose.

The farmers in the northern part of the town held their fourth annual picnic at Dea. Foster's, Wednesday. Between eighty and ninety of the tillers of the soil were present to enjoy the hospitality of the genial deacon and family. The amusements provided were of a varied nature, and well adapted to suit the different ages and tastes of the guests. Dinner was served at 1.30 p. m., after which the festivities were enlivened with speech-making and music. A happier or more contented lot of people it would be difficult anywhere to find—but this was only one of the many pleasant gatherings for which this community has been specially noted.

WALES.

Carlos Bond has just returned from Springfield with a new stock of fine English razors.

Theron Rider assaulted Charles Shaw last Saturday, and fled to Connecticut to evade the officer.

In the local ball game last Saturday between the Barming-gileads and Skunktoddles the former won, 21 to 12.

Merrick Parker, who was run into by the cars recently, has apparently received no serious injury, as he is able to be on the street again.

Frank A. Royce has removed the "log" that was used as a step to his store, and put up a good plank step, which is a decided improvement.

David Shepardson is very busy just now filling a contract for telegraph poles for the new line, and expects to get another contract for 600 more. They are very fine specimens.

State Detective Buxton visited the mills Wednesday looking after the women and minors, lest they might be overworked, but found there had been no violation of the law, and departed in peace.

The many friends of Miss Nellie, daughter of H. M. Needham, Esq., learn with regret that her journey to her home in Brooklyn, N. Y., was attended with painful results, as the injury to her sprained ankle was made much worse by the exertion incident to travel.

The Sunday School concert in the Methodist church last Sabbath evening drew a crowded house, and a very interesting programme was presented. "George's Wonder" was sufficiently interesting to call for its repetition, and the entire concert was listened to with evident appreciation by the audience.

HAMPDEN.

John Phillips has given two coats of paint to the academy building, much improving its appearance.

A. O. Thresher has returned from Montreal with six horses. He proposes to sell all but two, keeping a span for his own use.

S. C. Spellman was kicked by a horse last Wednesday, giving him a black eye and otherwise bruising his face. The injury is not as serious as at first thought, and he will be about as soon as the swelling subsides.

Rev. Ezekiel Russell, D. D., of Holbrook, preached in the Congregational church last Sabbath. Mr. Russell is a native of Hampden, and is now some 78 years old. He has been settled over the Olivet church, Springfield, also in North Adams and Holbrook, but has now retired from active service as a pastor.

Hampden seems to be the banner town for peaches this year. Abner C. Burleigh, who always has the best, shows a peach which measures 10 inches in circumference and weighs 8½ ounces, this being only one of bushels of the same kind. He finds ready sale for them at $6 per bushel in Springfield, while we Hampdenites cannot find the one thing needful to purchase a good meal of them.

The JOURNALS of last week have not yet been received at the post office here. A few days since a large package plainly marked "Ware, Hampshire County, Mass.," was in the mail pouch for Hampden, and similar mistakes are almost a daily occurrence, while not infrequently no pouch for Hampden is put on the train at Springfield. At other times the mail belonging to Agawam will be substituted, making our mail carrier an extra trip to East Longmeadow, six miles. Mr. Dawes's civil service reform is called for in the post office at Springfield, where the mails for this and other offices in the county are made up. There must be a peg loose somewhere in the office there, and if General Lee cannot tighten it let him make way for reform.

The fifth annual reunion of the Spellman family in this vicinity was held last Wednesday at Evergreen Park in Stafford, Ct., near the State Line station on the New London Northern R. R.—a lovely location for parties of all kinds, with an abundance of shade trees, buildings, and apparatus to cook and provide a good dinner. The company increases in numbers from year to year, also in interest. There were over sixty present, and all partook of a good dinner provided by the proprietor of the park, after which there were short addresses by Hon. S. Johnson of North Adams, F. A. Harwood of Stafford, C. C. Spellman of Springfield, and Rev. E. P. Root and S. C. Spellman of Hampden. All joined in singing "Coronation" and many of the Gospel Songs. The day was beautiful, and nothing happened to in any way mar the occasion. All left at an early hour, feeling that they had an enjoyable time, and voted unanimously to hold another in 1882.

It is virtually three great brick buildings, separated by heavy walls and fire-proof doors, and furnishing over six acres of well-lighted floor surface. The large hall will hold from 8000 to 10,000 people. The fairs of the association have been famous for more than half a century, and the present one is expected to fully sustain the reputation they have gained, besides having many new novelties, while the art gallery, it is claimed, will rival those of Europe with its collection of notable pictures. Among the matters of special interest promises to be a collection by Maj. Ben. Perley Poore, of the weapons, implements, clothing and uniforms used and worn by the warriors of this country from the stone age to the present. Visitors to the fair will find every arrangement for their comfort, in the way of lavatories, bundle rooms, restaurants, etc.

Is it possible that a remedy made of such common, simple plants as Hops, Buchu, Mandrake, Dandelion, &c., make so many and such marvelous and wonderful cures as Hop Bitters do? It must be, for when old and young, rich and poor, pastor and doctor, lawyer and editor, all testify to having been cured by them, we must believe and doubt no longer. See other column.—Post. 2w24

However watched by loving care,
Home has distempers lurking there,
And human power cannot defend
From ills that constantly impend;
But Sanford's Ginger bids pain cease,
And home restores to health and peace. 4-23

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.
"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

It is a foolish mistake to confound a remedy of merit with the quack medicines now so common. We have used Parker's Ginger Tonic with the happiest results for rheumatism and dyspepsia, and when worn out by overwork, and know it to be a sterling health restorative.—Times. See adv. s

CENTAUR LINIMENT.—Invaluable to families and owners of horses. For sale everywhere.

CASTORIA.—For sour stomach, constipation, and fretfulness of children. Pleasant, safe and cheap. 900 drops; 35 doses, 35 cents.

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. in ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN ss. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Sophia Langway, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:
Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said court, for probate, by Joseph Langway of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to him, the executor therein named, and that he may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on his official bond as such executor,
You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of October next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.
And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said court, and to mail a copy of such notice to each of said next of kin who may reside out of this Commonwealth, fourteen days at least before said court.
Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fourteenth day of September in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN ss. PROBATE COURT.—To all persons interested in the estate of Laura A. Parks, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:
Whereas, Enos Calkins, executor of the will of said deceased, has presented to said court his petition reciting a clause in said will wherein the testatrix gives all the rest, residue and remainder of her estate equally to her seven children therein named, "providing that all such sums as any of said children shall be indebted to me at the time of my decease, as well as all such sums as I may then be holden to pay for any of them, shall first be deducted from the share such child would otherwise receive," representing that one of said legatees, viz: B. Franklin Parks, has conveyed his interest in said estate; that two of said legatees, viz: Alonzo H. Parks and William R. Parks, are indebted to said estate, but that said William R. Parks claims that having, as a bankrupt, received his discharge under the bankrupt laws of the United States, his said indebtedness is no part of said estate, neither can the executor set off the same or any part thereof against his share in said estate under the foregoing provision of said will—all of which, together with the names and residences of the legatees, the value of the property, and items of said indebtedness, is more fully set forth in said petition—and praying the court to determine to whom the estate now in the hands of the executor belongs, and how the same should be distributed, and to make such other orders and decrees as the court may deem meet and proper,
You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of October next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same. And said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by delivering a copy thereof to each person interested who can be found within the State, fourteen days at least before said court; and if any one cannot be so found, by also publishing the same in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, once in each week for three weeks at least before said court, and by mailing a copy thereof to him at his place of residence last known to the petitioner fourteen days at least before said court.
Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fourteenth day of September, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

FOR SALE at a bargain, for want of use, Bay Mare, six years old, sound, kind, and a fine roadster; side-bar top carriage in good order; nice pleasure sleigh and new harness.
25tf E. P. MILLER, East Hill, Monson.

Alphabetical Health Rules.

As soon as you are up, shake blankets and sheets;
Better be without shoes than sit with wet feet;
Children, if healthy, are active, not still;
Damp beds and damp clothes will both make you ill;
Eat slowly, and always chew your food well;
Freshen the air in the house where you dwell;
Garments must never be made to be tight;
Homes will be healthy if airy and light;
If you wish to be well, as you do, I've no doubt,
Just open the windows before you go out;
Keep your rooms always tidy and clean;
Let dust on the furniture never be seen;
Much illness is caused by the want of pure air;
Now to open your windows be ever your care;
Old rags and old rubbish should never be kept;
People should see that their floors are well swept;
Quick movement in children is healthy and right;
Remember the young cannot thrive without light;
See that the cistern is clean to the brim;
Take care that your dress is all tidy and trim;
Use your nose to find out if there be a bad drain,
Very sad are the fevers that come in its train;
Walk as much as you can without feeling fatigue;
Xerxes could walk for full many a league;
Your health is your wealth, which your wisdom must keep;
Zeal will help a good cause, and the good you will reap.

There is a story that the popular hymn, "The Sweet By and By," was the work of two men while drunk. Joseph P. Webster, who composed the music, died several years ago. Dr. S. F. Bennett, author of the verses, lives at Richmond, Ill. He says that the charge of intoxication is untrue, though Webster was a free drinker. The two wrote a hymn book in 1874, and "The Sweet By and By" was one of the pieces jointly produced for it. The suggestion came from a chance remark by Webster, who was habitually despondent, that all would be well "by and by." Bennett at once made the rhymes, and Webster brought the music out of a fiddle, which was his customary aid in composition. The hymn book had its day and is forgotten, but this one tune is put into every publication of the kind, and has a sale of about 10,000 copies a year in sheet form. Dr. Bennett says that he and Webster were not orthodox Christians when the hymn was written, and that he is now even less a believer.

According to the Philadelphia News, our coming ice crops threaten to be seriously interfered with by the ravages of a worm known as the nematoxis eocena, or ice wasp. The insect is about six inches in length, and is almost transparent, making it difficult to distinguish it from the ice. The first known by the icemen of the presence of this peculiar worm was in April, 1870, when a steamer struck an iceberg in mid ocean and carried some of the insects, which clung to the sides of the vessel, to this shore. It conceals itself in the ice after having been harvested, and is the cause of the ice melting so rapidly. It is said this insect causes the icebergs to break away from the vast fields of ice in the Arctic seas, by gnawing the ice. This is an interesting tale for ice consumers and marines.

At last the skunk has found a friend. A legislator in the interior of the State demands that he be protected in his right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, the reason being that he destroys grubs that otherwise would destroy the hop vines. He therefore becomes practically a protector of the beer trade, and as whoever does anything for beer touches more than one-half the adult male population in a very tender spot, the future standing of the skunk may be foreshadowed as one of eminent respectability. And in spite of all that is said of his distinguishing peculiarity, he may make himself at home in three-quarters of the beer-shops in the land without making them smell any worse than they do now.—New York Herald.

There is a great deal of sickness caused by drinking impure water. One only need look at the foul matter collected in a filter to discover this fact. A very cheap filter can be manufactured from a large flower-pot. Fill the hole at the bottom of the pot with a sponge, then cover with two inches of pulverized charcoal, two inches of clean sand, and fill the pot up with pebbles, washed clean. Let the water run for an hour or two, and afterward it will be fit for service. This filter has one advantage over many which are manufactured. The purifying contents can be changed at option of the user. There is no patent on this filter.

It is a very common thing for Christians to pray that the Lord will add His blessings to their works, as if they went ahead and the Lord followed after. A Christian's daily prayer should be that he may know what the Lord would have him do. A Christian's daily work should be the doing of what the Lord sets him at. There is never any doubt about the blessing when that order of service is observed.—Sunday School Times.

In the upper part of Sonoma County, Cal., a railroad track crosses a deep ravine upon the upright trunks of tall trees, which have been sawed off upon a horizontal line. In the center of the ravine a firm support is furnished by two huge redwood trees which have been lopped off seventy-five feet above the ground.

The winds were whispering low and the sentinel stars had set their watch in the sky as she leaned from her chamber window and tenderly asked: "Is that you, Henry?"—"Coursh tiz; pretty 'oman, dozzen know'er own husband when sh' seezim."

The mysterious mounds of Wisconsin, sometimes called the emblematic mounds, have engaged the attention of the Smithsonian Institution, which is about to undertake the work of resurveying and exploring them.

There is said to be a pastor in Maine who runs three churches, a salmon fishery, a large farm, a coal office, a teamster's route, a stage line, a public bath and a mineral spring, besides holding several public offices.

Zebras are very stylish; they wear striped stockings up to their necks.

SNEEZING.

Sneezing and the manner in which the sneeze is sneezed is an interesting study in itself. No two persons sneeze exactly alike. A two months' study of this spasmodic practice has fully demonstrated the fact that there is as much individuality in the sneeze of the average man or woman as there is in the laugh, the conversation, the walk or the handwriting. Some men and women sneeze as though the effort caused them intense pain, while others appear to enjoy the titillating sensation in the nostrils and enter into the spirit of the act with pleasure depicted upon every lineament of their features.

The little boarding school miss trips jauntily along the street, and in turning to note if she is attracting due attention, happens to inadvertently look at the sun. In a moment her nostrils begin to tingle, and burying her face in the folds of the neatest of cambric handkerchiefs, she contracts her shoulders and gives utterance to the daintiest "skick-skick-skick" imaginable.

The fat woman with a basket on her arm—the one you always meet in the market house—halts suddenly upon the street, bows her head reverently, remains so a few moments in wild expectation, and then, straightening up a little, inhales the air until she swells up like a balloon, and then "ah-h-h-schooooooo! ah-h-h-h-schooooooo! ah-sh-ah-skitch-tschooo! oh, my!" and wabbles on, wiping her inflamed nose on her apron.

The dapper little clerk walks briskly along the street wondering if his new clothes fit him as he hopes they do, and when the unfailing symptoms tell him that he must sneeze, he turns his head over his shoulder, and without slacking his pace, gives vent to several short, sharp "woosh"-es, and flies along as if nothing had happened.

The tall, cadaverous man, whose very look indicates the presence of consumption, stops short on the sidewalk, nervously runs his hands into half-a-dozen pockets before he can find his handkerchief, throws his head backward until his nose points at the City Hall clock, and electrifies all within hearing with a spasmodic "witchoo-o-o-o-wi-wi-witchoo-o-o-o-o—darn the luck!" then gives his peaked nasal organ a swipe or two and moves painfully along.

Two neat little daughters of fashion trip along the avenue, confiding to each other their bits of choice scandal, when one of them says:

"Oh, dear! Jennie, I believe I'm going to sneeze!"

"Oh, please don't!" cries the other in horror. "It will be awful to sneeze right here on the street! Can't you hold it?"

"Oh, I—I—must. Indeed I—sck—indeed I ca—can't hel—schick—help it. I mu—mu—sck—must—ah—ah scheet! ah—ah—oh dear! — —oh—h—h—ah—scheet!—chick—oh—oh—Jennie! ah—ah—schoo—oo—oo—oot-ah—schloot!"

And then she wipes her pearly nose and trips along with tears in her eyes and tells Jennie it's too awfully awful for any use, and she does hope nobody saw her.

The sedate matron goes about her sneezing in a matter-of-fact way. She simply stops, bows her head and gives utterance to a few well-developed "achoo's" and moves along, not caring a continental who was observing her.

The nervous man stops, while a look of pain crosses his face, draws two or three long breaths to hurry the thing along, then doubles himself up as if endeavoring to shoulder the heaviest portion of his body, twists his face out of all semblance of a human being and snorts out his "kroo-whah-kroo-whah-boosh ah-kroo-whah—oh lord!" and leaves the spot, wearing a look of the most disconsolate pain.

It does one good to see the jolly fat man sneeze. He throws back his massive shoulders, opens his cavernous mouth to its fullest capacity, shuts both eyes, and fairly raises the dead with his "ah-schooooo! ah-SCHOOOOO! ah-ah-SCHOOOOO! whoopee! woosh-ah schooooooo wagh-hoooo-physchooooo! Lordy, but that was a good 'un!"

There are a thousand and one other styles of accomplished sneezing, and it will repay any one to note the variety and style of the various sneezers to be met with daily upon the street.

A SATISFACTORY ANSWER.—A gentleman writing to a newspaper says: Dr. Bittle, in a lecture to his metaphysics class, was once speaking of the shrewdness of children's replies, their perplexing questions, etc., and said to us: "You just try asking some child why the sun does not rise in the west." When opportunity favored, I tried the experiment. I said to a bright little girl: "Who made the sun?" "God." "Where did He make it rise?" "In the east." "Well, can you tell me why He didn't make it rise in the west?" "He wanted that place for it to set at," was the ready reply.

As if oleomargarine were not enough, it is now given out that two men at New Orleans, after long-continued experiments, have succeeded in producing "excellent butter" out of cotton seed oil. The oil butter cannot well be worse than the oleomargarine, and there is the comforting probability that, as the oil butter can be produced much cheaper than oleomargarine, it will therefore drive that compound out of the market.

Paper belting is used with success in the machinery hall of an exhibition now open in Japan. It is stated that belting made of paper has been tested and found to be even stronger than that made of leather.

HOW TO GET SICK.—Expose yourself day and night, eat too much without exercise; work too hard without rest; doctor all the time; take all the vile nostrums advertised; and then you will want to know

HOW TO GET WELL,

Which is answered in three words—take Hop Bitters! See other column.—Express.

Because it adds to personal beauty by restoring color and lustre to gray or faded hair, and is beneficial to the scalp, is why Parker's Hair Balsam is such a popular dressing. s

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

NECESSITATING A SURGICAL OPERATION—LOVING MOTHER ATTEMPTS TO TAKE A PAIR OF SHEARS FROM HER CHILD.

PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle. 1m22

SICK HEADACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

WE MEAN CURED, NOT MERELY RELIEVED,

AND CAN PROVE WHAT WE CLAIM!

There are no failures and no disappointments. If you are troubled with SICK HEADACHE you can be easily and quickly cured, as hundreds have been already. We shall be pleased to mail a sheet of testimonials to any interested.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

Also cure all forms of Biliousness, prevent Constipation and Dyspepsia, promote Digestion, relieve distress from too heavy eating, correct Disorders of the Stomach, Stimulate the Liver, and Regulate the Bowels. They do all this by taking just one little pill at a dose. They are purely vegetable, do not gripe or purge, and are as nearly perfect as it is possible for a pill to be. Price 25 cents, 5 for $1. Sold by druggists everywhere or sent by mail.

PROTECTION

FROM

MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE,
INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE

PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use. If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Your Native Town.

Oh, don't you remember the school-house red,
Which stood far back on the hill?
And the great oak tree that lifted its head
Close by? It stands there still.
You learned addition in that old place,
And the use of verb and noun,
They have earned you much in life's hard race—
Give some to the dear old town.

You have wandered from the hearthstone gray,
Where your infant feet first trod;
You have walked in many a devious way,
But you worship your fathers' God.
For you'll never forget the lessons taught
When at night you all knelt down,
In the home that you hold in your tenderest thought
In your own old native town.

It is old and needy now, they say;
How many have "gone west!"
And under mouldering headstones gray
Lie nearly all the rest.
But it is not poor, this village dear,
It can never get "run down,"
While its sons are rich and feel that here
Is their own dear native town.

The blue-bells grow on the river bank
And the violet on the hill;
The wild azaleas, sweet and rank,
The gay, wet marshes fill.
There is pink arbutus in the woods
When the spring is cold and brown;
It is only poor in wordly goods—
Is your own dear native town.

Ah, go when the summer solstice burns
And your city home is hot,
Go, look where the winding river turns
In the green old meadow lot,
Then ask the people what it needs
And count it life's best crown
To build it up with filial deeds—
Your own dear native town.

"FOR LOVE OF HIM."

"I," cried Haddie Winstanley, piteously, "I a burden to my husband? Oh, Sarella, Sarella! for pity's sake, do not say that!"

It was the day following the family hegira—that most dismal, doleful and intolerable of all days, when the furniture was piled up in the echoing and uncarpeted rooms, the pictures turned blankly with their faces to the walls, the yawning chimney-places destitute of crackling flames, while the dreary spring rain beat against the windows with a mournful and monotonous sound.

At the back of the little farm-house the gnarled apple trees were striving to break out into bud and blossom, and a few faint colored spring flowers lifted their golden heads above the grass and dead leaves, while at the front the restless billows of the Atlantic, tortured by the moaning wind, flung their fringes of foam high upon the shore, flights of sea birds eddied overhead, and the low hanging reach of leaden clouds shut out the misty shimmer of the horizon.

Haddie had wandered about the house all day wrapped in a shawl, looking about as forlorn as the daffodils and jonquils outside, in the vain endeavor to find some habitable nook or corner where she could pore over her book. She felt herself ill-used in the extremest degree, this sunny-haired, rose-lipped human fairy, in that all was not made smooth and easy to her little feet.

She had married Carlos Winstanley scarcely three months ago, supposing that she was entering into a human Eden through the golden circlet of a wedding ring and the bowery arches of the orange blossoms, and here, lo and behold! he had failed; the pretty little house in Park Terrace had been sold, with its antique furniture, its bric-a-brac and rose-lined curtains, and here they were banished for the rest of their lives to the dismal one-storied farm-house, the sole relic of Carlos Winstanley's scattered fortune!

"It is not like a city house," said the young man cheerily; "but I have always had a sort of love for a farm life and we can be just as happy here as if it were a palace—can't we, Haddie?"

And Haddie, with a half frightened glance at the restless waves of the Atlantic and the groups of cedar writhing in the blast, clung to his shoulder and whispered:

"Yes. But," she added, with a quivering lip, "it will be very lonely, won't it?"

"Sarella is coming to stay with us and help get settled," said Winstanley. "Why, what could such a butterfly as you do with all this confusion?"

Haddie said nothing. She could hardly tell her husband how much she feared and disliked his stern maiden sister, who always stood up so straight, and wore her iron-gray hair twisted in a tight knot at the back of her head, in an inexorable fashion, which made Haddie feel as if her own gold frizzes and braids were a vanity and vexation of spirit, indeed; and had a way of looking over and beyond her as if she, Haddie, were of no account whatever.

But Sarella was needed and she came, just as she would have come to nurse a wounded soldier, or to keep watch over a household of measles, or scarlet fever, or undertake any other difficult or thankless task.

And upon this rainy day, Sarella went backward and forward, and looked with a sort of contemptuous pity at the poor, little wife, wrapped in her fleecy white shawl, with a rose in her hair and a book in her hand.

"Dear me, Harriet!" she had cried out, when at last her slender thread of patience was quite exhausted; "why don't you do something?"

"What shall I do?" exclaimed Haddie piteously.

"I'm sure there's enough to be done," said the rigid elder sister. "Can't you turn and sew that piece of carpet to fit the hall?"

"I never did such a thing in my life," said Haddie, eyeing the heap of carpeting as if it had been a wild beast ready to spring upon her. "I do not think I could sew anything so big and heavy."

"There is the china to be washed and sorted on the shelves," suggested Sarella grimly.

"I should be sure to break it," faltered Haddie.

"The curtains are all ready to be tacked up to the west room windows," said Sarella looking around for a tack hammer.

"Oh, I couldn't do that," said Haddie more frightened than ever. "I should be sure to turn giddy on the top of that step-ladder."

Sarella looked disdainfully at her beautiful little sister-in-law.

"I wonder what you are good for!" said she sharply.

Haddie hung her head, flushed scarlet, and said nothing.

"For all I can see," severely went on Sarella, "my big brother might as well have married a wax doll. It was all very well, so long as he was a merchant in receipt of a big income. But now—goodness me, what sort of a farmer's wife do you suppose you will make?"

"I don't know!" confessed Haddie, feeling herself arraigned before a sort of consolidated inquisition.

"Do you know anything about butter and cheese?" demanded Sarella, relentlessly.

"No!"

"Did you ever make up a batch of bread? or pies? or cake?" sternly pursued this iron-hearted catechist.

"No," whispered Haddie.

"Can you cut and fit your own Kensington stitch?"

"Work Kensington stitch and antique lace, you mean? Yes, I can!"

"Antique lace and Kensington stitch!" echoed Sarella, in withering scorn. "Can you make your husband's shirts?"

"He buys them ready made," faltered Haddie. "At least he always did."

"Humph!" said Sarella. "I suppose, now, you could not clean house, nor wash up the curtains, nor make a lot of currant jelly to save your life."

"No," said Haddie, with a trembling voice, "I am afraid I could not."

"You are nothing more nor less than a burden to your husband," said Sarella with the air of a judge pronouncing sentence of doom. "You are no more fit to be married than yonder white kitten. And I pity Carlos from the very bottom of my heart, that I do."

And thus speaking Sarella picked up the whitewash brush and stalked away, while poor little Haddie wailed out the beseeching, earnest words with which our story was commenced.

"Oh, Sarella, dear Sarella!" she pleaded, "I try to do my best."

"Your best?" repeated Sarella. "And what does that amount to? You are a hundred pound weight tied around his neck—a blight upon his future—that is what you are?"

And she whisked into the kitchen, while Haddie ran up stairs to the garret to have a good cry.

Haddie was very sad and pensive for a day or two. Carlos looked at her pitifully, afraid to ask her if she was discontented in her new home, for he knew well that he had no other to offer her. Sarella sniffed at her selfish insufficiency, and the very scrubbing woman put on airs, while Betsey Baker, a neighbor, who came in to help with the "setting," soon caught the popular tone, and said, very loftily:

"Please, Mrs. Winstanley, stand out of the way while we're a-stretching this carpet, and don't hinder us ef ye can't help us!"

At the end of the third day of domestic saturnalia, when Carlos Winstansley came home Haddie was nowhere to be found, and on her cushion was securely pinned the following note:

DEAR CARLOS: Don't be vexed, but I have gone away to stay with Aunt Dorcas Dutton until the Beach farm is settled. I don't seem to be of much use to anybody, and perhaps Sarella will get along better without me.

Affectionately, your wife, H. W.

"There!" said Sarella to Betsey Baker, "didn't I tell you so! She is so lazy she cannot bear to see other folks work! And I do not know whatever Carlos was thinking of when he married her instead of Rosanna Martin, who took the first prize for bread and cake at the county fair, and has got a whole chest full of linen and bedquilts at home."

But she did not express herself thus plainly to Carlos, when he asked her wistfully if she knew why Haddie had gone away.

"I think she is sick of farms and farm-work," said Sarella, pursing up her lips. "I think, Carlos, she is like the little portulacas in the garden outside, that only blossom when the sun shines."

And Carlos was more wretched than ever, fancying that he had darkened his young wife's life, and dragged her down into poverty with him.

"She will come back to me when she chooses," he said, sadly. "I shall not go after her."

And he grew paler and colder and more silent as he went about the duties of the farm; and Sarella, to use her own expression, "flew around as lively as a cricket," and put things into the neatest of order.

"We are better off without Harriet than with her, in my opinion," said she to herself. "A china doll of a woman, only fit to be waited on and made much of. I do think Carlos was crazy when he married her."

At the month's end, however, Haddie came back, and fluttered down the lilac-shaded garden walk to meet her husband, like a bird, as he returned from his day's work.

"Oh, Carlos! Carlos!" she cried; "I am so glad to be here again!"

"Little one," he asked, almost reproachfully, "why did you leave me?"

"I have been at school," said Haddie, radiantly. "I have been learning my profession. Oh, Carlos, you never can tell how helpless and awkward I felt here, in my own house, knowing that I was as ignorant as a child of all the things I needed most to comprehend. I love you—oh, so dearly!—and I felt so unworthy of you—so unable to help you in your sore need as a wife should help her husband. Sarella despised my ignorance—the very servants looked down upon me as a helpless doll; and they were right. But they never shall do so any more, for I have learned to be a housekeeper at last—Aunt Dorcas has taught me everything. I can make butter like gold, and cheese that even Sarella will not criticise. I shall prepare you some strawberry shortcake to-morrow and my bread and biscuits are as light and white as swan's-down; and I have made you a shirt, Carlos, all by myself, and Aunt Dorcas says I need not be ashamed of it; and I can wash and iron, and clear-starch as well as ever old Chloe did when I was a girl at home."

"Haddie! Haddie!" he cried. "Why did you do this!"

"For love of you," she answered, simply; "to be to you what a wife should be to her husband. You need not think I am going to settle down into a common drudge, Carlos. I like Shakespeare and Kensington stitch as well as ever. But a farmer's wife should not be blind and helpless at the head of her own household, and I am thankful that I have at last learned how to do all these things."

"You are an angel, Haddie!" he said earnestly.

"I am only your true, loving little wife," she answered, hiding her face on his breast.

Sarella needed to stay at the Beach farm no longer; Betsey Baker was dismissed, and Haddie took her place at the helm, and of all happy, efficient, stirring farmers' wives Mrs. Winstanley bore away the palm.

"I never supposed there was so much in her," said Sarella. "Carlos could not have made a better choice if he had tried for a year."

"It does beat all?" said Betsey Baker.

Professor George H. Cook, State Geologist of New Jersey, has come to the conclusion that Cape May and Sunderland counties are slowly but surely settling into the sea. From facts in his possession, he estimates that the surface has sunk about eight feet during the last 100 years.

KANSAS' CAVE.

A western hunter, while shooting in Thomas county, Kan., followed a wounded wolf into what he supposed was the wolf's den. He discovered it to be a large cave, and, procuring assistance, he started to explore it. The party, crawling through the narrow entrance, found themselves in an irregular-shaped room, its ceiling sloping upward and out of sight. The place was intensely dark, only a few rays of sunlight penetrating through the entrance. They found that the floor of the room was covered with human skeletons and bones entirely denuded of flesh, placed in every conceivable position; some stood upright against the walls, others were in a sitting posture, but the greater part lay scattered on the floor in confused masses. The room is somewhat triangular in shape, its longest side being upwards of 40 feet, and the others about 20 each. Hung on its walls or resting against them, and lying on the floor among the skeletons, were numerous shields and spears, and other implements of warfare of a savage race. The party next clambered over the skeletons to an aperture in the wall. They entered it, and found themselves in a passageway about 4 feet high and 10 feet wide, and arched overhead; the walls were of solid white rock, and covered with moisture. The floor of the hallway sloped downward. The hallway was about 20 feet long, and appeared to have been cut in the solid rock by skilled workmen. At the further extremity it opened into another chamber, on the threshold of which the party was halted by noises resembling the movements of animals within. Peering into the darkness, and thinking that they had found a wolfs' abode, one of them fired his pistol, and their ears were astounded with a succession of reports as from a dozen pistols, repeated from all parts of the room. After their astonishment had subsided, they were convinced that they had discovered a veritable echo gallery. Leaving a light at the entrance to mark its locality, they proceeded to explore it, and found it to be nearly circular in form and nearly 100 feet in diameter. The walls were perpendicular and rising to a great height, and having numerous niches, some apparently being openings into other chambers; the lights were not strong enough to reveal the ceiling. The floor was solid rock, and quite level and smooth and very damp. On one side of the room was found a platform of solid rock about 20 feet square, rising abruptly from the floor to a height of about four feet; otherwise the room was quite empty. On the other side of the platform were found two openings in the walls, one of which resembled the hallway between the two chambers, but with its door obstructed with masses of rock. The other was an arched way about 20 feet high, the arch extending to the floor. Passing through the arch a short distance, they came to a stream of water about a foot in depth, passing over a bed of white sand. The water was very clear and cold, and though evidently flowing had but little velocity. The width of the stream could not be determined, but as far as the lights penetrated it was arched over by solid walls of rock, approaching very near its surface.

ONE OF MANY.

The New York Graphic gives this pen picture of one of many: "Well, the poor boy came into the world with a weak body, for his mother was troubled with much household care and labor when she bore him, and his father, though a church member in good standing, was an inordinate tobacco chewer, and kept his strength bolstered up through the stimulus of the weed. So long as the boy ran about loose with other children and played in the sand with bare feet he was tolerably healthy. But when sent to school he pined. At the boarding school he was counted a good scholar and made great progress in memorizing. At 18 he was tall, "spindling" and slightly stooping, always complaining, eating according to custom whatever was set before him, working and studying directly after eating, and complaining of a weak stomach. So he went on in life till the age of 25. Then he married, was always in poor health and in frequent consultation with doctors; now regulation doctors, with reputations and diplomas, and then in despair applying to outside doctors, herb doctors, bush doctors, botanic doctors and tramp doctors; doctors who said it was his liver, doctors who said it was the heart, doctors who said it was malaria, doctors who said he did not make blood enough, doctors who starved him, doctors who stuffed him, doctors who chilled him in cold, wet blankets, doctors who parboiled him in medicated vapor baths, doctors who advised him to go North, doctors who advised him to go South, doctors who suggested springs, doctors who recommended mud baths, but never a doctor who told him that half the damage had been done before he came into the world and the other half through his own ignorance and that of the authors of his being afterwards. But he died all right and the doctors then found out what ailed him, and they gave the complaint a Latin name, and it is now raging round seeking whom it may devour.

TO SUFFERERS FROM HAY FEVER.—A hay fever association has published a code of rules which is commended to the attention of sufferers from hay fever, with a recommendation to live according to its directions. It says that the patient should breathe pure air, get plenty of sleep: a plain, nutritious diet; exercise, and that he should take daily sponge baths to keep the pores of the skin open. He should sleep in the upper rather than in the lower story of a house, should avoid fatty or starchy food, all kinds of dust, hot sunshine, damp night air, late hours, late and hearty suppers and the bad air of crowded rooms. He should wear flannels and dress warmly enough to prevent the body from being either heated or chilled by sudden change of temperature. This is excellent advice for anybody, and a person need not have the hay fever or anything else in order to derive benefit from its observation.

When Wells was two years and a half old, his sister and himself saw their mother, who was sick, take a dose of quinine done up in tissue paper. It being near the national holiday, their vision was full of fire-crackers, and the little girl exclaimed: "Brother, that is a torpedo," and flew in terror from the room. But the little fellow waited several moments, and then exclaimed: "Mamma! why don't you go off?"

"Isn't there an awfully strong smell of pigs in the air?" asked Smith of Jones. "Yes," replied Jones, "that's because the wind is from the sow-west."

Conductors do the fare thing, masons do the square thing, and editors do the write thing.

Too Uttaly Utta.

I'm called an æsthetic young man,
And wude people say I am silly!
I carway a wose and a fan,
And dine on the scent of the lily;
I'm touched with bwic-a-bwac cwaze,
A plaque sets my heart in a flutta,
I'm sweet and wefined in my ways—
In fact I'm decidedly utta,
Yes, utta,
In fact, I'm decidedly utta.

I dwess in a pictuwesque style,
My costume is simple and soulful;
My face weahs an æsthetic smile
That's half idiotic, half doleful;
I've nothing in common with those
Wude people who spwing up from the gutta;
But that's too abswurd to suppose—
I'm quite too decidedly utta,
Yes, utta,
I'm quite too decidedly utta.

On wising I pwactice a while
In fwont of my miwor each mawning,
To catch the expwession and smile
That ignowant people are scawning,
And when through the city I pass
I set the girls' hearts in a flutta;
Though some of them call me an ass,
What mattahs it while I am utta?
Yes, utta,
What mattahs it while I am utta?

THE INSTITUTE FAIR.

BOSTON, Sept. 16th, 1881.

A person finds the possibilities of packing well illustrated in the horse cars going towards the New England Mauufacturers' and Mechanics' Institute, but when once inside the building all danger of crowding is past. A regiment or the inhabitants of a township might be lost in the spacious halls and galleries. Over 100,000 people, it is said, can locomote and inspect the exhibits without inconvenience. 2,000,000 bricks, 2,000,000 feet of lumber, and 40,000 square feet of glass went into the structure. It is without doubt the largest permanent exhibition building in this country. The plan of construction is exceedingly simple. There is a front hall and an enormous main hall, with galleries above the former and round about the latter. The exhibits are thoroughly systematized, so that even without the comprehensive catalogue which has been issued, any particular one can be found with ease.

The textile machinery—the cunning metallic fingers that weave our clothing—the machines that turn out our boots and shoes with marvelous facility, the wood and iron working machines that supply all sorts of necessities and luxuries of life—all varieties of these, and the engines that furnish the motive power, may be seen in practical operation in the main hall. The galleries are devoted to another class of exhibits, ranging however from furniture and pianos, heliotypes and chromos, to tanned goods. But your correspondent didn't attempt to investigate and comprehend all these things on the first visit. With supreme indifference to the sage injunctions of that terrible race of people, the methodical sight-seers, he sauntered about the acres of machinery, up and down the spacious aisles, into the unique and artistic sections of the galleries, anywhere and everywhere. He did not hold himself above partaking of the chocolate, male-berry coffee and griddle-cakes, that are dispensed free of charge in the rear gallery. Nor was he proof against the glass-blowers, nor even the card mania, which, judging from the miscellaneous collections the ladies carry out of the building, has taken a new lease of life.

Among the exhibits of peculiar interest, is that of the Hampton and Carlisle institutes. The noble work that these institutions have done and are doing for the intellectual and industrial development of the Indian and negro is here illustrated. Striking and suggestive contrasts are continually forcing themselves upon the attention of observant visitors at the fair. For example: in this Hampton exhibit sits a somewhat taciturn but very industrious Apache, not more than ten weeks from his native wilds. With ordinary shoemaker's tools, but in a method peculiar to himself, he puts together a pair of rough shoes in the course of two days. Almost directly below, on a raised bench over the spur of the Providence Railroad, is to be seen ye ancient cobbler, who consumes the same amount of time with much the same result. Round about the latter, and reaching the ears of the Indian as he bends quietly over his work, comes the incessant whirl and buzz of the numerous intricate machines of the model shoe-factory, where the leather may be cut, a dozen processes gone through, and a finely finished pair of boots placed upon the feet in precisely eight minutes. The shoemaking exhibit is the largest in the fair, and is arranged to give the visitor as comprehensive an idea of the manufacture as could be obtained by spending a day or two in the numerous departments of a large factory. In the latter a novice is apt to be confused by the roar of machinery, and the swarms of workmen, while here a logical insight may be obtained into all the processes, from the uncut leather to the finished boot.

To attempt to make further mention of particular exhibits would intrude too much upon your space. Suffice it to say, that the opportunities at the New England Manufacturers' and Mechanics' Institute Fair, for instruction and amusement, for hearing excellent music, and enjoying one's self in a general way, are such as no visitor to Boston should fail to take advantage of. The admission fee is but a quarter,—the management placing it at this modest figure, that the fair might be more of a popular educator. According to the turnstile count, some 200,000 people have already passed through the gates. The other attractions in the city, the grand fair of the Charitable Mechanic Association, the Art Museum, the Natural History Rooms, and the magnificent churches of the Back Bay—all of which are within fifteen minutes of the Institute Fair—render it particularly desirable to be in Boston at this season. * * *

North Carolina has discovered a new gem called the "hiddenite." It is similar in color to the emerald, but harder and more brilliant. One vein only has been found, and that only two to two and a-half inches wide and two feet long. The cut stones sell readily for $100 per carat, and the largest yet found weighs five and three-quarters carats.

"Oh! Mister," said an old lady after a bicycle had passed her, "just now I seed a wagon-wheel runnin' away with a man. You kin believe it or not. I wouldn't if I hadn't seed it myself."

An exchange says the Ohio River is so low that steamers have to carry sprinklers to lay the dust.

THE SKIDMORE CHOP.

While the proprietor of the Maison Doree was standing behind his counter the other day catching flies for currant cake, and wishing that a little of the business wave Eastern papers say so much about would slop over into his restaurant, as it were, a young man with a beaming smile on his face and a big box under his arm entered.

"Don't want any sleeve buttons nor nuthin'," growled the dyspepsia distributor.

"No, nor I," said the stranger affably, depositing the box on the counter and removing the lid. "But what you do want is the greatest invention of recorded time—the restaurant keeper's friend—the boarding house proprietor's salvation."

"Roach poison!" said the steak stretcher contemptuously.

"No, sir," retorted the young man, taking a handful of singularly shaped objects out of the box. "Something that beats the phonograph and telephone all hollow. I refer to the 'Skidmore chop.'"

"What's that?"

"Why, it's the most economical device of modern times, and I'll prove it right here. Suppose you are serving a dinner to say half-a dozen persons. Now, how many chops do you put on the table!"

"Well, about two apiece, say twelve."

"And how many are eaten!"

"Hum! about four."

"Exactly—that is about the average as our restaurant statistics show. As a matter of course, however, you are obliged to cook three times as much as you need to make a stew. Now, if you could save six chops every dinner for a year it would amount to ——"

"A fortune," said the man of cutlets, eagerly. "All we can do with 'em now is to work 'em over into hashes."

"Peace to your hashes," said the agent; "all this ruinous waste is now prevented by the introduction to the same dish of the patent Skidmore Indestructible India-Rubber Chop, put up in packages of one dozen and warranted for five years," and the food economizer exhibited some life-like imitations of cooked mutton-chops.

"Looks like a good scheme," said the concoctor of stews, thoughtfully; "but don't the customers ever——"

"Ever tumble? Not in the least. He only notices that one chop is a little tougher than the others, and finally gets his fork and chews ahead. These smaller ones come higher, as they are made of a little more limber article of rubber, for lamb chops. Can't be told from the genuine by the naked eye. All you have to do is to grease 'em on both sidss, warm 'em up a little, and serve them mixed in with others same as usual."

"Seems like they are about as tender as the regulation kind," said the restauranter, jabbing one with a fork. "Don't they ever get eaten by mistake?"

"No—no—that is, not now. We did lose a few that way when first introduced, but now that we make the material tougher, it don't happen any more unless they swallow 'em whole. Why, here's a specimen that's been in use in a Chicago eating saloon for three years, night and day, and you can't see the first tooth print in it yet."

"That settles it," said the restauranter, "I'll take a gross."

"I thought you would," said the chop agent as he took down the order and emphatically declined an invitation for some lunch. "I will drop around in a few days and show you samples of some soft, white rubber lobsters we are getting up especially for the country trade—make the best article of indestructible salad known," and he shouldered his box and walked off in the direction of Baldwin's hotel.

WHAT SHE CALLED HIM.

A well known educationalist vouches for the truth of the following: A teacher in a lower grade in one of our public schools received a new pupil the other day—a little Miss of six or seven years, named, say Mattie Brown. After taking her name for the school roll according to the custom, the teacher said:

"What is your papa's name, Mattie?"

"Mr. Brown."

"Yes, but what is his first name?"

"Don't know—his name is just Mr. Brown."

"Yes, yes, I know;" then a bright idea struck her. "What does your mamma call him."

"Oh! I know what you mean now," the innocent child replied; "Ma, she calls him a darned old fool!"

It is safe to conclude that the teacher did not register the child's father as D. O. F. Brown.

The following remarks, as recorded by the Burlington Hawkeye, might have good effect if uttered by some of the fathers of Boston to their fashionable sons: "Walter," said one of our pork merchants to his sixteen-year-old hope, "I don't mind how short you have your coats cut, so long as they strike you somewhere below the shoulder-blades; neither does it trouble me to see you choking yourself to death in a pair of tight pants. Nor am I much concerned in how many scarf-pins you sport each day, or how large a bundle you carry to the laundry every twenty-four hours. Though the sight of your moustache in its feeble efforts for life makes me faint, yet I can bear up even under that, but let me ever catch you wearing your watch-chain on the outside of your coat, and you'll go to work in the store putting up groceries before you can say quite too utter; do you hear me?"

To purify a room, set a pitcher of water in the apartment, and in a few hours it will have absorbed all the respired gases in the room, the air of which will have become purer, but the water utterly filthy. The colder the water is the greater the capacity to contain these gases. At ordinary temperature a pail of water will absorb a pint of carbonic acid gas and several pints of ammonia. The capacity is nearly doubled by reducing the water to the temperature of ice. Hence water kept in a room awhile is unfit for use. For the same reason water from a pump should always be pumped out in the morning before any of it is used. Impure water is more injurious than impure air.

"Pat," said a gentleman who is fond of using high-sounding phraseology to his man of all work, "I am going to town at 10 o'clock, and shall weed out the cucumber bed in the interim." "Interim?" thought Pat. "That's a mighty quare name for a garden, anyhow!" "Is Mr. Smith at home?" asked a visitor who called shortly afterward. "Yis, sorr; ye'll find him at work in his interim there beyant," announced Pat.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1881.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD DEAD.

The dreaded event has happened. President Garfield died at Long Branch at 10.35 o'clock Monday evening, at the age of 49 years and 10 months, after 11 weeks and 3 days of suffering from the shot inflicted by Charles J. Guiteau at Washington July 2.

Last Saturday forenoon the President had a severe chill, followed by high fever. There were no indications of any new disturbance; it was simply fresh evidence of chronic pyæmia, and showed the strong hold the disease had on the patient. He continued very low on Sunday, and there was another shorter chill in the evening. This was followed by the most quiet night he had had since he was shot, but this was readily accounted for by his extreme weakness. At 8.30 Monday morning there was another severe chill. During the rest of the day he slept most of the time, and was feeling comfortable in the evening, with the prospect of a quiet night. At 10.15 he awoke and said to Gen. Swaim, one of his watchers, that he was suffering great pain, and placed his hand over his heart, Dr. Bliss was called immediately, and said at once that the President was dying. Mrs. Garfield was summoned, and restoratives sent for, but it was of no avail. At 10.35 he breathed his last. The immediate cause of his death was secondary hemorrhage from a mesenteric artery near the track of the ball. A post-mortem examination of the body on Tuesday showed that the ball passed through the spinal column, carrying small pieces of bone into the adjacent soft parts, and lodging just below the pancreas and behind the peritoneum, about two and one-half inches to the left of the spine, where it had become safely encysted. The supposed track of the ball on the right side was a long suppurating channel caused by burrowing pus. There was an abscess near the gall bladder, but none in the lungs. The wound was an incurable one, and the only wonder is that the President survived a day.

The cabinet met immediately after the President's death, and notified Vice President Arthur, who took the oath of office as President at 2.15 Tuesday morning, at his home in New York, the oath being administered by Judge Brady of the supreme court. On Tuesday President Arthur went to Long Branch and called upon Mrs. Garfield, with Gen. Grant. Wednesday morning the remains were viewed by over 2000 people, and at 10 o'clock the body was placed in the same car that bore the suffering patient to the seashore, and was conveyed to Washington by special train, President Arthur, Gen. Grant and others being on the same train with the mourners. At Washington the remains were removed to the rotunda of the capitol, where they lay in state until 5 o'clock last night, when they were again transferred to the funeral train to be conveyed to Cleveland, where the funeral services will be held next Monday, at 2 o'clock p. m. The body will be interred in Lakeview cemetery.

The sad news of the President's death was promptly telegraphed all over the country, and bells were tolled throughout the land, buildings were draped, and flags displayed at half mast. The whole nation, which for weeks has watched with deep anxiety and tenderness at the bedside of the stricken President, praying that the threatened blow might be averted, is bowed down with sadness and mourning, while from all parts of the world messages of sympathy and grief are pouring in. President Garfield, while eminently a man of the people, was possessed of elements of greatness which gave promise of an administration of purity and great power. Worthy of all the honor and love bestowed upon him, a future of brilliant promise before him, the noble man was laid low in a moment, and the fond expectations of the people were blasted as never before. Truly,

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

Mrs. Garfield bears up nobly under her great affliction. But the sorrow and anguish of her heart, who can tell?

PRESIDENT ARTHUR took the oath of office again at Washington on Thursday, and delivered a brief and admirable address, in which he declared it to be his purpose to carry out the noble aspirations, and the excellent measures devised by his predecessor for the welfare of the nation. The whole country will accept the address as a declaration of his honest purposes; and let all the people pray that he may have strength to carry them out.

MONDAY next, the day of Gen. Garfield's funeral, has been appointed a day of humiliation and mourning, by proclamation of President Arthur, as well as by several of the Governors. Let it be observed, reverently and devoutly, that this terrible blow may be sanctified alike to the good of the people individually, and as a whole.

THE Republicans met at Worcester Wednesday, 1038 strong, among the delegates being Mrs. Mary A. Livermore. The old State ticket was renominated, and a platform adopted which is good, but so wonderfully long that it will be accepted mainly by faith, and not by reading.

The Grand Trunk Railroad, which has for some time been selling round trip tickets from Chicago to Boston and return for $10, good for 30 days, has now begun selling on the same terms from Boston to Chicago.

Very cold weather is reported in Nebraska and Iowa, and snow has fallen all along the Rock Island Railroad to within 20 miles of Chicago.

The last rail in the extension of the New York and New England Railway to the Hudson River was laid on Saturday.

THE CATTLE SHOW.

Twenty-ninth Annual Exhibition of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society.

Another of our farmers' festivals has come and gone, leaving pleasant recollections of a two days' successful exhibition, which in many respects surpassed any of its predecessors. Barring the heat of the first day and the dust of the second, Nature could not have been asked to do better than she did for the comfort of the people, who in their turn contributed liberally in attendance and exhibits toward the success of the fair.

FIRST DAY.

The chilly fog of Tuesday morning soon melted away, and as the forenoon advanced the sun grew hot and red, the air was sultry and smoky, and the visitors on the park found themselves sweltering as though it were a midsummer day. The display of stock was larger than last year, the whole number of entries being 129. H. A. Rindge of Monson led in miscellaneous herds, having 29 head on the grounds, including 11 cows, one of which gave 42½ lbs. of milk a day early in June, and the first of September had only dropped off 11 pounds from that figure. His herd of 13 steers was a good one. One of them is quite a novelty in the cattle-kind, its hair being woolly like the head of a negro, while its tail is barren of hair except at the extremity. Luther Crawford of Braintree showed a herd of 19 grade Durham and Jerseys, including a handsome little Jersey bull calf 4½ months old, named "Gov. Long," and some fine Jersey cows of good size. Mr. Crawford does not breed in his stock, believing that the practice results in diminishing size and value, and the results of his way of doing, compared with those who do breed in, seem to show that he has good ground for his belief. The "Brookside Farm" of W. A. Childs of New Braintree was well represented, there being a herd of 9 milch cows which took the first premium at Worcester, and also his Ayrshire bull "Phil Sheridan," which has taken numerous premiums. The State Primary School was represented by a herd of 18 Ayrshire milch cows, which were evidently good milkers, while their big Ayrshire bull was also on hand. J. K. Knox showed a pretty Jersey bull, and other good specimens in this class were also shown by other farmers. J. H. Woolrich exhibited a smart heifer 2 years and 3 months old, which dropped her first calf when a year and 10 days old, and another one when 2 years old. The working oxen were well represented, and showed good muscle and training in handling the loaded cart. The pair of grade Jerseys owned by C. K. Watson of West Brookfield were perhaps the handsomest yoke on the grounds, and were well trained, though in this respect the Carpenters, as usual, also made a good showing. There was an excellent display of steers. J. S. Loomis's 2-years-old Devons were noticeable as as nice a match as could be wished.

More swine were exhibited than last year, the State Primary School showing the most pork under one skin. L. Crawford had some nice Poland Chinas, and E. M. Fisher of Belchertown a nice lot of 21 weaned pigs. Other exhibitors were Geo. E. Tucker & Son, Hardin Hunt, C. R. Shaw and J. M. Tucker.

There was also a better showing of sheep than last year, the entries being more than double. They were mostly Cotswold and Southdowns, and were exhibited by C. R. Shaw, Josiah Stebbins, C. Upham and H. A. Rindge.

The poultry bench was pretty well covered. The largest varieties were shown by W. F. Adams of West Brookfield and Geo. E. Tucker & Son of Monson. L. W. Tanner had a good collection of Brahmas, and T. J. Chalk of white and black Leghorns, while H. C. Gates showed some hens which for five months have been laying at the average rate of 15 eggs per month, each. Winslow Fosket of Brimfield had a pair of handsome Pekin ducks on exhibition, which were almost large enough to pass for geese.

There were only five contestants in the morning plowing match, four of them having oxen. The ground was very dry and stony, and the committee recommend that the stones be cleared to the depth of 10 inches from the land to be used for this purpose in the future. The exhibition of trained steers did not develop as much interest as usual, and there were only two exhibitors.

There were only two entries in the afternoon double team race, which turned out to be a ridiculous farce. C. H. Hatfield's "Little Mary" and mate went around the track in good shape, being followed, after a fashion, by a pair of alleged horses entered by Joseph Goddard. Trotting was out of the question for these animals, and they could only be kept in a moderate gallop by the diligent use of whip and voice. After two heats, the race was given to Hatfield, who made each mile comfortably in 3.18. The three minute race developed some good trotting, and some pretty good speed, withal, for a three minute class. "Ebbie" took the race in three straight heats, but was pretty hard pushed in the second and third heats by "Seyllono," who trotted in fine style, and would have taken the second heat but for an unfortunate break just at the end. The judges in both races were L. K. Washburn of Boston, Cyrus Truesdell of Monson and John Sweetser of Holyoke. The score of the three minute race was as follows:

O. E. Crawford, Palmer, "Ebbie,"	1	1	1
R. L. Goddard, " "Seyllono,"	4	2	2
Jos. Goddard, Brookfield, "Young Ethan,"	2	4	4
Wm. Sherman, Palmer, "Combination,"	3	3	3

Time: 2.55, 2.45, 2.49.

IN THE HALL.

The display of vegetables this year was considerably below that of last year as to quantity, though the quality was perhaps as good. The State Primary School led in varieties, and made a fine showing. There were but few squashes, Chas. Upham being the only exhibitor, but showing some handsome ones. There was also but one entry of pumpkins. A few baskets of nice looking potatoes were to be seen, mostly Burbank Seedlings, though O. White & Son of Monson had some Mammoth Pearl, and Hiram Danks of Wilbraham some Wilson Seedlings, which looked plenty good enough to eat. C. P. Bradway of Monson showed 80 lbs. of Snow Flakes raised from one potato. A. P. Capen of Belchertown displayed some cauliflowers, and a good collection of other vegetables. A cabbage weighing 23¼ lbs. was shown by L. W. Tanner, and Josiah Stebbins had a lot of fine large turnips which were sowed the 25th of July.

Not many apples were to be seen this year, though Mrs. L. E. Strong displayed a bushel of handsome Pound Royals. A. B. Howard had specimens of 30 varieties of fruit, and Dr. Wakefield of Leicester also had a fine spread, comprising 28 varieties of pears and 17 of apples. The most luscious looking peaches in the room were the early and late Crawfords raised by E. M. Walker of Monson. In canned fruits Mrs. J. H. Keith showed 10 varieties, while A. P. Capen had an attractive display of 18 kinds of pickles.

There was about the usual amount of bread and cake on the tables, as well as of toothsome looking butter, but only 5 cheeses, made by Mrs. David Parker of Brimfield and W. F. Adams of West Brookfield. In cut flowers Mrs. Orcutt made the largest display, and Mrs. J. H. Keith had a number of pot plants, while several other ladies contributed more or less to this part of the exhibition. By the door E. S. Gibbons had a handsome case of shoes, and an agent of Pyle's Pearline generously distributed packages of his goods to all who came near, while in the hall there was an attractive display of marble work from L. C. White's establishment.

The upper hall was probably never so well filled with articles useful and ornamental as this year. The ladies surely "did themselves proud," and it was an exhibition worth seeing. There was a noticeable improvement in the quality of the articles shown, too, which it is pleasant to note. The specimens of water colors and paintings from the hands of some of our young ladies were an attractive addition to the exhibition in this respect, and we hope to see more of them from year to year. We couldn't begin to mention all the pretty things we saw. The premium list tells the story. With nearly 200 entries of fancy articles, it is no wonder that the committee felt their allowance of $30 quite inadequate. In view of the difficulty of deciding between so many articles of equal merit, the committee adopt the plan of giving all something, and this of course makes the awards small in detail. The committee on domestic manufactures complain of careless classification of goods. They do not approve of the practice of bringing in unfinished, soiled and partly worn articles, and wisely give the preference to completed, fresh goods in their awards.

SECOND DAY.

There was a welcome change in the atmosphere Tuesday night, and though Wednesday's sun was bright and warm, the air was clear and comfortable, making the day as delightful a one as the most ardent horseman could have desired. The display of breeding mares and of colts this year was rather above the average. There were 12 entries of mares with foal, Luther Crawford's large and handsome mare being especially noticeable, and taking the first premium. Mr. Crawford also showed a handsome 2 years old colt from this mare, large and stylish, and tipping the scales at 975 lbs. Chas. Upham exhibited a Mambrino colt, smaller, but none the less handsome, and C. W. Johnson showed a promising Hambletonian. There was but one entry in pairs of draft horses, and only two in single draft horses, both of which did their work in good shape. There were four entries in pairs of driving horses, Luther Crawford's pair taking the first premium. Eight horses came out at the call for single driving horses, and were sent around the track in two lots, R. L. Goddard's fine moving horse going easily to the front, while J. F. Holbrook's trotted in good style, and Henry Loomis's shapely horse won much admiration.

The afternoon races called out the usual large attendance, and were close and interesting throughout. In the first heat of the 2.30 class "Wetherbee" and "Dick Dample" came in neck and neck, and it was declared a dead heat between them. "Little Mary" showed some good work in the 2.45 class, winning in three straight heats. The scores were as follows:

2.45 CLASS.

C. H. Hatfield, Chicopee, "Little Mary,"	1	1	1
C. A. Sweetser, Holyoke, "Brown Johnnie,"	2	2	2
E. F. Bass, Springfield, "Harry N.,"	3	3	3
O. E. Crawford, Palmer, "Ebbie,"	4	4	4

Time: 2.45, 2.44¼, 2.45½.

2.30 CLASS.

W. S. Miller, Springfield, "Dick Dample,"	0	2	1	1	1
E. F. Bass " "Wetherbee,"	0	1	2	4	3
C. A. Sweetser, Holyoke, "Johnny,"	3	3	3	2	2
A. E. Whitney, Springfield, "Dick,"	4	4	4	3	4

Time: 2.45, 2.42, 2.44, 2.46¾, 2.44¾.

There being but one entry in the open to all class—"Mazo Manie" by Gary Bros. of Stafford—it was given up, and the 2.30 class substituted, Gary Bros. being given $25 for beating the best time made in this class, which they easily did, "Mazo Manie," accompanied by a running horse, making the mile in 2.36. The judges in the races were L. K. Washburn of Boston, F. B. Hoadley of Springfield and Joseph Baldwin of North Wilbraham.

PREMIUMS.

Plowing Match.—6 entries, 5 competing. Reuben Carpenter, Brookfield, $6 and $3; E. R. Carpenter, Charlton, $5; W. F. Adams, West Brookfield, $4; A. L. Haynes, Palmer, $2—the latter with horses.

STRAY NOTES.

The total receipts for the two days were $682.18. The larger ground rents made last year's total $19 higher than this year.

Only one entry was made in the new members' trotting class, which was accordingly given up.

The premiums will be paid about Oct. 25th.

Complaint is still made of the stealing of fruit on exhibition. A watchman should be employed to guard it.

By all means, let's have a big tank of ice water at the entrance of the hall next year. This buying ice water at the tents for 5 cents a glass, under the enticing name of "lemonade," is too thin. The society can afford to furnish good drinking water free.

"They play well," was the general and deserved comment on the music by the Palmer band Wednesday.

The complaint is still general that members of committees do not "come to time." Why not try fining them, unless they furnish a substitute?

A new and less wobbly judges' stand is hoped for by another year.

Catchpenny shows of one sort and another were unusually abundant, and peddlers of cheap watches and cheaper jewelry seemed to be doing a thriving business.

There were many loud calls for a sprinkler on the track Wednesday afternoon. The dust ought to be laid if possible. It is too utterly too.

State Delegate Benj. P. Ware of Marblehead did not arrive until the second day, but found things looking well.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Milligan's low prices are much appreciated by buyers of boots and shoes.

All the fall shades in Curtain Opaques and Hollands, together with fixtures, can be found at White, Hellyar & Co's.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The circus is coming.

Lawyer Gardner has this week put in a stone curbing in front of his place on Church street.

The New Orleans Minstrels opened the entertainment season at Wales Hall last evening, with their jokes and music.

Rev. A. F. Newton of Townsend preaches at the Congregational church to-morrow, and Rev. J. S. Gledhill at the Universalist church.

A party of five New York people, who are making a tour through this part of the country, three of them on horseback, spent Thursday night at the Weeks House.

An apple tree in the yard of Dr. C. W. Cross is of so ambitious a turn that it has started a second set of blossoms, evidently with the intention of producing some winter fruit.

Mr. C. N. Gilmore, of Des Moines, Ia., superintendent of the Des Moines & Ft. Dodge R. R., is now stopping with C. L. Gardner. Mr. Gilmore is a brother of Mrs. Gardner.

The Baptist church last Sunday chose the following delegates to the annual meeting of the Westfield Baptist Association at Holyoke this week: Dea. L. Dimock, E. G. Buss and S. Edgerton.

Secretaries James, Windom and Hunt, of the President's cabinet, passed through Palmer on their way to Long Branch last Saturday, in a special car attached to the 1.22 p. m. New York express.

The programmes which Anthony & Ellis have distributed around town state that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" will be played at the town hall this evening. This is a mistake, as the entertainment is to be at Wales Hall.

Lewis Colburn of Gloversville, N. Y., has been visiting his friends in Palmer this week, and took his old place in the band Wednesday, while his musical clarionet added much to the attractiveness of the music at the ball in the evening.

J. F. Bradway of Monson hitched his horse on the park Tuesday, and when he got ready to go home, horse and buggy were both missing. A man was seen driving off with the animal, but no trace of the horse or thief has yet been discovered.

The Boston & Albany Railroad ran another big excursion train to Boston Thursday for the benefit of the numerous Springfield people who got left on the first one. People along this way will have a chance to enjoy a similar trip next Wednesday, at the same low price, $1.25.

Just five men took interest enough in the cause to attend the Republican caucus at the town house last Saturday evening. Dr. S. Ruggles was chosen moderator and H. C. Strong secretary, and the following delegates were appointed to attend the State Convention at Worcester on Wednesday: Dr. S. Ruggles, S. S. Taft, H. C. Strong.

The ball at Wales Hall Wednesday night was one of the pleasantest and most successful ones the band has ever given. The attendance was large and orderly, the music was excellent, and "everything was lovely" throughout. The receipts of the evening were over $60, and the band cleared about $25 to apply on its debt.

Miss Nellie L. Smith of North Brookfield, who for the past year has occupied the position of first soprano in the choir of the Universalist church, has resigned, having accepted a position as music teacher in the Tilden Ladies' Seminary at West Lebanon, N. H. Mrs. Wm. B. Lawton, of Ware, succeeds Miss Smith in the choir.

The vacancy in the school committee, occasioned by the resignation of Rev. B. M. Fullerton, will be filled for the balance of the present year by the selectmen and remaining members of the committee at the town house next Monday. The names most prominently mentioned as probable candidates are E. B. Gates, Enos Calkins, Rev. C. H. Ricketts, and Geo. A. Murdock, and other good names will very likely be brought out on Monday.

The old project of an independent route to New York is revived again by the Boston & Albany managers, whose engineers have begun surveys this week for a more direct line from Springfield than by way of Hartford and New Haven. It is given out that the company means business, and will probably begin building in a few months if a desirable route can be found. It will very likely be a fine thing for the road and the public if it can be done, but in view of the way the managers got left in a recent effort in this same direction, they should go slow in advertising their plans in advance.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" is to be on the boards at Wales Hall to-night, and the announcement that it will be presented by Anthony & Ellis's well known company is a sufficient guarantee of the excellence of the entertainment. Since they were here last, this company have been performing in the Windsor Theatre at New York to crowded houses, and the Dramatic News compliments them in this fashion: "The company is a fine one, introducing many novelties to the great satisfaction of the large audiences. The Memphis University Students are a show in themselves; their singing is superb. The trick donkey is a star actor and the introduction of Siberian bloodhounds makes a realistic presentation. The business done is something wonderful."

An earnest appeal for aid for the suffering people of Michigan was read in our churches last Sunday, and a committee of ladies were invited to solicit in each of the societies. In the many things to take up the minds of our people this week, it is feared some may have been overlooked. If there are any families who have not been called on, that have any spare clothing, bedding, or housekeeping utensils of any kind, they are invited to send such articles to Union Hall, which was opened yesterday, and will remain open to-day for the reception and packing of goods. Our citizens should contribute liberally to relieve the destitution among the poor sufferers by fire, remembering that they have nothing left, many of them not even clothes to cover them, and they need everything used in living.

The "Great Consolidated Van Amburgh's Golden Menagerie and Frost's Roman Circus and Coloseum" will exhibit in Palmer on Saturday, Oct. 8. This large show has been before the people of this country for over fifty years, and for 36 consecutive years under the management of Hyatt Frost. In this aggregation will be found 26 cages of wild animals, birds, and reptiles, comprising a rare collection of over 500 living curiosities. Besides those in cages, the show has the largest elephant in this country, the only two-horned rhinoceros in America, a herd of camels, a living nondescript, sea lions, Alaska walrus, giraffe, ant eating bear, &c., and a circus company composed of over 100 of the principal equestrians, acrobats, and athletes in the profession. The Van Amburgh show has always been one of the leading institutions of this country, and we are assured that the combined menagerie and circus this season is far superior to all former ones. That the great show will meet with liberal patronage will not admit of a doubt. It is meritorious as an exhibition, and has an enviable reputation for upright and honest dealings with the people.

The church bells were tolled from 11 a. m. to 12 on Tuesday, in memory of the dead President. The bank block has been very tastefully draped, and the flags on the Weeks House and the State Primary School float at half mast, while the buildings are draped. The black and white emblems of mourning also appear in the post office and some of the stores, and others will doubtless follow suit before Monday. The interior of St. Paul's church has been heavily draped, and appropriate memorial services will be held to-morrow, at the usual hour of morning service. Monday having been set apart as a day of mourning, the bank and the schools throughout the town will probably close, and it is hoped that the places of business will also be generally closed. Palmer is unfortunately without any resident clergyman at present, and no arrangements for public services have yet been made, but an effort will be made for a gathering of the people Monday afternoon, with services appropriate to the occasion, and it is hoped that the clergymen occupying the different pulpits to-morrow will be present, and perhaps also others from other parts of the town.

BELCHERTOWN.

The annual Cattle Show and fair will be held at Belchertown Oct. 7th. Van Amburgh's circus is advertised for the same day.

THREE RIVERS.

Joseph Genard's little son Frank fell off a raft into the pond Tuesday, and was drowned. A man stood stupidly by without making any attempt to rescue the lad or summon help, though the water was only four feet deep, and he might have been saved easily.

WALES.

The Wales mill has commenced to card wool and the looms will start up next week.

The telephone boxes are now put in, and everybody wants to talk, much to the annoyance of old operators on the line.

In the ball game between the second nines of Wales and Monson last Saturday the former were victorious. This week the 2nd nine of Brookfield will play a game here.

LUDLOW.

The Ludlow Mills have begun a new brick st

William Chapin has purchased a building lot on Maple street of C. S. Fuller.

Mrs Wm G. McIntyre is spending a few weeks at her old home in Haddam, Ct.

Herbert King, lately employed in the office of the paper mill, has been released from his engagement.

E. H. Cutler is on an equestrian tour in the White Mountains, with friends from Framingham and Boston.

The late campaign flags now hang side by side, draped in mourning for the late President. Several houses are also draped.

Moses Phillips has opened a barber's shop in the basement of the brick block, where he will be found each evening of the week.

The ladies of Grace chapel society met Thursday at the house of Mrs. E. B. Gates to arrange for sending relief to the Michigan sufferers.

J. C. Dennis left here for Colorado last Wednesday night. W. F. Ellis, Jr., now at South Framingham, will leave Oct. 13th for the same place.

Would not the Hampden correspondent do well to accredit Hampden part interest in the unpleasant developments at Glendale (Wilbraham) to which he referred two weeks ago?

Louis Collins is wanted by the authorities for forging the name of his father-in-law to a marraige certificate, by which means he was enabled to marry the maid from the mountain who had not become of age, and against her fond parents' wishes.

BRIMFIELD.

Mrs. Jemima A. Groves, who celebrated her 107th birthday on the 3d inst., died at her daughter's house on Monday.

Four telephones have been put into running order here within about a week. They prove at once to be of value to the community in bringing speedy news from Palmer, Springfield and elsewhere.

The sad news of President Garfield's death was received by telephone at the hotel at a quarter past six Tuesday morning. The flag was draped and raised at noon, and the bells tolled just after sunset. The balcony of the hotel has been tastefully festooned with mourning.

A notable social event of last week was the very happy golden wedding of Dea. Dauphin Brown on Saturday. More than ninety persons were present, consisting of children, grandchildren, cousins and other relatives, together with a large number of personal friends. Miss Abbie Brown, a daughter in the family, furnished a poem, and Miss Cora, a granddaughter, read another. Letters were resd from two brethers, a brother-in-law, and a niece, and from Dea. N. S. Hubbard, now in London. Mrs. Hubbard also sent kindly greetings, written in verse. A good many other letters, not read, have been received by the worthy pair, and the congratulations have been both numerous and hearty. Several appropriate selections of music were furnished by Misses Cora and Lena Brown. Mr. Brown himself gave some interesting reminiscences of his early married life, spent in Richland, Michigan, whither he went with his father and brothers in their own wagon, while that region was still a wilderness. Dr. Alvan Smith of Monson related a number of striking facts pertaining to this branch of the Brown family. Rev. D. R. Atkins made remarks and offered prayer. The presents were all in good taste, and amounted in value to a hundred dollars. The whole affair was thoroughly enjoyed by all and the members of the family may well remember the day with especial satisfaction. Dea. Brown has spent most of his life in Brimfield, though residing in Michigan for nearly ten years. He attended the first Sabbath School ever organized in Brimfield, and has been a deacon in the church here thirty-seven years. He and Mrs. Brown are both in good health, and bid fair to add many more years to their happy wedded life.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Prof. Merrill, principal of the high school, has received an urgent call to take charge of the high school at St. Paul, Minn.

There was a game of base ball on Saturday last between members of the high and grammar schools, the latter winning the game, 6 to 3.

Horseback riding is still the style. As many as ten couples have been out at a time enjoying this healthful exercise. All classes seem to participate in it, from the gray haired veteran to the children not yet in their teens.

The social dance to have been given by the Clipper Base Ball Club on Thursday evening was postponed on account of the death of the President to Tuesday evening next, when they will no doubt have a larger party than they could have had this week.

There was not nearly so large an audience at the temperance lecture by Mrs. McLaughlin Wednesday evening as there ought to have been. She is an earnest, eloquent speaker, and in her address states facts as she has seen them, and in a most convincing manner.

J. L. Fairbank and C. D. Marlan attended the Grand Lodge. I. O. of G. T., at Taunton on Wednesday, as delegates from Crusade lodge of Ware. H. L. Fairbank and H. H. Ashton have been chosen delegates to attend the Convention of the Red Ribbon Reform Clubs at Hilliston next Wednesday.

A large number of our residents attended the firemen's muster at West Brookfield last Saturday. The Oregon Engine Company of 60 men, accompanied by the Ware Cornet Band, were there, and as was expected carried off the honors by playing 185 feet 1½ inches, about 15 feet more than any other engine on the grounds, and several feet further than was played by the same engine with the old company at the muster here in 1878. The special reporter of the Springfield Republican claims that the Deluge of North Brookfield would have had the best record had they played through the same length of hose as the Oregon, but fails to state the fact that the Deluge did not come up even to the record of the Oregon last year, when they were playing through a considerably greater length of hose than the Deluge had this year.

Our citizens were startled on Tuesday morning by the announcement of the President's death. The news came by telephone soon after 7 o'clock, and was corroborated by the newspapers at 9 o'clock. A deep gloom and sense of sorrow seemed to fall upon every heart, of whatever nationality or party. The East Congregational and Unitarian church bells were tolled in the morning, and the mill bells for half an hour at noon. Soon after the news of his death was received the campaign flag used by the Democratic club last fall was draped with crape and hung in its old place across Main street. Nearly all the principal stores and many private residences soon put on an appearance of mourning, noticeable among the former being the store of Judd & Sawtelle, both of whose show windows were elaborately and tastefully draped with black and white crape, while in the west window was a large engraving of the late President, surrounded with black crape. The window of the town clerk's office, and the post-office, displayed the emblems of mourning, and the entrance to the library building was appropriately draped. The Grand Army swung out the stars and stripes and the St. Jean Society their tri-color, both draped with black. The Otis company and the Geo. H. Gilbert Manufacturing Company both draped the fronts of their offices in a tasty and appropriate manner. All these outward tokens of respect, however elaborate, could but faintly express the profound and heartfelt grief of all for our own and the nation's loss.

A terrific gale on the Danish coast has destroyed at least thirty vessels.

FIRES.—Beatty's large organ factory at Washington, N. J., and the factory of the Star organ company, were destroyed by fire last Sunday, with several adjoining buildings. Loss about $200,000. The fire throws some 500 men out of employment.——Several buildings at Rome, N. Y., were burned last week Friday, causing a loss of $700,000. Some 20 families were burned out.——A long line of wood piled up beside the Rome, Watertown & Ogdensburg Railroad took fire last week Friday, and the burning mass tumbled over on the track, burning the ties and destroying the track for six miles.——Farmers south of Carthage, N. Y., lost many buildings, with their crops, by extensive forest fires last Saturday.——The Connecticut River Railroad bridge across the Deerfield river, a mile south of Greenfield, was burned Wednesday. The bridge was 600 feet long and 90 feet above the river, and it will be some time before trains can pass. The loss is $50,000.——There was a $200,000 fire at St. Louis Thursday.

Some portions of Michigan were visited Wednesday night by a destructive hurricane.

Dr. Payne in his lecture upon the Foe and Grace says that dyspepsia is a great Foe to Grace. It darkens the sky and breaks the hopes of many Christians. They think the trouble in their hearts when it is in their stomachs. Thus the Stomach influences the feelings in such a degree that it should be more carefully looked after and regulated with never failing Simmons' Regulator, the constant use of which will so improve the feelings as to make the heart happy and the spirits light-

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To all persons interested in the estate of Laura A. Parks, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, Enos Calkins, executor of the will of said deceased, has presented to said court his petition reciting a clause in said will wherein the testatrix gives all the rest, residue and remainder of her estate equally to her seven children therein named, "providing that all such sums as any of said children shall be indebted to me at the time of my decease, as well as all such sums as I may then be holden to pay for any of them, shall first be deducted from the share such child would otherwise receive," representing that one of said legatees, viz: B. Franklin Parks, has conveyed his interest in said estate; that two of said legatees, viz: Alonzo H. Parks and William R. Parks, are indebted to said estate, but that said William R. Parks claims that having, as a bankrupt, received his discharge under the bankrupt laws of the United States, his said indebtedness is no part of said estate, neither can the executor set off the same or any part thereof against his share in said estate under the foregoing provision of said will—all of which, together with the names and residences of the legatees, the value of the property, and items of said indebtedness, is more fully set forth in said petition—and praying the court to determine to whom the estate now in the hands of the executor belongs, and how the same should be distributed, and to make such other orders and decrees as the court may deem meet and proper,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of October next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same. And said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by delivering a copy thereof to each person interested who can be found within the State, fourteen days at least before said court; and if any one cannot be so found, by also publishing the same in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, once in each week for three weeks at least before said court, and by mailing a copy thereof to him at his place of residence last known to the petitioner fourteen days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fourteenth day of September, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-one.
3w26 SAMUEL B. SPOONER, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Sophia Langway, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said court, for probate, by Joseph Langway of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to him, the executor therein named, and that he may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on his official bond as such executor,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of October next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said court, and to mail a copy of such notice to each of said next of kin who may reside out of this Commonwealth, fourteen days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fourteenth day of September in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.
3w26 SAMUEL B. SPOONER, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of John S. Trumbull, late of Monson, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, a certain instrument, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, has been presented to said court, for probate, by Joshua Tracy of said Monson, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to him, the executor therein named.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of October next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.
3w25 SAMUEL B. SPOONER, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. Sept. 3d, 1881.

DISTRICT COURT OF EASTERN HAMPDEN, in the county of Hampden, Maurice Healy of Monson, in said county, plaintiff, and John F. Leary, of the city, county and State of New York, defendant. In an action of contract for the recovery of one hundred dollars, as by writ on file in this court will more fully appear.

And now it appearing to said court that said defendant, at the time of the service of the writ, was not an inhabitant of or resident in this Commonwealth, and that no legal service thereof had been made on him, it is ordered that notice be given to said defendant to appear at a term of said court to be holden at Palmer, in said county, on Saturday, the twenty-second day of October next, or his default will be recorded and judgment rendered against him, and that said notice be given by publishing an attested copy of this order, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed in Palmer, in said county of Hampden, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days before the said twenty-second day of October, or by serving him with an attested copy of this order seven days before the said twenty-second day of October. GEORGE ROBINSON,
3w25 Justice of said Court.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. Sept. 3d, 1881.

DISTRICT COURT OF EASTERN HAMPDEN, in the county of Hampden, Joseph McKay of Warren, in the county of Worcester, plaintiff, and Joseph Provost of Holyoke, in said county of Hampden, defendant, in an action of contract for the recovery of two hundred dollars, as by writ on file in this court will more fully appear.

And now it appearing to said court that said defendant, at the time of the service of the writ, was not an inhabitant of or resident in this Commonwealth, and that no legal service thereof had been made on him, it is ordered that notice be given to said defendant, to appear at a term of said court to be holden at Palmer, in said county, on Saturday, the twenty-second day of October next, or his default will be recorded and judgment rendered against him, and that said notice be given by publishing an attested copy of this order, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed in Palmer, in said county of Hampden, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days before the said twenty-second day of October, or by serving him with an attested copy of this order seven days before the said twenty-second day of October. GEORGE ROBINSON,
3w25 Justice of said Court.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the next of kin, creditors, and all other persons interested in the estate of David A. Hoag, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, intestate:

Whereas, application has been made to said court to grant a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased to Wolcott Hamlin of Amherst, in the county of Hampshire, you are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of October next, at nine o'clock before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against granting the same.

And said applicant is hereby directed to give public notice thereof by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said court, and to mail a copy of such notice to each of said next of kin who may reside out of this Commonwealth, fourteen days at least before said Court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said court this sixth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

FOR SALE.
One good TOP PHAETON CARRIAGE, nearly new; one Kimball's best; one Express Wagon.
R. L. GODDARD.
Palmer, Sept. 8th, 1881. 3w25

September.

Now the airy golden rod
In the wood begins to nod,
And the flower all its petals sprinkles lightly on the sod;
While a hectic shimmer plays
On the envelope of haze,
Like a ghostly garment hanging round the forest all ablaze.

Now the robins south are called,
And the freckled lad is mauled
By the owners of the pippins and the trees are getting bald.
Now the valley's sad and glum;
Now the bees no longer hum,
And the partridge in the thicket goes a-rumpy-tumpy-tum.

Now the snipe doth gambol, sad,
On the fading lily-pad,
And the summer's exodusted and I'm very, very glad—
Welcome, autumn's purple skies,
And the sportsman's awful lies
Of his prowess, and the pantry all aflame with pumpkin pies!

Oft in fragrant woodland ways
It destruction with me plays
To think that sweet September is confined to thirty days.
Coldest chills have o'er me crept,
And I've walked around and wept
To think there are prosaic men who write it down as Sept!

HOW MEN BECOME INSANE.

A large number of lunatics in our asylums are the victims of their own misconduct. Almost any man can make himself a lunatic if he pursue the direct method. There are hundreds and perhaps thousands in this city driving themselves to madness. Gambling, speculation and hard drinking will undermine the strongest intellects.

A young man of my acquaintance has lately been sent to Bloomingdale Asylum, who was a few years ago so promising as to obtain an important appointment. He abused his position, wasted a large salary, became suddenly a gambler and a rake, as well as a defaulter. Such a course of vice destroyed his reason, and he is one of the incurables.

The same idea is advanced by Hogarth, who finished the "Rake's Progress" by the scene in the madhouse. During the last five years large numbers have been carried to the asylum, the victims of speculation. The love of pleasure and the haste to get rich have done a fearful work. After the intellect has been over-driven it must sink, and perhaps remain in hopeless prostration. It may be added that the increase of insanity since the opening of the present year is of unparalleled degree. More than 500 cases have been reported during this brief interval, and hence it is not surprising that the asylums are more than full. The attention of the public has been called to this subject by the press, and additional room must be provided. We must either abate that furious intemperance which is driving so many to madness, or we must double our asylums throughout the entire State.—Troy Times.

But let us be more explicit. Is not intemperance the most terrible evil of modern times? Is there a nation in the world not quivering in its folds like Laocoon in the python's coils? Is there a family it has not somewhere hurtfully touched? Is there one life it does not directly or indirectly limit? Is there one human being whom it has not in some way wronged or injured? Is it not a ubiquitous curse? Is there one good thing of which it is not the active and powerful enemy? And is it not daily increasing its power for mischief? Does it not constantly destroy souls?—Rev. Geo. F. Morris.

A frequent visitor to all newspaper offices, says an exchange, is the man who asks as a favor that some item of news shall be suppressed. Most of these gentlemen are honest in their intentions, call from the best motives, and their reception is usually courteous. They hardly stop to think that a newspaper deals in news as a grocer in coffee and a milliner in ribbons. It they went into the grocer's and asked him as a kindness to leave coffee out of his stock and not have it for his customers, they would meet with hardly a cheerful reception for this interference.

There may be those who will take a boy of eighteen years of age, pure and sweet and clean, and give him his first glass of wine, but I would not do it for all the money that has been coined in buying and selling drink since alcohol was first discovered. I would rather give to that poor, shrieking, blaspheming wretch the last glass that nerved him in delirium tremens to blow out his brains than I would his first glass. Give him no first and there will be no second.—Gough.

A little girl in a public school the other day was parsing the word "angel." Coming to the gender she stopped dismayed, and asked her teacher if there were any men angels in heaven.

Alice G. two and a-half years, looking over pictures comes to one of the evil spirits with his bat-like wings. "Funny man," she says, "has parasols grow on him."

My little boy, four years old, said to me: "Mamma, what is the name of that town on the left hand of God, where the wicked people go? I can't think."

A four-year-old waking up from sleep, after playing that he has been riding, says, "Unput the carriage cover (bed-clothes,) and jump out."

The wrong men always get rich. It is the fellow without money who is always telling you how much good he would do with it if he had it.

"After all" says the Elmira Free Press wiping its mouth on a red-bordered napkin, "the most popular greenbacker is the watermelon."

"Longfellow wears his frock-coat buttoned to the chin." The question now is, who sewed that button on the poet's facial extremity?

Weather signs—When you see a doctor and nurse take charge of the house look out for the squalls.

Because it adds to personal beauty by restoring color and lustre to gray or faded hair, and is beneficial to the scalp, is why Parker's Hair Balsam is such a popular dressing. s

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

NECESSITATING A SURGICAL OPERATION—LOVING MOTHER ATTEMPTS TO TAKE A PAIR OF SHEARS FROM HER CHILD.

PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle. 1m22

CARTER'S
IRON PILLS

—FOR THE—

BLOOD, NERVES AND COMPLEXION.

We recommend CARTER'S IRON PILLS to every woman who is weak, nervous and discouraged; particularly those who have thin, pale lips, cold hands and feet, and who are without strength or ambition. These Pills quiet the nerves, give strength to the body, induce refreshing sleep, enrich and improve the quality of the blood, and purify and brighten the complexion. They cure palpitation of the heart, nervousness, tremblings, nervous headache, leucorrhœa, pains in the back, and other forms of female weakness. Remember that Iron is one of the constituents of the blood, and is the great tonic. CARTER'S IRON PILLS are also valuable for men who are troubled with nervous weakness, night sweats, &c. In metal boxes, at 50 CENTS. Sold by all druggists, or sent by mail. Address

PROTECTION FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE,
INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE

PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use.

If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Prepared only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

GRAEFENBERG
VEGETABLE
PILLS

Are the mildest ever known, they cure Headache, Malarial Disease, Biliousness and Indigestion.

THESE
PILLS

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To all persons interested in the estate of Laura A. Parks, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, Enos Calkins, executor of the will of said deceased, has presented to said court his petition reciting a clause in said will wherein the testatrix gives all the rest, residue and remainder of her estate equally to her seven children therein named, "providing that all such sums as any of said children shall be indebted to me at the time of my decease, as well as all such sums as I may then be holden to pay for any of them, shall first be deducted from the share such child would otherwise receive," representing that one of said legatees, viz: B. Franklin Parks, has conveyed his interest in said estate; that two of said legatees, viz: Alonzo H. Parks and William R. Parks, are indebted to said estate, but that said William R. Parks claims that having, as a bankrupt, received his discharge under the bankrupt laws of the United States, his said indebtedness is no part of said estate, neither can the executor set off the same or any part thereof against his share in said estate under the foregoing provision of said will—all of which, together with the names and residences of the legatees, the value of the property, and items of said indebtedness, is more fully set forth in said petition—and praying the court to determine to whom the estate now in the hands of the executor belongs, and how the same should be distributed, and to make such other orders and decrees as the court may deem meet and proper,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of October next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same. And said petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by delivering a copy thereof to each person interested who can be found within the State, fourteen days at least before said court; and if any one cannot be so found, by also publishing the same in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, once in each week for three weeks at least before said court, and by mailing a copy thereof to him at his place of residence last known to the petitioner fourteen days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fourteenth day of September, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Sophia Langway, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said court, for probate, by Joseph Langway of said Palmer, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to him, the executor therein named, and that he may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on his official bond as such executor,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of October next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said court, and to mail a copy of such notice to each of said next of kin who may reside out of this Commonwealth, fourteen days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this fourteenth day of September in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

The House with Closets.

How dear to the heart of the housekeeping woman
Are comforts of which so few architects tell;
Nice children, good servants, and plenty of room in
The well-fitted mansion in which they must dwell.
But first of the blessings kind Fortune can give her,
If she in the city or country abide,
Is that which she longs for and covets forever,
The big airy closets, her joy and her pride—
The roomy, clean closet, the well-ordered closet,
The big, airy closet, her joy and her pride.

The house may be perfect from garret to cellar,
Well lighted, well aired, with cold water and hot;
And yet to the eye of the feminine dweller,
If closetless, all is as if it were not.
How oft she has sunk like a dove that is wounded,
How oft she has secretly grumbled and sighed,
Because she saw not, though with all else surrounded,
The big, airy closet, her joy and her pride!
The roomy, clean closet, the well-ordered closet,
The big, airy closet, her joy and her prde.

Fond husbands, who fain would have home be an Eden,
For you and your Eves all complete as a whole,
To read in, to write in, to sleep in, to feed in,
Forget not the closets so dear to the soul!
But build them in corners, in nooks, and in crannies,
Wherever a closet may harbor or hide,
And give to your Marys, your Kates, and your Annies,
The big, airy closets, their joy and their pride—
The roomy, clean closets, the well-ordered closets,
The big, airy closets, their joy and their pride.

THE HEAD OF APOLLO.

"Felicie! Felicie Brevard! Come here directly."

The soft French name had a queer sound, coming from Mrs. Monson's thin lips and acrid voice.

Felicie came slowly up the stairs to where Mrs. Monson stood talking volubly with her lodger, Mr. Thornton.

"Felicie, walk a little faster," said Mrs. Monson, sharply. "Here is Mr. Thornton, that has missed his finest cameo. You were in his room dusting, yesterday."

"It was a head of Apollo," said Mr. Thornton. "I bought it in Naples. Could you have swept it behind the furniture?"

At the first mention of the cameo, Felicie put her hand in her pocket, she turned deadly pale, and a half cry escaped her.

"Have you got it?" cried Mrs. Monson, shrilly. "If you have, out of these doors you shall pack. Trouble enough I have had with you already—and all your relations."

She seized her by the shoulders, and attempted to put her hand into her pocket. Felicie resisted desperately. She was as white as a ghost.

"Come, come, Mrs. Monson! The cameo is not worth all that," said Mr. Thornton.

It was really worth enough to have made Felicie open her innocent eyes wider than they had ever opened before.

Mr. Thornton had often noticed Felicie. He believed her to be honest, and saw that she was terrified by Mrs. Monson's violence.

"But I mean to get to the bottom of it," said Mrs. Monson.

Thornton caught her by the wrist and forced her to unloose Felicie. He gave her a look before which the shrewishness vanished like smoke.

"You had better go down stairs," said he, quietly. "I will settle this with Felicie."

Mrs. Monson walked submissively down stairs, and left Thornton and the frightened girl alone.

"Now," said Thornton, kindly, but with determination in his voice, "tell me how this all happened."

Felice put her hand in her pocket and handed out the cameo.

"I know you won't believe me," she said, bursting into tears, "but I did not steal it."

"I believe you," said Thornton, "go on."

"I was dusting in your room. I put my handkerchief on the mantel-piece. When I took it up I did not notice that I took anything with it. When I got down stairs I felt it in my pocket. I was hurrying to put it back when I found you and Mrs. Monson here."

She was very pretty when she cried. She had a delicate beauty very different from Mrs. Monson's buxom daughters. He wondered how two types so different could be produced in the same family.

"Are you Mrs. Monson's niece?" he asked.

"No," she answered, with a ring of indignation. "My mother was Mr. Monson's sister, and a lady. My mother was French."

"And how came you here?"

"My father and mother died, and I had nowhere else to go."

She began to cry again.

Thornton had never felt so bad for any human being in his life.

"And have you never been educated?" he inquired, after a pause.

"A little. I can read and write, and I can speak French. My father was a French teacher, and he used to say to me when I was a little thing, 'Felicie, you must study hard some of these days, and you must learn to play and sing;' but I cannot play, and I have not the heart to sing."

Thornton looked at her in silence for some time.

"I have never benefited others much, but this is a chance I will not let slip. Felicie, how would you like to go to school, and then learn some business that would make you independent—such as flower-making?"

"Or dress-making," responded the practical Felicie.

"Very well," said Thornton. "I know of a respectable place where you can live. Let me see—you are about fifteen?"

"Nearly eighteen," said Felicie.

Thornton stared.

She was, then, quite a woman, and an uncommonly pretty one, too, he said to himself.

"You are sure you will not repent? But perhaps I am wrong in taking you away from your natural guardians in this manner."

"You may take me away or not," said Felicie, coolly. "But if someone does not take me away I shall take myself away. I am going now to get everything I have, and nothing will induce me to sleep another night under this roof."

That settled it. Thornton took a card and wrote an address upon it, and in less than an hour Felicie presented herself at her new friend's, with a basket containing all her worldly possessions.

Mrs. Monson came home to find Felicie gone, and no clue to her, while Felicie was being snugly ensconsed in a sunny little room at Miss Shepard's.

Miss Shepard had been an humble friend and dependent of Russell Thornton's mother, and was only too glad to have it in her power to do anything for "Mr. Russell."

Thornton appeared in the evening, and fixed upon a plan for Felicie's future arrangements.

"You shall have a certain amount a month," said he, "above your board. With that you may do as you please. You may go to school, or learn dress-making, or anything else you like. I leave for New York to-morrow evening, and in a week I sail for London. I shall be in Europe certainly for three years, and at the end of that time I shall look you up, to see what you have made of yourself."

Felicie looked up to him with her pretty dark eyes brimming over with tears. She had learned to dread and fear strangers. These two—Russell Thornton and Miss Shepard—were the only two who had ever been kind to her in all her life.

"I will try—I will try!" was all she could say.

Thornton rose to say good-by.

"When I come back I expect to be dazzled with your acquirements."

He shook hands with her as he spoke, and then with Miss Shepard, and the next moment saw his graceful figure disappear in the darkness. She turned to Miss Shepard.

"Will he ever—do you think he will ever come back?" she asked, with quivering lips.

"Of course. Three years will slip by easily."

It seemed an eternity to look forward to, in Felicie's imagination.

The next day she said to Miss Shepard, "Do you know what I am going to do with the money that Mr. Thornton gives me? I intend to learn to sing."

"Learn to sing!" said Miss Shepard, in the same tone as if she had said, "Learn to fly."

"Yes," said Felicie. "To sing like the great opera singers. My mother sang beautifully, and I mean to sing like her."

Miss Shepard interposed no objection, and she soon learned to oppose nothing that Felicie said. She was so bright and so helpful! Miss Shepard's dull little house had never known any youthful merriment, and it warmed the poor old soul's heart to feel Felicie's active and magnetic young presence about her.

She sunned herself, as it were, in Felicie's youth and beauty; and Felicie soon found herself to be the very apple of Miss Shepard's eye.

She had begun her singing lessons the week after Thornton left, and might be heard trilling and caroling down in Miss Shepard's stuffy little parlor, and touching light chords on Miss Shepard's wheezy old piano, all day long.

Nor did she forget to learn some other things, besides. She never knew herself to be fond of books. Her life had been so hard and colorless that she really did not know what she liked except singing. But she read with a steady purpose of improvement that worked wonders. She bought copy-books, and changed her unformed, childish handwriting for one full of vigor.

She had a natural quickness in learning everything that belonged to the domestic affairs, and two years slipped away in a happiness and content that poor Felicie had never dreamed of.

About this time, when Felicie was twenty, she saw an advertisement for a soprano in one of the great city church choirs. She determined to apply for it, and without saying a word to Miss Shepard, she slipped off and went to the vestry-room where candidates were being examined.

When she found herself before so many strange persons, and saw the strange professor who presided at the organ, her heart sank; but when at last "Miss Brevard" was called forward, and she saw her familiar notes, her voice returned to her. She had never felt more mistress of herself. She sang with inspiration. Her voice was so pure, and rich, and beautiful in tone and compass, that she knew almost intuitively that she would succeed. And, indeed, about a week afterward, she received a letter from the choir committee, who, "having made inquiries about her, and finding she was a suitable person, would be glad to have her accept the place of first soprano. The salary would be five hundred dollars, with the privilege of taking lessons from any professor she might select in the city, not to cost more than—etc."

Felicie rushed up stairs to show it to Miss Shepard.

"Just think! Five hundred dollars! And only to sing for it! And lessons from Barilli! What I have longed for and could not afford."

Miss Shepard looked at her in delighted surprise.

"Oh, Felicie, dear, what will Mr. Russell say?"

"Don't you think he will like it?" asked Felicie, stopping short.

"Of course he will, my darling."

"Then it's all right," said Felicie, skipping off to answer her letter.

In a little while, Felicie began to think she took a wicked pleasure in her voice. She could not but be proud of it. Sunday became a day of triumph to her. She felt that when she sung her solos every note was listened to with delighted attention; but she kept down her innocent, girlish vanity by saying:

"When Mr. Thornton comes home, he will have heard so many fine voices that mine will be nothing to him; and if he sees that I am vain of it, he will be utterly disgusted with me."

She had been singing in the choir one whole Winter. It was the afternoon of Easter Sunday, and the church was packed to hear Miss Brevard sing.

At last the service was over; the people had flocked out; the sexton would be around in half an hour to lock up everything for the night.

Felicie remained. When everyone had left the church she stole to the organ and began playing. Then she began to sing a simple little hymn that Miss Shepard had told her was a favorite of Russell Thornton's mother.

"I never heard anybody but her sing it," she often said, as she heard Felicie singing it.

She thought she was alone in the great, dark church, while the twilight shadows slowly crept in the stained-glass windows; but there was someone else there. A gentleman sat in a corner of the church, who turned around so as to face the choir.

It was over in a few minutes. Felicie rose and made her way down the rickety steps that led from the choir gallery. When she got to the church door the gentleman came forward out of the dusk, and caught her two hands in his.

"Felicie," was all he said.

"I thought you were not coming back for three years; and now—I am so startled."

"Are you sorry, Felicie?"

"No," she said, boldly.

They walked together toward Felicie's home in the soft Spring eventide.

"How gloriously you sing, Felicie!" said Thornton. "But do you know that little hymn you sang last was my mother's hymn?"

"I know it," said Felicie. "Miss Shepard told me so, and taught it to me; and I have often thought that I would learn to sing—much better than I do now—and sing it to you."

They lingered on the way home, so that Miss Shepard was quite miserable when they came in.

"I knew something pleasant was going to happen," Felicie said, "for I felt a bird singing in my heart all day."

In a week people were saying:

"Do you know that Russell Thornton is going to marry that pretty girl, with the French name, that sings in St. Peter's church?"

The report was true.

"Do brides ever select their wedding presents?" asked Felicie, just before they were married.

"I don't know," said Russell, laughing; "but you may."

"Then give me that head of Apollo. Oh, what a lucky thing it was that I unconsciously stole it!"

HOW HE TOLD THE TIME.

A good story, told at the expense of a well-known ex-Judge, is going the rounds of the lawyers' offices, and it is heartily appreciated by those who best know the irascible but good hearted disposition of the old gentleman. It was an admiralty case, where he is most at home. The deposition of a sailor, who was soon to die, had to be taken at his bedside in Brooklyn, one day last week. "How long," the ex-Judge snapped out as the first question on cross-examination, "do you think it was after the vessel left the wharf before the collision occurred?"

The sailor was himself something of a character, and not so near death but that he appreciated the vital importance of "getting back on" a cross-examining lawyer.

"Waal,' he drawled out, "'bout ten minutes I s'd judge."

"Ten minutes! Ten minutes!" exclaimed the lawyer, jumping up. "Man, how long do you think ten minutes to be?"

"Jest about ten minutes," was the unruffled reply.

"How do you generally measure ten minutes?" persisted the lawyer.

The old sailor turned slowly in bed and eyed his questioner. Then he turned back again and said indifferently: "Waal, sometimes wid a watch and sometimes wid a claack."

This made the lawyer a little mad. He jerked his watch from his pocket and said in a querulous, high-pitched voice: "Oh, you do, do you? Well, I'll tell you when to begin, and you tell me when ten minutes are up."

The sailor slyly winked at the lawyer on the other side, and he took in the situation in an instant and made no objection. The ex-Judge stood with his back to a mantel on which a little clock was quietly indicating the time to the sailor, who lay facing it.

"Aye, aye," the sailor said, and remained silent.

After three minutes had passed the ex-Judge became impatient and exclaimed, "See here, are you going to keep us here all day?" But the sailor made no answer. As five and six and seven minutes went by the lawyer became almost wild in his assumed anger at the man for keeping them so long beyond the time. But not until the hand of the clock was on the exact notch of ten minutes did the sailor speak. Then he said carelessly: "Guess the time mus' be 'bout up."

The Judge put up his watch and sank back in his chair. "Well," he said, "of all men, dying or alive, that I ever saw, you can measure time the best."

It is said that the ex-Judge does not even yet know what made the other lawyers double themselves over with laughter as they did at that last remark of his.—N. Y. Tribune.

EQUITY.

Two Hares who were looking for a change of abode happened to meet at the entrance of a den which had been deserted by a Woodchuck.

"I saw it first!" exclaimed one.

"No, you didn't. I had my left eye on this place when I saw you with the other."

"Oh! come now—that's too thin. As I am the elder I shall take possession."

"Don't be too sure. As I am the stronger I shall turn you out."

"Come to reflect," said the older Hare after carefully scratching his ear, "there is no need of a quarrel. Right is right the world over. As we are both sensible Hares I think we can come to a perfect understanding."

"No doubt we could," replied the other, "but as there comes the Fox we will ask him to decide between us."

"What's all this row about?" inquired the Fox as he came up.

"We have a dispute as to which of us is entitled to this vacant burrow."

"Ah! ha! A case of law! You did well to call me in," grinned the Fox. "Let me first inspect the disputed claim."

He disappeared down the hole, and was absent so long that the impatient Hares finally called out:

"Hello! you!"

"Hello yourself!" was the impudent reply.

"Are you down there?"

"You bet I am!"

"Have you decided the case?"

"Long ago. My decision is that when two Hares are foolish enough to quarrel over the possession of a burrow large enough for a whole family, the Fox is entitled to take possession!"

MORAL.

Two neighbors who can't settle a question of equity should call in a lawyer.—Detroit Free Press.

The marble quarries of Vermont have became enormous excavations, several being 350 feet deep, and the openings are only slightly protected, if at all, with rude stairways down the sides of the shafts, affording the only means of descent; yet there is hardly ever an accident, and it is several years since a fatal fall has taken place.

"Well, Patrick, how do you feel to-day?" asked the doctor. "Och, doctor, dear, I enjoy very poor health entirely. The rheumatics are very distressin', indade; whin I go to slape I lay awake all night, and my toes is swelled as big as goose hen's eggs, so whin I stand up I fall down immediately."

The French Broad, a river in the mountains of Western North Carolina, is believed to be the highest navigable stream on the globe. It is 2000 feet above the level of the sea, and is navigated by a steamer which carries freight and passengers between Hendersonville and Brevard.

When a person makes it hot for you, there is consolation in the fact that a coolness is apt to follow.

Contentment.

Year after year I till my barren field,
And each day's toil brings me but scanty store
For my sweet wife and babes. Close at my door
Hunger has lain, like a grim wolf, concealed.
My neighbor's acres fruitful harvests yield,
O thirty, sixty, yea, an hundred fold;
His barns are filled with grain, his purse with gold,
And all men are his friends.
Yet I have kneeled—
Seeing how ill-content my neighbor is
With all his garnered wealth, his name, his pride—
And thanked God that my lot was not like his,
Though I have but one bare hill's rocky side;
For while earth's harvests crown his fertile sod,
In my poor field I find not gain, but God.

A HINT TO WIVES.

In a street car I overheard a conversation between a husband and wife, which I wish to repeat:

"John, I wish to speak to you about something which I am afraid you won't like. Won't you be so kind as to let me have six dollars and a half? I don't like to ask it, and I don't see how I can put it off any longer."

"Six dollars and a half! Why, it's only the other day that I gave you five dollars. What nonsense are you after this time? Do you suppose I pick up money in the street? Well, I don't; I work for every dollar and every penny."

"No, John, dear, I know you have to work for money, and I have hardly slept for a week thinking about asking you, but I don't see how I can get along another day without a bonnet. Since mine was wet that day, I have seen all the time that I must have a new one. And then, you mustn't be offended with me, but it was four months ago that you gave me the five dollars, and you know what I spent that for, and I am sure you approved of it."

"Oh, of course it is all right and very necessary, and you couldn't possibly live a minute without it. That's always the way with you women, and then what in the world do you want to give six dollars and a half for one of those little, contemptible bonnets for? They are not worth six cents and a half."

"I am very sorry I can't get one cheaper, but this is the very cheapest one I could find. Why, John, that hat which I wore just before we were married cost twenty-five dollars!"

"I shall give you the money of course. If it were six millions, you must have it or you would go into a fit and die. The times are tight, I can tell you, and you will have to get along as cheaply as you can."

I would have given something for the privilege of conversing with that young wife. I should have said:

"Dear madam, you are in great danger of losing your husband's esteem and affection. No man can long respect a woman, be she his wife or otherwise, who begs and crawls at his feet. Nothing can compensate you for the loss of his respect and love. Any woman who is willing to beg for money to buy a bonnet must be mean-spirited indeed. If she is starving to death, perhaps begging might be excusable, but to beg for an article of ornamental dress is despicable. But if you have made up your mind to beg for a bonnet, don't imperil the respect and love of your husband in addition to the humiliation of begging. If you must beg, beg of some one whose respect is not so vital to your happiness.

"Can't you earn money in some way? Better go to some good neighbor and do any kind of work you are able to do; better scrub, better resort to anything except theft, rather than crawl at the feet of the one man whose esteem is dearer to you than any other earthly possession. And if a wife is not able to work, or has children, and therefore no time for other tasks, then she should say to her husband, "I will never beg. If you see the wisdom of setting aside a certain amount for my wardrobe, very well; if not, then you must observe for yourself, and thus find out what is necessary in my personal expenses."

The respect and tenderness which this course would secure, would be worth to you a thousand-fold more than the most elaborate dress in the world."—Golden Rule.

WHAT A GENTLEMAN IS.

"The esssential characteristics of a gentleman," says our American essayist, Mr. Mathews, "are not an outward varnish or veneer, but inward qualities, developed in the heart."

The drover was a gentleman at heart, and in speech also, of whom the following anecdote is told. He was driving cattle to market when the snow was deep, save on the highway. The drove compelled a lady to turn out of the road and tread in the deep snow.

"Madam," said the drover, taking off his hat, "if the cattle knew as well as I what they should do, you would not walk in the snow."

Charles Lamb tells a story of Joseph Price, a London merchant, who reverenced womanhood in every form in which it came before him.

"I have seen him," writes the genial essayist, "stand bareheaded (smile, if you please,) to a servant girl while she has been inquiring of him the way to some street, in such a posture of unforced civility as neither to embarrass her in the acceptance, nor himself in the offer of it."

"I have seen him," he continues, "tenderly escort a market-woman whom he had encountered in a shower, exalting his umbrella over her poor basket of fruit that it might receive no damage, with as much carefulness as if she had been a countess."

These anecdotes show what genuine politeness is. It is a kindly spirit that expreses itself kindly to all. Of one who posseses it the remark is never made, "He can be a gentleman when he pleases." As Mr. Mathews says—and we wish the boys to memorize the saying—"He who can be a gentleman when he pleases, never pleases to be anything else."

A sick boy: "O, doctor, I'm so glad you've come. I don't know what's the matter with Charley, at all. He complains of the febrile rise in his peritoneum, and he says his hypochondrion is all twisted out of shape. Oh, he's an awful sick boy, doctor." "I should say so. Must have been reading the presidential bulletins." The doctor leaves a seidlitz powder and departs.

If I am between two moral evils, I will not have either. "There is small choice in rotten apples." I am to reject both. A man is not to lie, to save from the necessity to steal; nor to break the Sabbath, lest he should not be able to pay his debts. Never choose to do wrong.—John Hall.

True liberty consists only in the power of doing what we ought to will, and in not being constrained to do what we ought not to will"—Jonathan Edwards.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1881.

THE evidence in the star route cases is to be presented to the Washington grand jury next week. Startling disclosures are promised.

GUITEAU will be brought before the grand jury at Washington next Monday. There seems to be little doubt that he can be tried at Washington, though his victim died in New Jersey, but as a precautionary measure it is understood that he will be indicted in New Jersey.

QUEEN VICTORIA has shown her woman's heart and warm sympathy by sending a wreath of flowers for President Garfield's coffin, by ordering her court to go into formal mourning, and by her messages of condolence and request for a picture of Gen. Garfield. England and America are drawn together as never before, by this affliction.

THE Democrats will meet at Worcester next Wednesday to set up a State ticket to be knocked over again at the polls next month. Not much is likely to be heard of Butler this year, and nobody seems to know who will be nominated. At the rate things are going, there will not be interest enough in politics this Fall to relieve the campaign from actual dullness.

LESS than 200 Prohibitionists met at Boston Wednesday, and renominated last year's ticket, headed by Charles Almy of New Bedford. A proposition was made to nominate Gov. Long, but it was speedily shown that this would not suit the brethren at all, only four being in favor of the suggestion. The resolutions are of the usual prohibitory vein, closing with one expressing sorrow over President Garfield's death.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has issued a proclamation convening the Senate in extra session on Monday, Oct. 10, mainly for the purpose, no doubt, of giving an opportunity for the choice of a President pro tem., so that there would be no interregnum in case of President Arthur's death. The Democrats will have a clear majority at the opening of the session, and may attempt to put one of their number into the chair, though probably an effort will be made for a compromise between the two sides of the chamber in order to avoid another dead lock or an unseemly wrangle at this time.

MR. ARTHUR comes to the Presidency at a fortunate, as well as a trying, time for him. The people's hearts have been softened by the recent national bereavement, and they are ready to give President Arthur their cordial support in all good works. But they will also be quick to obsere and to disapprove any failure on his part to come up to the full measure of the exalted office he has been called to fill, or any lowering of the high standard he has set for himself. President Arthur may, if he will, make his administration a popular and a successful one, and we believe this will be his aim. But unless he breaks loose from some of his past affiliations, he will fall far short of his mark.

RUMORS of coming cabinet changes at Washington are now becoming numerous. The members of the cabinet have all tendered their resignations, according to custom, and it is reported that Attorney General MacVeagh and Postmaster General James have assured the President that they intend to go, anyway. President Arthur is clearly entitled to choose his own cabinet, but it will be a mistake if he does not at least make a strong effort to retain Mr. James, who has shown himself the ablest Postmaster General the country has had in many years, and who has instituted so many reforms that the country will not be willing to lose him. Whatever changes are made in the cabinet, will doubtless be made very soon after the Senate meets and organizes.

EX-SENATOR CONKLING has always manifested the profoundest contempt for bolters. But he now appears in the role of a bolter himself—a bolter, too, without a shadow of basis for his action. Last week, when the whole country was bowed in grief around the bier of the dead President, Conkling was trying to get elected at Utica as a delegate to the State Convention. But his own neighbors went against him, and he was defeated, fairly and squarely. He thereupon set up another caucus with his followers, and was elected by them. In another district Conkling's friends numbered only 8 out of 48 delegates, and these eight bolted and chose delegates of their own. These are fair samples of Conkling's way of doing business. What his purpose can be, nobody knows. But that he stands ready to sacrifice everything, even to decency and his own self-respect, to accomplish his ends, seems painfully evident.

THE last sad rites have been performed for the dead President, and his remains were deposited in the receiving tomb of the Lake View cemetery at Cleveland Monday, to await the preparation of the lot which has been selected as his last resting place. Before the President's body was removed from the capitol last week Friday, the building was closed for a season, while Mrs. Garfield took her last view of the remains, and for twenty minutes was alone with her dead husband. Then after brief services the body was conveyed to the funeral train and taken to Cleveland, where the casket was placed in the catafalque erected for that purpose, and was viewed by thousands of people. The procession conveying the remains to the cemetery was several miles in length, and contained over 40,000 people. The day was universally observed as a day of mourning in every city and town in the Union, with tolling of bells, firing of cannon, and in many places imposing processions; while in Canada and in England the expressions of sorrow were almost as general as in this country. Never before was a man so universally mourned. May the lessons of his life, of his character, and of his death, not be lost to us who still live.

LOCAL NOTICES.

A nice lot of leather just received at Hitchcock's.

A nice line of shawls can now be found at White, Hellyar & Co's.

The highest cash price will be paid for partridge and woodcock at Hatch's fish market.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The leaves are falling.

Pumpkin pies—yum, yum!

Moonlight nights are at hand again.

Poor 1881 is to-day reduced to his last quarter.

Five JOURNALS, five Sundays and five wash days this month.

The schools in this village will begin their Fall term next Wednesday.

September has done a rare thing this year in passing us by without a single frost.

Two hundred and six tickets were sold at Palmer for Wednesday's excursion to Boston.

Rev. Frank Palmer, of Norwich, Ct., will preach at the Congregational church to-morrow.

E. Goodes has sold his house near the State Primary School to George E. Davis, for about $700.

S. Edgerton and wife started on Tuesday for a carriage drive to Buckland, to be gone a week.

Mr. Bradway has heard nothing yet from his horse and buggy, which were stolen from the park last week.

Rev. A. C. Bronson, of Lebanon, Ct., will preach at the Baptist church to-morrow, and also at the Baptist church in Three Rivers.

B. B. Adams has sold his house to Mr. Capen, and will soon remove to Boston, where he has accepted a position as accountant in a large furnishing store.

C. E. Blasdale having sold his farm, will sell at auction Oct. 11th, at 10 a. m., all his stock, farming tools, household furniture, and other personal property.

The executive committee of the Improvement Association will hold their monthly meeting at the district court room next Monday evening, at 7 o'clock.

No freight trains were run on the Boston & Albany road during the middle of the day, Monday, in order that the employes might have an opportunity to observe the day.

As Mrs. H. W. Munger was leaving home for church last Sunday morning, she turned her foot in such a manner as to break one bone of her right leg, a little above the ankle.

Mrs. Georgie S. Gilchrist, of Taftville, Vt., will have charge of the primary school in this village, which Miss Newell, who resigned in the summer, has taught successfully for several years past.

Twelve carloads of excursionists from stations on the Connecticut River Railroad passed through here for Boston yesterday. There is to be another cheap excursion to the Hub from Springfield to-day.

The Palmer National Bank directors have declared a semi-annual dividend of 3 per cent, payable to-day. They also voted to carry $1500 to surplus account, and apply $250 to the reduction of their furniture account.

Conductor Sanders has been toning up his attenuated frame and drooping appetite by a rest this week, making a trip to New York and Providence during the time. His vacation will continue through another week.

Owing to the unavoidable absence of one of their number on Monday, the selectmen and school committee adjourned their meeting until this afternoon, when they will select a successor to Rev. B. M. Fullerton on the school committee.

A. M. Guilford of Monson has left with us a strawberry which was picked in his garden on Tuesday. He has a bed of them in full blossom, and if the weather holds favorable a couple of weeks longer he will have several quarts of ripe berries.

The supreme court in session at Springfield this week has granted divorces to Peter Verran of this town from Emma Verran, and to Agnes F. Felton from David N. Felton, for adultery. The application of William A. Butler of Monson, for a divorce from Sarah E. Butler, for adultery, was dismissed.

The beginning of Autumn has been marked by a wave of as intense heat as anything we have had the past Summer. The first four days of the present week were very warm, but there was a change to cooler air Thursday, and October will doubtless soon give us a keen foretaste of the yet colder air to come.

In our report of the agricultural exhibition in the hall last week we inadvertently credited to E. S. Gibbons the case of shoes standing in the lower hall, and which were from the store of W. R. Milligan. Mr. Gibbons's exhibit of walking gear appeared in the upper hall, in the shape of a pyramidal pile of fine shoes.

We are assured that that pest of traveling exhibitions under canvas, the lemonade peddler, is not allowed on the seats during the performances in Van Amburgh & Co's. show, which exhibits here next week Saturday; also that all games of chance of every description are prohibited—features worthy of all commendation, and which will be appreciated by the patrons of the exhibition.

The committee appointed to solicit contributions for the Michigan sufferers have met with a generous response from our people, and have packed and shipped 29 barrels and 4 boxes of clothing, cooking utensils, etc., and also forwarded $130.25 in cash; while in addition to this a few citizens have also packed and forwarded a few barrels of goods independently of the committee.

There has been a sharp advance in the price of flour lately, and the tendency is still upward. Good St. Louis flour, which sold here a few weeks ago at $7.50 per barrel, now commands $8.50, and this is but 25 cents above the present wholesale price. Haxall flour sells for $9.50. Butter is scarce at 33 cents, and eggs are scarcer still, bringing about 30 cents a dozen when they can be found.

The Odd Fellows are to have their second annual ball at Wales Hall next Wednesday evening, with music by Richardson's orchestra of Worcester, A. A. Bicknell prompter, while supper for the hungry ones will be furnished at the Nassowanno House. The Odd Fellows have a hearty way of doing things which, with the good music and supper, will be sure to make a pleasant and successful evening for all who attend.

The Palmer boys had a game of base ball with the Monson nine on the park Monday afternoon, the latter coming off victorious by a score of 12 to 8, in seven innings. Last Saturday the Rockets of Jenksville came to Palmer and were beaten by the home club, 16 to 9. The Rockets went off on a tangent after the game, and got the worse for liquor, if reports are true. Their conduct when starting for home was certainly disgraceful enough to warrant the belief that they were not sober.

Mutilated silver coins are usually received at their face value hereabouts, but it may interest people to know that the government will only take them at a heavy discount. Coins with holes in them, for instance, are valued by the government as follows: Dollars, 65 cents; half dollars, 35 cents; quarters, 15 cents; dimes, 5 cents. If all business men would unite in refusing defaced coin except at these figures, the reprehensible practice of punching holes in them, and otherwise mutilating them, would soon go out of fashion.

The death of Gardner Tufts of Boston on Tuesday gave rise to the impression at Boston that it was Col. Gardiner Tufts, of the Monson State Primary School, who was dead. The Colonel is still at work, however, and is the healthiest and liveliest specimen of a dead man we have ever seen. In fact, he still lives—and "long may he wave." It was also rumored the past week that Rev. R. R. Riddell of Wakefield, a former pastor of the Baptist church in this place, had been drowned in the Maine woods, a stoven canoe having been found near where he had been camping. But in this case, also, the report seems to have happily been without foundation, as Rev. Dr. Potter of Springfield received a card from him Tuesday, stating that he had broken camp and left the woods.

Palmer is to have a new union depot—that is settled. The directors of the Boston & Albany Railroad stopped off here the other day on their way to Boston and looked over the grounds, and at their subsequent meeting in Boston voted to instruct President Bliss to go ahead at once with preparations for building. The plans are not yet definitely settled upon, but the building will be triangular in shape, probably something like the depot at Pittsfield, and may be built of Monson granite, though this is not yet decided. The foundations will, it is thought, be put in this Fall. A union depot here has been one of the long-felt wants which travelers and people in this section will rejoice to see on the way toward realization, and while they are about it the roads should, and doubtless will, put up a good one.

The painters are putting on the finishing touches to the remodeled and enlarged school house in this village, and it is expected to be in readiness for the schools to resume their sessions next week. The addition gives two new rooms, making a total of six school rooms in the building, three on each floor, besides closets for clothing. The building is very comfortably arranged, but has one bad feature—insufficient means of egress. The original plans, we understand, contemplated an entrance on Park street, but this has for some reason been omitted, and there are but two outside doors and one not-very-wide hall, through which the scholars must pass to reach the outer air. With from 250 to 300 scholars in the building, it is to be feared that these means of egress would prove sadly insufficient in case of a sudden panic among the children from any cause.

The banks resumed business in their renovated banking room on Tuesday. The removal of the old vault makes a much better shaped, as well as a larger and lighter room, while the new vault is much more commodious and vastly stronger than the old one. In the front part of the room a space is partitioned off for the use of the president, and back of this are the counters for the national bank, while at the rear are the counters for the savings bank, with a large opening at a turn in the counter for the transaction of business with its customers. The counters are from T. M. Walker & Co. of Springfield, and are handsome specimens of fine workmanship. The walls are newly tinted, a handsome mantel and fireplace has been put in behind the counters, and all in all the banks have as nice and comfortable a banking room as is often found outside the large cities.

Rev. B. M. Fullerton was installed at Waltham last week Thursday evening, and we clip the following account of the proceedings from the Boston Journal of the 23d ult.:—"The Trinitarian Congregational church of Waltham, a large and strong society, has been without a pastor for the past three years, and last evening the auditorium of the church edifice, located on Main street, was filled with members of the society and a host of friends to witness the installation of Rev. Bradford M. Fullerton of Palmer, at which place he has been pastor of a church thirteen years. During the past several months he has preached with great acceptance before the society of which he is now the duly installed pastor. He is a graduate of Amherst College and the Andover Theological Seminary, and was once connected with the New York press. The pulpit and surroundings were adorned with flowers, and at the council, which assembled in the afternoon, there were ministers present from Boston, Worcester, Palmer, Newton and other places, and Rev. Dr. Withrow of Boston presided. At the installation the exercises opened with a voluntary and anthem, the formal result of the council was announced, invocation and reading of the Scripture followed, and after the singing of "Consider the Lilies," the installation sermon was delivered by Rev. Dr. Withrow, in the absence of Rev. Dr. Duryea, whose presence was expected. The charge to the pastor was made by Rev. Geo. W. Phillips of Worcester, the right hand of fellowship extended by Rev. J. Wolcott Calkins of Newton, the address to the people was made by Rev. E. E. Strong of Boston, the former pastor of the church, and the benediction was made by the new pastor."

All the churches were draped last Sunday, and at each of them the calamity which has befallen the nation, in the death of the President, was fittingly alluded to. At St. Paul's church, which was very tastefully draped, Rev. J. S. Gledhill gave a brief sketch of Gen. Garfield's life, and drew from it some excellent lessons for the living. At St. Thomas' Catholic church vesper services were held in the evening, and Rev. T. J. Sullivan preached upon the life and character of the dead President. The observance of Monday, the day of President Garfield's funeral, was very general, though quiet, in Palmer. All the stores were closed, and some of the liquor saloons, even, shut their doors, while others pulled down their curtains, but left their doors unfastened. Many houses and stores were draped, the windows of Mrs. Whitman's and Mrs. Weeden's stores being arranged with especially good taste. Union services were held at St. Paul's church in the forenoon, conducted by Rev. J. S. Gledhill, who by special request repeated his admirable discourse of Sunday. Memorial services were also held at the Catholic church. At the State Primary School the children were assembled in the afternoon, and listened to addresses by Rev. J. S. Gledhill, Judge Robinson and Superintendent Tufts, the services being interspersed with appropriate music and declamations by the children. The services of the day here were not as elaborate as they would have been but for the unfortunate dearth of clergymen, but they were sufficient to show that the hearts of the people were deeply touched, and that they sincerely mourn the death of James A. Garfield, not only as the loss of an honored chief magistrate, but also as that of one whose sufferings have endeared him to all as a beloved friend.

The old original Van Amburgh & Co's. Great Golden Menagerie has been consolidated with Hyatt Frost's Roman Coliseum, and the combined shows rejuvenated, reorganized, and entirely new, with magnificent tableau cars, chariots, cages, &c., will exhibit in Palmer next week Saturday. This institution, said to be the most extensive combined circus and menagerie now traveling in this country, gives two performances daily, at 2 and 8 p. m. The doors will open one hour before the performance commences. As a menagerie it contains more and rarer animals than any like institution. Large and attractive as it has always been, the menagerie has been largely increased in the number of rare wild animals, many of which will be on exhibition for the first time in this country. There will be found the only living nondescript from the river Nile, believed to be the only specimen ever captured alive; the monster living behemoth of Holy Writ; the largest elephant now living, and other animals, the whole comprising a collection of curiosities unequalled by any like institution in Europe or America. In Frost's Roman Circus department will be introduced the most extensive troupe of equestrians, gymnasts, acrobats and athletes that has ever entered the ring of a circus at one time. Prominent among these is the world-renowned bare-back trick equestrian, Sig. Sebastian, without exception the peer of all bare-back riders in the world. Another, and of almost equal fame, will be found in the daring and intrepid William Showles; and third, but not last nor less attractive than either of the other two, is the accomplished M'lle Viola, acknowledged by the profession to be not only the handsomest lady in the arena, but the equal, as an artiste, of the most celebrated in her specialty equestrian acts. Remember the show will exhibit at Palmer Saturday, Oct. 8th.

A party of about 20 ladies and gentlemen from this place went to New London Wednesday, by invitation of the Norwich and New York Transportation Co., to enjoy a trip on their elegant new iron steamer, the "City of Worcester," on the occasion of her trial trip. A special train left Palmer at 6.45 a. m. with the excursionists, additions being made to their number at nearly every station. A special train was also run from Boston, and when the boat left the wharf at New London there were some 2000 people on board, all of whom were delighted with the unexpected beauty and elegance of the new boat and her furnishings. The City of Worcester is the largest and fastest of the Sound steamers, with a large freight capacity, while in her accommodations for passengers no money has been spared to make them as complete as possible. The ladies' cabin is finished in mahogany, and the stairs are of the same wood, which also appears in the furnishings and ornamentations of the large saloon on the state-room deck. The saloons and staterooms are carpeted with fine Wilton, the berths are all furnished with woven wire and hair mattresses, and each stateroom is provided with an electric bell. The boat is lighted throughout with Edison's electric lamps, provision also being made for the use of gas or oil if desirable. The arrangements throughout are complete and perfect, the boat and furnishing costing $400,000, and the elegance of her equipment will make her a favorite with the public at once. An elaborate spread was furnished on the boat, at which the mayor of Worcester, after which city the boat was named, presented the company with a full set of colors, in behalf of the business men of that city. After a pleasant sail of nearly four hours on the Sound the boat returned to New London, and the excursionists took the cars for home. The boat took her place on the New York line the same night, in place of the City of New York, and every stateroom was engaged before noon.

LUDLOW.

D. W. Sikes has killed seven eagles this summer, bringing down the last one on Friday of last week.

MONSON.

G. H. Newton, who is now in Chicago with his whaling party, has changed the route of his exhibition, having accepted an invitation from the Dodge Co. Agricultural Society to exhibit his whale at their fair, in consideration of half the gate receipts, which last year were $8000. He accordingly goes from Chicago to Juneau, Wis., and then to Davenport, Ia., Des Moines, Council Bluffs, St. Joe, Atchinson, Topeka, and Kansas City, on the way to New Orleans.

BRIMFIELD.

The telegraph poles are now being put up, and have already reached town.

The telephone is now in working order, and the citizens of the town appreciate its benefits.

"Our Boys'" base ball club of Brimfield went over to Wales last Saturday, and defeated the Wales club, 18 to 6.

Union memorial services were held in the town hall Monday, conducted by Rev. Mr. Atkins and Rev. Mr. Peirce.

BELCHERTOWN.

The 26th annual cattle show and fair of the Belchertown Farmers and Mechanics' Club will be held next week Friday, and is expected to be the occasion, as usual, of a general gathering of all the people in this section. The cavalcade and exhibition of cattle will come off at 9.30 a. m., followed by the exhibition of working horses and stallions. In the afternoon the carriage horses will be brought out, and there will be two trots, for purses of $9 and $25. There will also be a bicycle race at 3 p. m. The fair will be held at the town hall, and music for the day will be furnished by the Belchertown Cornet Band. In the evening there will be a ball at the Belcher House.

ENFIELD.

The total valuation of the town this year is $690,670, the real estate amounting to $367,150, and the personal to $323,520. The taxes amount to $7331, the rate of taxation being $9.75. The leading taxpayers are as follows: Davenport Allen $56, Chas. Abbott $50, I. D. Haskell $57, J. J. Howe $60, W. B. Kimball $189, J. W. & W. F. Martindale $51, Minot company $296, L. D. Potter $50, G. I. Richards $50, Charles Richards $52, estate of Sidney Richards $52, estate of Jane Smith $162, estate of Mrs. David Smith $223, Edward Smith $1210, E. P. Smith $156, Mrs. E. P. Smith $135, H. M. Smith $51, L. F. Shearer $103, Swift River company $714, William Stetson of Leverett $57, L. & J. Thurston $113, Benjamin Ward $70, J. E. Woods $60, R. D. Woods $53.

WARREN.

Over one hundred attended the fair at Boston Wednesday.

The milkmen had their annual meeting Wednesday, to decide upon the price of milk at the car for the Winter.

The ministers in both churches preached on the President's death last Sunday. The churches, public buildings, stores, and most of the private dwellings were draped. On Monday afternoon there was a memorial service in the town hall. The hall was very heavily draped, and under Garfield's picture was a bank of ferns, with the word "Rest." The ministers and others delivered short speeches, each giving testimony to their love and respect for our honored President. In fact, the one universal feeling is that we have not only lost a President, but a brother. The band played a dirge at the opening of the services.

BONDVILLE.

The question here is, how long is the new mill to be? Some say just as long as the law allows.

The village people are beginning to feel the effects of the drouth. Many wells are dry, and others nearly so.

Drunkenness prevails to a considerable extent of late. It is getting to be an every day occurrence to see a drunken man asleep by the roadside, or staggering along the walks.

An accident occurred at the quarry last Saturday. They were drilling out an old charge, when it ignited, and Maurice Cavin was badly injured in the face, and another had his hand badly mangled. Both are now doing well, under the care of Dr. Holbrook.

One of our Belchertown neighbors recently made a trip to one of the adjoining towns and spent the night. When he retired, like many others he deposited his wallet under his pillow, and did not think of it again until on his way home next day. He received it by express with the contents, about $300, a few days after.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Lawyer L. L. Wood contemplates removing to Boston soon.

This has been observed as a week of jubilee or fast, at St. Matthew's church.

Dr. H. A. Smith sold one of his trained dogs a few days ago to Pittsfield parties for $50.

The entertainments in the social line this Winter, it is understood, are to be whist parties.

The Ludlow water is to the front once more. A fine specimen of an eel came through the pipe one day last week.

Owen Lynch, an Irish farmer living on the road to Springfield for many years, fell in his barn Monday evening, and lived but an hour after being found.

All business was suspended at the Orchard last Monday, and all the public and many private buildings were draped. At the Evangelical church a memorial service was held last Sunday.

Columbia Quartette is to give a promenade concert and ball in Wight's Hall next Wednesday evening. As they know how a dance should be run, and intend to sing some of their fine selections previous to the grand march, a large and select company will attend.

THORNDIKE.

A large turbine wheel for the new factory has just arrived.

The night work on the raceway of the lower factory still continues.

The famous old landmark on Pleasant street has been at last removed.

The extreme hot weather has driven several of our people to the salt water.

For the last six weeks the Ware river has been lower than for many years.

Edward Wilson has had a remarkable yield of potatoes, averaging ten hills to the bushel.

The stone in the large new canal at Bondville is supplied from Dea. R. S. Hastings' quarry.

Rip Van Winkle passed through this village last Monday, inquiring the cause of so much mourning and tolling. He was maliciously (?) informed that George the Third had lost the colonies.

Monday was observed here in a very orderly manner. At 10 o'clock a service was held in the Catholic church. From 1 to 1.30 p. m. the church and factory bells tolled. At 2 p. m. there were memorial services at the Congregational church, which were largely attended. Addresses were made by Revs. C. H. Ricketts, W. S. Jagger of the Methodist church, and Deacon Foster. The services closed with a quartette, entitled: "In Tears a Nation Mourns thy Loss."

WALES.

F. E. Sibley has returned from his trip to the seashore, and tells some good fish stories.

Several people went to Boston Wednesday on the excursion train, and all report a pleasant time.

Mrs. Wyman and Jennie Vickery returned Wednesday from a two-months' visit to Nova Scotia, whither they have been for their health.

The drouth is beginning to be felt generally in the drying up of a large number of wells in town, and unless we get rain soon more are sure to be in the same condition.

The telegraph pole business is not quite as lively as it was a few days ago, but Samson Hulett, has a contract to deliver a few hundred, and they will soon begin to move.

Frank Green, a card boy in the Dell Mill, while playing with the tackle rope hanging from the ridge, fell last Tuesday three stories, striking on his feet and escaping with a slight sprain in one foot.

Monday was quite generally observed in town, the mills being all stopped, and the Baptist and Methodist congregations uniting in memorial services at the Baptist church in the afternoon. The choir opened with "Nearer, my God, to Thee," followed by reading of scriptures and prayer by Rev. C. A. Walters of the Methodist church. The choir then sang "Thou art gone to the grave," after which the pastor, Rev. A. N. Woodruff, preached a sermon very fitting for the occasion, following which Mrs. Burleigh, the organist, played Gen. Garfield's funeral march, rendering it in a very effective manner. Taking it altogether, it was a very fitting and impressive service. The bells were tolled from 1 to 2 o'clock, and at 4 p. m. The church was draped in a neat and tasty style, Gen. Garfield's picture hanging in front, enshrouded by flags, trimmed in mourning. Several other buildings were also draped. Dea. Eugene Needham and Dea. John Shaw had bunting and flags around their doors, the post office had a picture of Garfield draped, and drapery over the door, and the store of Frank A. Royce was heavily and tastefully draped the entire length of the building.

WARE AND VICINITY.

On Monday the stores were closed throughout the day. At one o'clock a procession was formed, with Charles D. Gilbert as chief marshal and F. P. Clark and Deputy Sheriff Robinson as aids, consisting of the Ware police force; Ware Cornet Band, 16 pieces; the Grand Army, 36 men; barouches containing the speakers of the day; Eden Lodge, F. and A. M., 31 men; Ware Branch Irish Land League, 40 men; the Ancient Order of Hibernians, 24 men; Societe St. Jean Baptiste, 48 men; Oregon Engine Company; and the Otis and Gilbert hose companies; while thousands of spectators were upon the streets and followed the procession to the cemetery, where a stand tastefully draped in black and white for the speakers was built just north of the soldiers' monument. The base of the monument was covered with black, and the shaft draped with flags and bunting, having on the north side a large oil painting of Gen. Garfield, surmounted by one of Washington. The whole effect was artistic, and the general comment was "Well done." The exercises consisted of an address by Hon. Chas. A. Stevens; prayer by Rev. A. J. Hall; address by Hon. Geo. R. Davis, M. C., of Chicago; speeches by Justice F. D. Richards, Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., Rev. J. Sheehan, Rev. A. J. Hall, Rev. W. G. Tuttle, Hon. Lewis N. Gilbert, Prof. Merrill, Dea. Otis Lane; reminiscences of Garfield's college days by W. S. Hyde, Esq., who was a college mate of his; speeches by E. H. Baker and H. C. Davis, Esq.; reading of resolutions presented by the Land League; the whole interspersed with appropriate music by the band, closing with benediction by Rev. W. G. Tuttle. The addresses, which were eulogistic of different phases of the life and character of the martyred President, were all well received, the exercises closing at 3.30, when the procession wended its way through Pleasant, High and Park streets, to Main, where it disbanded.

The managers of the Tolland Co. East Agricultural Society, whose annual fair is to be held at Stafford Springs, Ct., next Wednesday and Thursday, are planning to make this year's exhibition the best they have ever held. First among the attractions will be the presence of Gov. Bigelow who has promised to attend. A large display of cattle is expected, including David Carpenter's trained steers from Charlton. There will be the usual display of fruit, vegetables, etc., in the large exhibition building, and a fine exhibit of farming tools by the Ames Plow Co., Higganum Mfg. Co., and others; also a display of carriages by the Boston Buckboard Co. of New Haven, and other makers. There will be bicycle, foot and horse races, and the society feel safe in promising that the trotting will not be excelled at any agricultural fair in the State. The track is in excellent condition, and many improvements have been made in the grounds the past year. No gambling or liquor selling is allowed. The N. L. N. R. R. will sell tickets both days of the fair at half rates.

Train robbery is growing rapidly in favor among the brigands of the Southwest, as affording a quick and easy way of replenishing their pockets. The two affairs of this kind recently reported were followed by another on the Iron Mountain Railroad last week Thursday night. Three young men boarded the night train at Hope, Ark., and when in a favorable locality drew their revolvers and made the conductor stop the train. They then ordered the passengers to throw up their hands, and went through them, getting $700. They then visited the express car, opened the messenger's safe and took $30,000 in currency. Before leaving the train they threw away a package containing $15,000 under the impression that it was valueless.

There is to be a grand veterans' field day on Hampden Park, Springfield, next Tuesday, under the auspices of the Wilcox Post, G. A. R. It is designed to bring together all the Grand Army Posts and military organizations of Western Massachusetts, and after a banquet in a large tent the battle of Bennington is to be reproduced in all its essential features. There are also to be a fox hunt and bicycle races. Gov. Long, Senator Dawes, Congressman Robinson and other distinguished guests will be present, and Colt's Band, of Hartford, will furnish music for the day, and also for the promenade concert and ball at the City Hall in the evening. The receipts are to go toward an endowment fund for the Soldiers' Home.

A destructive tornado passed over Quincy, Ill., last Saturday afternoon, destroying many buildings, and unroofing and otherwise damaging others. Four persons were killed and 13 injured. The loss will reach $100,000. On Sunday afternoon the city of Elmira, N. Y., was visited by a severe hurricane, preceded by an earthquake. In two minutes many roofs were blown hundreds of feet, and the streets were blocked with debris. The damage will reach many thousands of dollars.

A car load of powder exploded at Council Bluffs, Iowa, Monday evening, destroying the engine house, repair shops, freight house and about 50 freight cars of the Rock Island road, burying four engines, and demolishing four or five houses. Plastering was knocked off and windows broken in all directions, windows in Omaha, across the river, also being broken, while the shock was felt 20 miles away. One man was fatally injured, and the loss will probably reach $500,000.

The Times of New Brunswick, N. J., last week published an article reflecting unfavorably upon President Garfield. The article caused great excitement in the city, and on Thursday night several hundred young men, largely students of Rutgers College, decorated the whole front of the Times building with ink, and they have since burned the editor in effigy.

While transferring a Canada Southern passenger train on the ferry boat from Amherstburg to Grosse Isle, Monday night, the boat struck the dock with such force that the Pullman sleeper was thrown into the Detroit river. Great excitement ensued, but the passengers were rescued without loss of life.

A train on the Pittsburg and Lake Erie Railroad which was carrying reporters and Knights Templar to Cleveland last Saturday, ran into a hand-car on a high bridge and killed six men. The men knew the train was due, but hoped to get over the bridge before it came along.

Joseph H. Allen has been elected superintendent of the reform school at Westboro, to succeed Mr. Dooley. Mr. Allen held the position from 1861 to 1867.

The steamship Anchoria, on her last passage to New York, collided with an unknown vessel, sinking her immediately. All on board were lost.

A child was born at Lowell on the day President Garfield was elected, taken sick the day he was shot and died on the day of his burial.

Sickness is now making sad havoc among the people of Michigan who so recently lost their property by fire.

Gen. Garfield had a presentiment that he would die on the anniversary of the battle of Chicamauga, as he did.

Another comet was discovered on the 20th ult., by E. Barnard, of Nashville, Tenn.

FIRES.—Ottawa, Ill., was visited by a destructive fire last Saturday, which burned over an area of six blocks, and would have swept the whole town but for a heavy rain. Loss $200,000. —— Swarthmore College, near Philadelphia, was burned to the ground early Monday morning, by an explosion in the laboratory. The professors and 208 students, of both sexes, had to flee for their lives, many of them not half dressed.

Ohio has furnished the nation with three Presidents, but all of them together have filled the office less than five years. Harrison died after a month's service, Mr. Hayes served out his full term, and General Garfield died after being in office seven and a-half months.

Ex-President Hayes has a farm near Bismarck, Dakota, which he obtained at from 60 to 75 cents an acre. It is now worth $15 an acre, and it is so rich that Mr. Hayes reaped from his 500 acres of wheat last year a profit of $15,000.

A serious potato famine is imminent in Iowa, the dry weather having almost totally destroyed the late crop throughout the entire State.

Dollar subscriptions are called for by the Cleveland Committee to erect a monument to President Garfield in Lake View Cemetery.

Oct. 5th and 6th are the days set for the grand millinery opening of Forbes & Wallace, Springfield.

The beauty and color of the hair may be safely regained by using Parker's Hair Balsam, which is much admired for its perfume, cleanliness and dandruff eradicating properties. o

Morse, of the "Central Shoe Store," Springfield, has "struck it" in the purchase of a big lot of prime quality kip boots so much under price that he is selling them less than the other dealers pay for them. The purchase included some calf and rubber boots.

The "Central Shoe Store," Springfield, O. D. Morse, proprietor, is not only the largest but the oldest shoe store in the city, without change either of location or firm. This fact is a sufficient explanation of how Mr. Morse has secured and retained the public confidence.

Foster, Babbitt & Chapin, the Springfield clothiers, have added a complete stock of hats and caps, and have now one of the best equipped stores in that city. They report sales for August and September as universally large. Their one price and honorable dealing wins trade.

Noyes & White, book dealers, have opened a gift book store at 387 Main street, Springfield. They offer with every book some one of the following presents: Gold and silver watches, amethyst rings, gold band china sets, oil paintings, silver ware, Japanese caskets, &c. They offer 30,000 books at $1 each, and whole sets of books, family Bibles and albums at prices so low as to astonish every one.

D. H. Brigham & Co., the Springfield clothiers, opened last Saturday undoubtedly the finest fitted store and the choicest selected stock of new goods ever opened in New England. They have $30,000 worth of seasonable goods saved from their late fire (on which they have received a partial insurance) that is just as good to the wearer, save being tumbled and mismated as new goods, which will be sold from 25 to 50 per cent less than value.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, offer Roman sash ribbons 8½ inches wide at 58 cts., worth $1.50 a yard. They offer 100 dozen all-wool hose, sizes 5½ to 8½, in cardinal, brown, wine and navy, at 37½c. worth 75c. They have just opened their fall importations of Josephine seamless gloves in all the new shades. They offer 50 dozen 4-button kid gloves at 65 cts., worth $1; Foster patent kid gloves $1.25, regular price $1.75.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."

BOSTON, October 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, ESQ.—Dear Sir: You procured for me, in 1840, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you. Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

TREATING.

One of the most absurd of all foolish customs is that of inviting a crowd of friends or strangers up to the bar "to take something at my expense." Some one has sensibly said:

"Now, boys, if you want to be generous and treat each other, why not select some other place besides the liquor shop? Suppose as you go by the post office you remark, 'I say, my dear fellow, come in and take some stamps.' These stamps will cost no more than drinks all around. Or go to the clothier's and say, 'Boys, come in and take a box of collars.' Walk up to the grocer's, free and generous, and say, 'What kind of coffee will you have?' Why not treat to groceries by the pound as well as liquors by the glass? Or take your comrades to the cutler's and say, 'I'll stand a good pocket knife all round.' This would be considered a very strange way of showing friendship; but would it not be better than to offer to your friend a maddening, poisonous, deadly draught? Suppose a man should keep a den of rattlesnakes, and allow men to be bitten at six-pence a bite; would it be a sensible thing for a man to invite all his friends in to be bitten at his expense? Is it worth our while to turn our friends into brutes, maniacs and murderers, and their homes into hells of trouble and distress, by giving them 'something to drink at my expense?' Then at the last such shall have to render an account at the judgment bar of God. Eternal responsibility rests upon our every action."

DRINKING TOO MUCH.—Children are not apt to believe they drink too much water, and yet they do. When you come in the house panting and thirsty from play, you will take a tumbler of water and drink it down as fast as you can, and then rush out to resume play, and, perhaps, repeat the drink. Now, the next time you feel thirsty try this experiment: Take a goblet of water and slowly sip it. Before it is half gone your thirst will be fully quenched and you will feel better for having drank only that which you need. And again, we are all apt to acquire the habit of drinking while eating our meals. Animals don't do it, and it is hurtful to us. Nature gives us all the saliva we need; and if any one will chew his food slowly and thoroughly, and not take a swallow of drink until through eating, the desire to do so will soon leave, and he will require only a few sips of water, tea or coffee after the meal is finished. This practice, too, will do wonders in the way of keeping off indigestion, dyspepsia and sickness.—Golden Days.

"Oh, yer don't want to go into business, don't yer?" said an angry Cockney father to his lazy and loutish son. "Yer want an appointment in the Post Horfice, do yer? Post Horfice indeed! Why, all you're fit for is to stand houtside with your tongue hout for people to wet their stamp against!"

A little fellow, turning over the leaves of a scrap-book, came across the well-known picture of some chickens just out of their shell. He examined the picture carefully, and then, with a grave, sagacious look, slowly remarked: "They came out" cos they was afraid of being boiled."

"Why, old fellow, I thought you were dead long ago," he exclaimed, grasping his friend's hand and shaking it with an enthusiasm that almost brought tears to his eyes. "No, not dead," he responded calmly. "I expected to be, but a divorce court intervened in time to save me."

An aged colored brother in one of the prayer meetings on the camp ground last week, made a characteristic prayer in which he said: "Oh, Lawd! some darkeys asks for fiddles an' some darkeys asks for pianos, but we wants de spirit ob de Lawd!"

A would-be journalist drops a postal to inquire, "What must I do to write fluently?" Sharpen up your pencil and your wits, my son, and write it thus,—f-l-u-e-n-t-l-y.

We are all of us more or less echoes, repeating involuntarily the virtues, the defects, the movements and the characters of those among whom we live.—Joubert.

"Mamma, why is Mrs. Ficklelove called a grass widow?" "Because Mr. Ficklelove died of hay fever, my dear."

The justice of a fight for principles depends upon the justice of its principles.

The wise husband gets a servant girl that hath hair the color of his wife's.

It is not what man has, but what he does, that makes him happy.

Is it a proper thing to call bread bakers loafers?

Nearly all the ills that afflict mankind can be prevented and cured by keeping the stomach, liver and kidneys in perfect working order. There is no medicine known that will do this as quickly and surely, without interfering with duties, as Parker's Ginger Tonic. See advertisement. oc

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

NECESSITATING A SURGICAL OPERATION—LOVING MOTHER ATTEMPTS TO TAKE A PAIR OF SHEARS FROM HER CHILD.

PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle. 1m22

SICK HEADACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

WE MEAN CURED, NOT MERELY RELIEVED,

AND CAN PROVE WHAT WE CLAIM!

PROTECTION

FROM

MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE,
INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE

PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use.

If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Prepared only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

GRAEFENBERG

TREATING.

One of the most absurd of all foolish customs is that of inviting a crowd of friends or strangers up to the bar "to take something at my expense." Some one has sensibly said:

"Now, boys, if you want to be generous and treat each other, why not select some other place besides the liquor shop? Suppose as you go by the post office you remark, 'I say, my dear fellow, come in and take some stamps.' These stamps will cost no more than drinks all around. Or go to the clothier's and say, 'Boys, come in and take a box of collars.' Walk up to the grocer's, free and generous, and say, 'What kind of coffee will you have?' Why not treat to groceries by the pound as well as liquors by the glass? Or take your comrades to the cutler's and say, 'I'll stand a good pocket knife all round.' This would be considered a very strange way of showing friendship; but would it not be better than to offer to your friend a maddening, poisonous, deadly draught? Suppose a man should keep a den of rattlesnakes, and allow men to be bitten at six-pence a bite; would it be a sensible thing for a man to invite all his friends in to be bitten at his expense? Is it worth our while to turn our friends into brutes, maniacs and murderers, and their homes into hells of trouble and distress, by giving them 'something to drink at my expense?' Then at the last such shall have to render an account at the judgment bar of God. Eternal responsibility rests upon our every action."

DRINKING TOO MUCH.—Children are not apt to believe they drink too much water, and yet they do. When you come in the house panting and thirsty from play, you will take a tumbler of water and drink it down as fast as you can, and then rush out to resume play, and, perhaps, repeat the drink. Now, the next time you feel thirsty try this experiment: Take a goblet of water and slowly sip it. Before it is half gone your thirst will be fully quenched and you will feel better for having drank only that which you need. And again, we are all apt to acquire the habit of drinking while eating our meals. Animals don't do it, and it is hurtful to us. Nature gives us all the saliva we need; and if any one will chew his food slowly and thoroughly, and not take a swallow of drink until through eating, the desire to do so will soon leave, and he will require only a few sips of water, tea or coffee after the meal is finished. This practice, too, will do wonders in the way of keeping off indigestion, dyspepsia and sickness.—Golden Days.

"Oh, yer don't want to go into business, don't yer?" said an angry Cockney father to his lazy and loutish son. "Yer want an appointment in the Post Horfice, do yer? Post Horfice indeed! Why, all you're fit for is to stand houtside with your tongue hout for people to wet their stamp against!"

A little fellow, turning over the leaves of a scrap-book, came across the well-known picture of some chickens just out of their shell. He examined the picture carefully, and then, with a grave, sagacious look, slowly remarked: "They came out" cos they was afraid of being boiled."

"Why, old fellow, I thought you were dead long ago," he exclaimed, grasping his friend's hand and shaking it with an enthusiasm that almost brought tears to his eyes. "No, not dead," he responded calmly. "I expected to be, but a divorce court intervened in time to save me."

An aged colored brother in one of the prayer meetings on the camp ground last week, made a characteristic prayer in which he said: "Oh, Lawd! some darkeys asks for fiddles an' some darkeys asks for pianos, but we wants de spirit ob de Lawd!"

A would-be journalist drops a postal to inquire, "What must I do to write fluently?" Sharpen up your pencil and your wits, my son, and write it thus,—f-l-u-e-n-t-l-y.

We are all of us more or less echoes, repeating involuntarily the virtues, the defects, the movements and the characters of those among whom we live.—Joubert.

"Mamma, why is Mrs. Ficklelove called a grass widow?" "Because Mr. Ficklelove died of hay fever, my dear."

The justice of a fight for principles depends upon the justice of its principles.

The wise husband gets a servant girl that hath hair the color of his wife's.

It is not what man has, but what he does, that makes him happy.

Is it a proper thing to call bread bakers loafers?

Nearly all the ills that afflict mankind can be prevented and cured by keeping the stomach, liver and kidneys in perfect working order. There is no medicine known that will do this as quickly and surely, without interfering with duties, as Parker's Ginger Tonic. See advertisement. oc

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

NECESSITATING A SURGICAL OPERATION—LOVING MOTHER ATTEMPTS TO TAKE A PAIR OF SHEARS FROM HER CHILD.

PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle. 1m22

PROTECTION
FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE,
INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE
PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use.

If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Prepared only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

GRAEFENBERG
VEGETABLE
PILLS

Are the mildest ever known, they cure Headache, Malarial Disease, Biliousness and Indigestion.

THESE
PILLS
Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and Nervousness. Sold by all Druggists.

Loss $200,000. —— Swarthmore College, near Philadelphia, was burned to the ground early Monday morning, by an explosion in the laboratory. The professors and 208 students, of both sexes, had to flee for their lives, many of them not half dressed.

Ohio has furnished the nation with three Presidents, but all of them together have filled the office less than five years. Harrison died after a month's service, Mr. Hayes served out his full term, and General Garfield died after being in office seven and a-half months.

Ex-President Hayes has a farm near Bismarck, Dakota, which he obtained at from 60 to 75 cents an acre. It is now worth $15 an acre, and it is so rich that Mr. Hayes reaped from his 500 acres of wheat last year a profit of $15,000.

A serious potato famine is imminent in Iowa, the dry weather having almost totally destroyed the late crop throughout the entire State.

Dollar subscriptions are called for by the Cleveland Committee to erect a monument to President Garfield in Lake View Cemetery.

Agricultural Exhibitions for 1881.

Worcester Northwest, at Athol, Oct. 4 and 5.

Hampshire, Franklin and Hampden, at Northampton, Oct. 5, 6 and 7.

Oct. 5th and 6th are the days set for the grand millinery opening of Forbes & Wallace, Springfield.

The beauty and color of the hair may be safely regained by using Parker's Hair Balsam, which is much admired for its perfume, cleanliness and dandruff eradicating properties. o

Morse, of the "Central Shoe Store," Springfield, has "struck it" in the purchase of a big lot of prime quality kip boots so much under price that he is selling them less than the other dealers pay for them. The purchase included some calf and rubber boots.

The "Central Shoe Store," Springfield, O. D. Morse, proprietor, is not only the largest but the oldest shoe store in the city, without change either of location or firm. This fact is a sufficient explanation of how Mr. Morse has secured and retained the public confidence.

Foster, Babbitt & Chapin, the Springfield clothiers, have added a complete stock of hats and caps, and have now one of the best equipped stores in that city. They report sales for August and September as universally large. Their one price and honorable dealing wins trade.

Noyes & White, book dealers, have opened a gift book store at 387 Main street, Springfield. They offer with every book some one of the following presents: Gold and silver watches, amethyst rings, gold band china sets, oil paintings, silver ware, Japanese caskets, &c. They offer 30,000 books at $1 each, and whole sets of books, family Bibles and albums at prices so low as to astonish every one.

D. H. Brigham & Co., the Springfield clothiers, opened last Saturday undoubtedly the finest fitted store and the choicest selected stock of new goods ever opened in New England. They have $30,000 worth of seasonable goods saved from their late fire (on which they have received a partial insurance) that is just as good to the wearer, save being tumbled and mismated as new goods, which will be sold from 25 to 50 per cent less than value.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, offer Roman sash ribbons 8¼ inches wide at 58 cts., worth $1.50 a yard. They offer 100 dozen all-wool hose, sizes 5½ to 8½, in cardinal, brown, wine and navy, at 37½c. worth 75c. They have just opened their fall importations of Josephine seamless gloves in all the new shades. They offer 50 dozen 4-button kid gloves at 65 cts., worth $1; Foster patent kid gloves $1.25, regular price $1.75.

WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE is unquestionably the result of the most important discovery for the relief of human suffering, since vaccination. It is a constitutional remedy by absorption —an absolute cure at any stage. Supplied by druggists, or delivered by D. B. DEWEY & Co., Agents, 46 DEY ST., N. Y., for $1 a package. Pamphlets, with full explanations and overwhelming proofs, MAILED FREE. o

To prevent drunkenness, don't drink; but if you have been drinking, more of it will not sober you. While you are shaky, nervous and distressed, have resort to Simmons Liver Regulator, as a tonic to arouse your torpid liver to action, enliven your spirits, dissipate the blues and drive away despondency. Nine cases out of ten it is your heavy liver that causes your desire to get rid of yourself in intoxication. We know hundreds that have tried our remedy, and it has proved their salvation.

More cases of sick headache, biliousness, constipation, etc., can be cured in less time, with less medicine, and for less money, by using Carter's Little Liver Pills, than by any other means. 2w27

HAVE Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry always at hand. It cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Consumption and all Throat and Lung Complaints. 50 cents and $1 a bottle. †

THE Peruvian Syrup has cured thousands who were suffering from Dyspepsia, Debility, Liver Complaint, Boils, Humors, Female Complaints, etc. Pamphlets sent free to any address. Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston. †

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

CENTAUR LINIMENT.—Invaluable to families and owners of horses. For sale everywhere.

CASTORIA.—For sour stomach, constipation, and fretfulness of children. Pleasant, safe and cheap. 900 drops; 35 doses, 35 cents.

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. in ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."

BOSTON, October 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, ESQ.—Dear Sir: You procured for me, in 1840, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you. Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

Goin' for the Cows.

The western skies were all aglow
With clouds o' red and gray,
The crickets in the grassy fields
Were chirpin' merrily,
When up the lane an' o'er the hill
I saw a maiden roam,
Who went her way at close of day
To call the cattle home:
Co-boss—co-boss!
Co-boss—co-boss!
Come home—come home!

The echo o' her charmin' voice
Resounded thro' the vale;
It lingered on the evenin' air,
It floated on the gale;
'Twas borne along the mountain-side,
It drifted through the glen;
It died away among the hills,
Far from the haunts of men:
Co-boss—co-boss!
Co-boss—co-boss!
Come home—come home!

Her face was flushed with hues o' health,
Her arms and feet were bare;
She had a lithe and active form,
A wealth o' ebon hair;
Behind the hill she passed from sight
As sinks a fallen star,
Until her voice was faintly heard
Still callin' from afar:
Co-boss—co-boss!
Co-boss—co-boss!
Come home—come home!

Soon o'er the distant knoll appeared
The cattle, red an' brown,
An' from the pastur' to the lane
Came gaily trottin' down;
With sparklin' eyes and cheeks aglow
Returned the maiden gay,
Who waved her arms and shouted low:
Whay-boss—whay-boss—O-whay!
Whay-boss—whay-boss!
Whay-boss—whay-boss!
O whay—O whay!

THE SILVER BULLET.

In 1869, Launce Nutting was United States Marshal in the Southern District of Virginia. The State was at that time fairly overrun with outlaws of all classes. Bushwhackers, highwaymen, counterfeiters and "moonshiners" nestled in all the countryside, among the mountains, and far from towns and cities upon the lonely roads; while gamblers and desperadoes swarmed in and about the settlements. Crime was frequent, and the lot of a United States officer a succession of stirring adventures, involving great danger, and demanding as great tact and personal bravery.

But Nutting proved himself worthy and fit for the office. A young man of temperate habits, quick wit, splendid physique and dashing courage, he was never at a loss how to act; and the vermin that infested that section soon learned to hate and fear him intensely.

Many were the expeditions which the officer had led, many his escapes, and many the prisoners safely captured and walled by his efforts; but one man evaded him. The shrewdest and worst "moonshiner" of all was still at large; despite all his efforts, Nutting had not yet secured Ruloff Allen.

This man was known throughout the state. His career had been that of a criminal all his life. In the fastnessess of Southwestern Virginia, he manufactured whisky upon a grand scale, and was the owner of a dozen or more "queer stills," and snapped his fingers at the law.

Several times Nutting had sought this quarry; twice he had actually caught him, yet twice he had escaped, and at the time of which we speak was still free.

Nutting sat at his office-window one evening, musing, half-dreaming, when there fell a light touch on his shoulder. He started and turned quickly. A stranger stood before him.

"The United States Marshal?" said he, interrogatively.

"Yes, sir," said Launce, rising. "Be seated. What can I do for you?"

"I would speak with you alone," he said, glancing around. "I have matters of importance to communicate."

"This office is out of hearing from the street," replied Nutting, "and we are by ourselves. You can speak freely."

The other drew a couple of cigars from his pocket, offered one to the marshal, and lit the second himself. Nutting followed his example; then the man drew his chair nearer, so that he sat between the officer and the desk whereon lay his belt and pistols, threw open his coat so that the butts of two heavy navy revolvers might be seen, and blowing the smoke lightly from his cigar, said in a quiet tone to his companion:

"You are desirous of arresting a noted moonshiner, one Ruloff Allen, are you not?"

"There's no doubt of that," said the marshal, smiling.

"I am the man."

Nutting's cigar never stirred in his lips; his hand did not quiver, nor his breath come quicker. A single sigh showed how deeply he was moved; his eyes dilated, then he laughed low and long.

"You—you, Ruloff Allen; my friend, I know Allen. His hair is red; yours is black. His face bears a scar across the chin; yours a beard. His teeth are broken; yours are perfect. The joke is good, but you are not Allen."

The other hesitated a moment; then, striking a wig from his head, a beard from his chin, and removing a single falsetooth, he turned again to Nutting, red-haired and smiling.

"And now?"

"You are Allen!"

For a full moment neither man moved. It was as though two tigers gazed at each other. Then the outlaw said:

"Listen! I am armed! you are not. I am fully as desperate a man as report makes me. I am as strong as you. Do not try to arrest me, for I shall then be obliged to kill you. I came here to have a private talk, but it was necessary that you should know who I am. I will not molest you if you will do the same by me, and give me fifteen minutes to escape when we have finished."

Nutting measured his chances. Unarmed, in the presence of a man to whom murder was not new, he deemed prudence the better part, and replied:

"I agree."

"Good," said Allen, removing his own pistol-belt. "Your word is equal to mine. We shall both be unarmed. And now I would tell you my story."

Then he drew his chair still nearer the marshal, and as the twlight fell and came down, he told of his life—a weird, strange history, every line intense with the throbbing passion of a lawlessness which had made the man what he was.

The other listened, breathless, the darkness shrouded both, and the cigars were finished long before the tale was ended.

At length, however, the visitor paused, and then concluded as follows:

"So have I lived. As a wild man, almost; and that life has, for the past five years, been more a mania than ever before, but with a method. I am, and have been, seeking money only. Not so widely different, you will say, from all the world, except that my search was without the pale of the law. And now the end has come. I am rich, I have enough, and I desire to return to civilization. You can permit it—you can prevent it. I am an outlaw. Very well! I will cease outlawry, will turn over my stills to the government, will swear a great oath and keep it too—for my own interests demand it—to become a worthy citizen; and if you will recommend it, the government will accept the prodigal son, and kill for me the fatted calf of pardon. I came here to ask you to intercede for me. Will you do so?"

Nutting hesitated a moment.

This man was a veritable Robin Hood! Could he trust him? Should he aid him or continue his efforts to suppress him?

The other spoke again.

"Such assistance from an official is what I need, and I can pay for it. If you will get a free pardon for me I will give you five thousand—"

"Stop!" The young man's eyes blazed. "You have gone too far! I might have deemed it my duty to do as you asked, in order to wipe out your cursed traffic; but you have sought to place me on a par with yourself. You offer to bribe me and render me as rank in the nostrils of honest men as yourself. I refuse!"

Allen's face paled, and his hand crept toward his hip; then restraining himself with a scoffing laugh, he said:

"Be it so. Then we are enemies. I, to the law; you to me. Remember my fifteen minutes, and beware when we meet!"

He threw his cloak about him, buckled his pistols at his waist, and disappeared; but as he left the room a little piece of metal fell from his person and rolled unnoticed upon the floor. An instant later the ring of his horse's hoofs sounded through the night as he rode toward the mountains.

The morning following, Nutting entered his office, when his aged servant bowed low before him, extending his brown and wrinkled hand, and said in an awe-stricken voice:

"Foun' dis on de floor, massa. S'pose him yourn. Bad ting, massa, bad—ef you 'low ole nigger to say so!"

The marshal leaned forward in surprise. Lying in the outstretched palm of the black was a silver bullet.

"Why, uncle," said he, taking it, "this is not mine."

"Not yourn, massa! Tank de Lord! I's pleased, I is, massa. Foun' it yer, dough. Dat ar's a seweyside bullet, massa," he continued, lowering his voice to a whisper, while his eyes rolled like ships in the midst of white and seething billows; "I know 'em! My ole massa had one cast and carried it for many years. Dey neber kill no one but de fellers dey's made for. Massa John, dough, he didn't git no chance to use his'n," and the old man chuckled.

"A suicide bullet!" said Nutting, with a smile, as he examined the silver sphere. "That's a new idea to me. Why make a special bullet, uncle? I should think one of those deadly enough."

And he pointed toward some of the heavy cartridges belonging to his own pistols which lay on the table near.

"Dey mought miss, massa. Ye know de debbil cares for his own, an' dis bullet is made by his help, at night, in de grabeyard, an' don't miss. I knows 'em, massa. I's seen 'em afore." Then, drawing nearer, he whispered, "I's made 'em?"

"And did they do their work?" said Nutting, laughing lightly.

"Dey did, massa."

The officer opened a drawer in his desk, and took therefrom an old-fashioned duelling-pistol, which he had picked up somewhere, and fitted the bullet into its rusty muzzle.

"It's just the thing, uncle. Bring me my flask, and I'll load it with the suicide bullet. It's best to have it handy by if I get the blues." He laughed again.

The servant obeyed.

"No use to fix 'im, massa. 'Twon't only kill de one what it's made fer, shuah, an' ye couldn't shoot yerself wid it, nohow."

"Well, uncle, I'll load the old smooth-bore anyway," said the marshal, suiting the action to the word, "and this afternoon we'll try it at a mark. If I miss a half-dollar at a dozen paces, I'll give up that you're right. If I hit, your 'suicide bullet' is no better nor worse than a leaden one."

"All right," said the old darkey, "but you won't hit."

Just as Nutting completed the charging of the weapon, a visitor called, and he thrust it unthinkingly into an open pigeon-hole of his desk. His visitor's business was such as to detain him from the office until night, and the plan of the morning was forgotten. The dueling-pistol, with its silver missile, lay unnoticed for months in the desk.

The days and weeks passed, Summer came and went, and Fall ripened the year. A dozen times had the marshal organized expeditions and scoured the country, seeking the notorious Allen, but each time he had returned unsuccessful. Occasionally a still would be destroyed, or a quantity of liquor seized, but the man himself remained free, and the winter was approaching rapidly. Soon these raids must be dropped for the year. Nutting chafed under his ill success.

One final effort, however, was to be made. Certain information, which he knew was reliable, had at last, he felt sure, placed the outlaw in his hands, and he looked to his horse's shoes and reloaded his pistols with unusual care.

At his orders mounted guards, men upon whom he could depend, patrolled all the roads. Upon the morrow, at dawn, with a posse of seven thorough and fearless mountaineers, he was to storm the very stronghold of the moonshiners, and to-morrow night would find a vacancy either in the government office or in the ranks of the illicit distillers. The expedition had, thus far, Nutting believed, been kept a dead secret. Because of this he looked forward with strong hopes of success.

The officer sat at his desk writing. There were a few pages to complete, a letter or two to prepare for the mail, and some memoranda to destroy. He might never sit at that desk again.

As his eyes wandered over the mass of papers, documents and duplicate reports, filed neatly away before him, he suddenly noted the butt of his old dueling-pistol, half-hidden in one of the compartments, and, as the remembrance of how it came there flashed over him he was about to draw it from its hiding-place when a shuffling step at the door arrested him, and an instant later an aged and bent woman entered the room.

The hour was late, and Nutting regarded the new-comer with surprise, as he arose to offer her a chair. She accepted it with a whine of thanks, and sank panting into it. The marshal resumed his seat at his desk.

"Ye air the government man, I reckon?" said the woman, after a pause, raising a brown and wrinkled face, half-hidden beneath an immense hood and a pair of green spectacles, toward Nutting.

"Yes, madam," returned that worthy.

"I've come a right smart piece to see ye, for an old woman. I'm true grit, I am, but a-gittin' wore out. These yere mountains are a sight steeper nor forty years ago," and she sighed. "But see here, I'm on business, I am. I want to talk to ye. Ye don't know me, I reckon?"

"I can't say that I do," said Nutting, slowly.

"I reckon not—as ye never seed me afore. I'm Mrs. Allen—Bethsheby Allen—an' my boy he's Ruloff Allen. Ye've heard o' him, mebbe?" and she gazed cunningly into her listener's face.

"Yes, I know him," and the man's brow darkened.

"Wall, now, I'll tell ye. It 'pears yer on a raid after him to-morrer—ye see I know a thing or two—an' ye've got the boy badly cooped up this time, shore. Not but what he'll fight, and some one o' ye'll catch suthin' besides moonshiners. My boy's smart, he is, I tell ye, and he'll tote ye round consider'ble afore ye gather him in; but he's cooped all the same, an' I'm afeared ye'll catch him or kill him. An' I'm his mammy, ye know."

The old hag paused and wiped her eyes. She was a woman, even yet, and Nutting's heart softened toward her.

"What can I do in this matter, Mrs. Allen?" began the marshal. "Your son's a—"

"Never mind what he is, you can save him. He's trapped, catched, cooped! But he's my boy, an' I want you to let him go. Take his stills an' his whisky, take everything, but let him go, and I'll give ye my word—it's good; Bethsheby Allen never broke it yit—that in less than three days we'll be—"

"Mrs. Allen, this is impossible. I'll try not to hurt your son, but capture him I must and shall."

"But if he should capture you, what then?"

At the words the green glasses fell, the hood was thrown back, the bent form straightened, and before the eyes of the dazed officer stood Ruloff Allen himself, a look of deadly hatred on his face, a heavy revolver in his outstretched hand.

"And if he should capture you, what then?"

Silence reigned, and the young man gazed into the deadly tube before him with nerves tense as steel and a face that paled not, although he knew that he was looking into his open grave.

"I came here to give you one last chance and myself the same," half-hissed the moonshiner. "That chance is lost to us both. I go back to the mountains and outlawry; you—you retire from active service! Can you pray? Do it now. In three minutes I shall kill you."

Slowly Nutting's eye ran about the room. Escape was impossible—help would not come. A single cry meant instant death—he was lost. His heart sank.

Suddenly the butt of the old dueling pistol came within the circle of his vision. Cool as his would-be murderer he turned to him and said:

"Will you let me smoke once more?"

The fellow eyed him sharply.

"Smoke? Yes," he said at length, "one cigar." And, lowering the muzzle of his weapon, he thrust it into his pocket to supply his victim's wants.

"I have some here," said Nutting, and, like a flash, his own hand shot upward toward the pigeon-hole where lay the dueling pistol.

"Down with your hand," cried Allen.

It was too late. There came a sharp and ringing report, a single cry, a dull and sickening thud upon the floor, and all was over.

And the moon, breaking from between the rifted clouds without, looked through the open window upon the face of the dead, while Nutting, white and trembling, held in his nerveless hand a smoking pistol.

The silver bullet had found its mark and returned to its owner. The United States Marshal was saved!

CHRISTIAN DRUMMERS.

One of the travelers for a New York dry goods house recently arrived in an interior State to find that one of his best customers was about to transfer his custom to a Boston firm.

"Didn't we always do well by you?" asked the New Yorker, as he sat down for an explanation.

"Yes, I believe so."

"Didn't we ship goods to you promptly?"

"Yes."

"Did we ever press you in a pinch?"

"No, I cant say that you did."

"We can't understand why you should leave our house all of a sudden, after buying of us several years."

"I suppose I ought to make some explanation, and I will do so," replied the merchant.

"You know that I attend church?"

"Yes; and so do I."

"Do you? I didn't know that. I am looked upon as a Christian."

"And so am I. I have got the date of my baptism right here in my note book."

"Is that so? well, our church is in need of repairs. We were talking it over the other day, when the Boston drummer was in here, and he at once subscribed ten dollars."

"Ten dollars! Why, that's only two kegs of nails! Put me down for $30 cash, a new silk hat and a suit of clothes for the minister."

"Do you mean it?"

"Of course I do, and if that two-cent Christian from Boston dares to give another $5, I'll send you down a $600 church organ and a $500-a-year man to play on it. We are a house that never make any great display of gospel hymns and religious tracts, but when a Boston drummer bluffs, we show our religious hand, and scoop the pot every time."

And the merchant still continues to deal with the New York firm.

The Higher Rock.

Above the surges' wildest roar,
And mad seas thundering on the shore,
How fixed, how heedless of the shock,
Thy steadfast strength, eternal Rock!
When the fierce tempest round me sweeps,
When sinks my soul in soundless deeps,
O Rock divine, faith clings to thee,
Still let thy clefts my refuge be!

Beyond the desert's burning sand
Thy shadow in a thirsty land,
Refreshment sweet and verdure brings,
And music of perennial springs.
From noonday drought and smiting heat
To thy cool streams direct my feet.
O riven Rock! life flows from thee,
Thy quenchless fount my portion be.

Beyond the setting of the sun
There's rest in thee when toil is done.
Beneath thy shadow falls no night,
Thy clefts are gates to heaven's light.
In life or death my soul would prove
A fortress that no power can move;
O Rock! O Christ! how blest to be
O'ershadowed, sheltered, saved by thee!

HINTS FOR MOTHERS.

When your daughter performs a task in an ill-fashioned manner, you should always say, "There; I might as well have done it myself in the first place," and then take the work out of her hand and do it yourself. This will encourage the girl not to try to do the thing next time she is set about it.

Never permit your son to have any amusement at home. This will induce him to seek it in places where you will not be annoyed by his noise.

There is no place like home. Impress this truth upon your children by making home as disagreeable and unlike any other place as possible.

Never neglect the lock on the pantry. Some boys have probably turned out first-class housebreakers all on account of this judicious treatment in early childhood.

Never permit your children to contradict. Let them know that that is your peculiar prerogative.

In chiding your children's faults, never forget to mention how much better the Jones children behave. This will cause your little ones everlastingly to love the Jones children.

Take frequent occasion to tell your children how much more favored their lot is than yours was when you were a girl. It is always pleasant to children to be constantly reminded of their obligations.

Don't let your son indulge in any kind of out-door games. Keep him to his books. It will make a great man of him some day, if he should happen to live.

Your girls should never be permitted to romp. Let them grow into interesting invalids, by all means.

Be gentle and courteous before company; but if you have a temper let your children have a taste of it as often as convenient. A mother should never practise deception upon her brood.

Talk slightingly of your husband to your boys and girls. This will make them respect their father.

Tell your child he shall not do a thing, and then let him tease you into giving your consent. This will teach him what to do on subsequent occasions.

Make promises to your children and then neglect to keep them. This will lead your children not to place too much dependence upon your word, and shield them from many disappointments.

When your boy gets comfortably seated in the easy-chair, take it from him. This will induce him to appreciate a good thing when he grows older, and stick to it—a seat in a crowded horse-car for example.

VENNOR'S PREDICTIONS.

October will open with cold, cloudy and rainy weather, and will be distinguished by rains and fogs. This foggy weather will probably continue well on into

November, during which month the thermometer will probably range from 31 to 46 in northern sections. The roads and streets will be muddy, and there will be little frost, and occasional but light snow-falls. The characteristics of December, probably, will be those of the preceding two months. This, I believe, will be one of the Decembers that will cause inquiry of the oldest inhabitant, as to whether there ever had been such a December before. In Illinois, Iowa, Louisiana and Minnesota, there is likely to be an embargo of mud, which will render traveling almost impossible, and farmers will for the time exchange their wagon for the saddle. In western Canada flowers may be discovered in bloom in the open garden, and ploughing will be continued almost up to Christmas, and while there may be occasional cold snaps, these will not materially change the character of the month.

Learn to say no. If a man makes a request of you which you cannot grant, tell him so at once. Don't deceive him. It may make him feel unpleasant towards you for the moment only. If you do deceive him, he will hate you all his life, if he do not despise you.—Detroit Free Press.

DANGER AHEAD.

The electric light manipulators hope to utilize the almost daily death by gas suffocation to their pecuniary advantage. If, in addition to economy and a better light, they can bring greater security to life by the use of their patent, they believe they will make a great point. Investigation, however, shows that in nearly every case where men are suffocated by gas they were drunk first. In that case the blame must be laid on the drink, and the gas cannot fairly be lugged into responsibility at all. If the worst effect produced by drunkenness were the death of the drinker, calm philosophy would enable the public to bear the infliction. Unfortunately such is not the fact. The death of the drinker is but the beginning of a train of woe, which whelms and ruins families and bankrupts business. Who of us needs to be told that drinking is on the increase? Everybody drinks. Boys in down town offices swig their beer ere they light their cigarettes. Laboring men along the wharves take their rot-gut as regularly as they take their pipe. Look in any or all of our great restaurants. The receipts of the bar exceed the expenses of the entire establishment. It does not follow that all men who drink are, or are liable to become drunkards, but it certainly is a fact that no man who does not drink ever can become a drunkard. Old-fashioned parents in the country would be apt to open their eyes if they were to spend an hour in one of the palatial barrooms of this city. Clergymen, doctors, lawyers, journalists, bankers, brokers, clerks of every name and employes of every degree drink as regularly as they eat, and a great deal oftener. Who can deny it? Common observation proves the assertion. Can a nation already enfeebled and effeminated by smoking long endure the strain of drink? What kind of children will the next generation be? A man with a swollen head, an inflamed stomach and unsteady nerves may know enough to turn off the gas when he goes to bed, but he will be exceptionally fortunate if his children have sense enough to do anything at all.—*N. It is understood that Secretary Windom wants to leave the cabinet in season to secure his re-eletion to the Senate, which he can easily do.

FRESH reports of Indian outrages are received from Arizona. A number of whites have been killed, and it is feared that the hostiles will yet make serious trouble.

NELSON W. ALDRICH of Providence, a prominent business man, and a member of Congress since 1878, was on Wednesday elected United States Senator, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Gen. Burnside.

THE board of managers of the National Temperance Society have addressed an appeal to President Arthur, in which they urge him to use his influence as President "to discourage all injurious social drinking usages, to lessen the great and threatening evil of intemperance, and to promote the ultimate suppression of the wasteful and destructive alcoholic liquor traffic."

THE cattle shows are now over for this year. They have been successful in the main, and in so far as they stimulate the farmers to improve their stock and to cultivate the best crops in the best manner, they are productive of good; while the bringing together of the farmers of adjoining towns for the comparing of notes and methods often results in the acquisition and development of new and valuable ideas, and is an incentive to a closer study of the science of agriculture. It is this growth in knowledge which every farmer should seek.

RUMORS of a plot to kill ex-Senator Conkling were current in New York the other day, arising from a threatening letter written by a Utica man, who said that he was going to the State Convention, and that Conkling should not be admitted, whatever the consequences —meaning, doubtless, that he should be hissed out of the convention. We do not apprehend that Mr. Conkling stands in any great danger of personal violence. That would not be half the punishment to him that it is to live, a whipped boss, shorn of all his honors and power.

THE Democrats of this State seem to think that the old set of candidates will stand defeat as gracefully as any, and so at their convention Wednesday last year's ticket was renominated with one exception, James H. Carleton of Haverhill being substituted for A. E. Thompson as candidate for Lieutenant Governor. The resolutions contain the usual arraignment of the Republican party, and talk free trade and civil service reform. The convention was small and quiet, and was entirely lacking in the noise and "hurrah boys" which will come to the front when Butler goes for the governorship next year.

RUMORS of all sorts are afloat in regard to the probable composition of President Arthur's cabinet, some of them having an air of probability, while others are too ridiculous to be given circulation. The only thing that is really known in regard to it is—nothing. The President keeps his mouth closely shut, and the impression is gaining ground in the best informed circles that no changes will be attempted until after the opening of the regular session of Congress in December. This will allow the President time to give the subject the careful consideration its importance demands, and will also enable the present cabinet to make up their own department reports for the present year, which it is no more than fitting they should do.

JACK FROST has made things lively in New England this week. The weather has been so very warm that people were not prepared for such a sudden change as came on Tuesday, and consequently some fruit and other things have been nipped by the frost before they could be protected. At Wolfeboro, N. H., the thermometer fell 52° in eighteen hours, and there have been snow squalls both in New Hampshire and Vermont. The weather Wednesday was the coldest there has been at this season for at least ten years, as is shown by this record of the lowest temperature during the first five days in October for ten years past: 43° on October 5, 1872; 40° on October 1, 1873; 38.5° on October 5, 1874; 39° on October 2, 1875; 42.5° on October 3, 1876; 55° on October 5, 1877; 49° on October 5, 1878; 52° on October 4, 1879; 40° on October 4, 1880; and 30° on October 5, 1881. The cold weather comes too sharply to last long, however, and there will probably yet be many warm days before Winter sets in.

EX-SENATOR CONKLING has been sorely defeated again. Beaten in his late superhuman efforts to secure a re-election to the United States Senate, he has used every effort to secure control of the State Convention which met at New York on Wednesday. But the tide was against him, and with defeat staring him in the face he wisely concluded not to go to the convention. The convention was called to order by ex-Senator Platt, who had the unpleasant task of escorting to the chair and introducing Warner Miller, his successor in the U. S. Senate, who was elected temporary chairman by 298 votes, to 190 for Frank Hiscock, the stalwart whom the State committee had arranged to put in the chair. Chauncey M. Depew was made permanent chairman, and the anti-machine men had things their own way, the proceedings being characterized by an unexpected harmony, and the resolutions speaking for reform in a manner that is new to New York Republicans, so long dominated by Conkling. Conkling and his delegation were unseated, and his autocratic power is clearly broken. We shall now see whether he will give that unquestioning obedience to the will of the majority, which he has so long and strongly declared to be the supreme duty of every Republican.

J. A. Hawkes has been appointed bookkeeper at the Hampden Hat Mills, and Mrs. Hawkes will have charge of the trimming department. The mills will start up for the season's work about the 18th inst.

Wales Hall will be occupied next Thursday night by Skiff's California Minstrels, a troupe of artists who make a point of good music, vocal and instrumental, and aim to furnish an entertainment first-class in every particular, and which all will enjoy.

The schools in this village resumed their sessions on Wednesday, but the stoves were not ready for the sudden cold snap, and the scholars were dismissed after a short session. The school-rooms were properly warmed the next morning, so that the schools started up again.

It is not often that raspberries are found ripening in October, but Frank M. Shaw shows us several stems of them, picked this week, and the berries are as large and sweet as though it were midsummer. There are quite a number of the vines in bearing on his farm.

It is understood that Mr. Vanderbilt is interested in the proposed new route from Springfield to New York, and is making the surveys between New York and New Haven, toward which city the Boston & Albany managers are pushing their surveys as rapidly as possible.

E. B. Gates was chosen by the selectmen and school committee last Saturday to fill the vacancy in the school board caused by the resignation of Rev. B. M. Fullerton. On the first ballot the vote stood, E. B. Gates 2, Geo. A. Murdock 2, Rev. C. H. Ricketts 1. On the second ballot Mr. Gates received 3 votes to 2 for Mr. Murdock.

The monthly meeting of the Eastern Hampden Medical Society was held on Thursday with Dr. Geo. L. Woods of Springfield, an interesting essay on Hydrophobia being read by Dr. Smith of Indian Orchard. The society is in a flourishing condition, now numbering eleven members, all of whom were present at this meeting.

Wm. H. Hubbard, a fireman on the New York & New England Railroad, who formerly ran the switch engine in the New London Northern yard in this place, fell from his engine at Mill River Tuesday afternoon, and fractured his left leg. The accident was caused by the parting of the coupling link connecting the engine and tender.

It is understood that the Boston & Albany road will run no more cheap excursions to Boston this year. This will be regretted by many people who would like to attend the fairs at the Hub this month, and who think people out this way should have more than one chance to enjoy these excursions, when Springfield people have had five of them.

Nathan M. Goodale is canvassing the town for the "Life and Public Career of Gen. James A. Garfield," by Gen. James S. Brisbin, U. S. A., and Wm. Ralston Balch, managing editor of the American. This is a new and seasonable work of several hundred pages, with a number of illustrations, and gives the history of the lamented President from his birth to his sad and untimely end. The book is meeting with a large sale, and will give the people the desired opportunity to become better acquainted with the struggles and triumphs of their late chief.

The mercury took a sharp turn downward Tuesday afternoon, and people awoke Wednesday morning to the novel experience of finding the ground and other things frozen before there had been a visible frost, on account of the wind during the night. The mercury stood at 30 Wednesday morning, and the piercing wind during the day, with the suddenness of the change, made it seem much colder than it really was. Overcoats were hastily donned and fires started, and shivering humanity seemed to feel that winter had really set in. There was a heavy frost Wednesday night, and the thermometer dropped to 25 the next morning.

Lawyer Strong's house on South Main street was burglarized at an early hour last Saturday morning, the thieves cutting a piece out of the front door large enough to reach through and unfasten the door. They went in and made free with the food in the refrigerator, and then walked off with two good overcoats, a Paisley shawl, a lot of silver spoons, etc., the stolen articles amounting in value to about $150. The same fellows, evidently, bored three or four holes in the front door of John Feeney's house the same night, but were frightened away by a movement of some of the inmates; and they were also discouraged in the same way at the house of C. H. Keith, where they had partly removed a screen from a window. It behooves people to sleep with one eye open, and to have a revolver or shot gun near at hand.

Lady travelers will greatly appreciate a new foot rest which has been introduced into some of the cars on the Boston & Albany Railroad. The ordinary rest answers very well for the majority of men, but for the average woman it is too far away. To obviate this difficulty, an additional iron rest has been attached to the ordinary foot bar, which extends far enough toward the seat to add materially to the comfort of the short-legged ones, while it can be slid back out of the way if not wanted. Only one of these rests is used in a seat, it being supposed that the male sex are satisfied with the old form. The railroad managers are also trying the experiment of upholstering some of their passenger cars in leather, a la smoking car, but are not likely to adopt this style of covering, as it does not look as well as plush, and soils much quicker.

The following probate court business for this part of the county was transacted at Springfield Tuesday: Administration granted on the estates of—Reuben F. Keith of Ludlow, Ira G. Potter administrator; David A. Hoag of Palmer, Jennie A. Hoag administratrix; Samuel D. Shaw of Palmer, S. S. Taft administrator. Wills approved of—Sophia Langway of Palmer, Joseph Langway executor; John S. Trumbull of Monson, Joshua Tracy executor. S. S. Taft of Palmer was appointed guardian of Lydia M. W. Tanner of Chicopee; and an account was filed on the estate of Julius P. Shaw, late of Palmer. An adjourned session of the court was held on Wednesday, when Alfred Blachfield of Brimfield was appointed guardian of James H. Blachfield, and the selectmen of Brimfield of George Parker. An account was rendered on the estate of Susannah P. Goodwell of Hampden, and by the guardians of George Parker of Brimfield. License was granted to Austin D. Fuller, guardian of Frank A. Fuller of Ludlow, to sell real estate, and permission for the resignation of guardianship of George Parker to Nathan F. Robinson of Brimfield.

The executive committee of the Improvement Association voted Monday evening to expend the money now in the treasury in erecting street signs. It was also voted to request the dramatic club to give an entertainment for the benefit of the association, and a committee was appointed to make arrangements for an oyster supper and social at an early day. This committee, consisting of A. H. Willis, C. B. Fisk, Mrs. A. H. Willis and Mrs. E. L. Davis, has decided to have the supper at the Congregational vestry next Wednesday evening, to be served from 6 to 8 o'clock. Contributions of scalloped or fried oysters, oyster pies, cake, crackers, bread and butter, pickles, milk, etc., are requested from every family in the village, and Mrs. E. Brown will call on all who will notify her, between 4 and 6 o'clock, Wednesday afternoon, and carry their contributions to the church. It is hoped there will be a generous response to this invitation, and also that our citizens will turn out and fill the vestry in the evening. The design of these entertainments is to bring our people together in a social way, make them better acquainted with each other, arouse and develop an interest in the beautifying of our village, and obtain the means to do this with. All must surely approve these objects, and should manifest their approval by their presence and contributions. Supper will be served for 25 cents, a price at which all can afford to attend.

LUDLOW.

James M. White has three very prolific sows. They gave birth to fifty-two pigs a few days since, and forty-one are living and doing nicely. One mother produced twenty-two. Who can beat that?

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Oliver E. Hines, who has made his home in the mountains of Colorado for the past two and one-half years, has returned home in first-class health. His idea of Indians now is that they are "dirty, treacherous red men," and "are used too well by the whites."

WALES.

Boys are now busy looking for chestnuts, which are scarce.

Wm. Lewis has purchased a building lot of E. Shaw, and is going to put up a new house and a grist mill.

Willis and Willie White have gone to Vermont on a ten days' visit. 'Tis said that the former will bring back a deacon's daughter, after having her name changed from Martin to White.

Geo. D. Henry has moved his stock and blacksmith tools to Fiskdale, where he will carry on business. His family still reside here. Mr. George, of Chester, Vt., succeeds him in business at Wales. Mr. G. has had large experience, and will endeavor to satisfy all.

WARREN.

W. J. Melvin, late editor of the Herald, has moved to Southbridge.

The Methodist society gave an oyster supper in Brigham's Hall Thursday evening.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met at Rev. Mr. Forbes' Wednesday afternoon.

The Methodists have chosen their lecturers for the course, and a large number of tickets have been taken.

Parker & Huckins will reopen the skating rink on the 15th inst., and will keep it open through the Winter.

Mr. Joyce has opened a restaurant in Blair's Block and keeps Barr's food, and also furnishes ice cream.

F. Drury, J. M. Mulcahy, S. Hamblett, B. F. Earle, T. R. Collins and J. S. Sedgely were the delegates from Warren to the Democratic State Convention at Worcester this week.

HAMPDEN.

Wednesday was a cold and blustering day. Stage driver Davis says in driving to Longmeadow he nearly froze his fingers. Ice was half an inch thick in tubs about dwellings.

The Democrats sent Decius Beebe and F. Dickinson to the State convention. P. E. Wall and Clark Goodwill will go to the County and Senatorial conventions, and Decius Beebe, Jr. and John McCarty to the Councilor convention.

E. M. Hitchcock, who has rented S. C. Spellman's store, has moved his family into the dwelling recently owned by Mrs. W. P. Spellman. He is remodeling his store considerably, and present appearances indicate a very neat drug store.

Your North Wilbraham correspondent two weeks since asked for Hampden's share of the Wilbraham (Glendale) scandal. We are not aware that Hampden is much tainted, but if the correspondent thinks otherwise, he is at liberty to "sail in" and "speak out in meeting."

The Lacowsic Mill has stopped for repairs. It will probably be ten days or two weeks before it will start up, as the repairs are more extensive as they commence taking down. They are putting in steam pipes from the mill to warm their buildings and office on the opposite side of the road.

MONSON.

California Minstrels at Central Hall tonight.

Hopson & Hall will open a skating rink in Central Hall next month.

Subscriptions to the Garfield monument fund will be received at the post office.

W. M. Peck opened the fox hunting season last Saturday, killing one, wounding another, and "holing" a third.

A. D. Ellis's new house is ready for the plasterers. Its novel architecture and sightly location attract for it much attention.

Amasa King, Albert Norcross and Austin Newell, old and respected citizens, are seriously ill, and not expected to recover.

Chas. T. Hale, a workman on the new library building, fell last Monday from roof to cellar, some 30 feet, and received serious injuries, but is recovering.

A gang of 24 men belonging to the Rapid Transit Telegraph Co. have their headquarters at Green's Hotel, and are now establishing their line between Brimfield and Monson.

The library association held their annual election of officers last Monday evening, with the following result: President, Geo. E. Fuller; vice president, A. A. Gage; treasurer, S. F. Cushman; secretary, F. E. Morris; director for five years, C. R. Dudley.

Geo. L. Keeney, of So. Manchester, Conn., has bought the drug store of John M. Phipps, and has already taken possession. Mr. Keeney has had charge of the drug department of Cheney Bros'. large store at So. Manchester, and is perfectly familiar with the business. Mr. Phipps proposes to leave town soon, and engage in business elsewhere. Being prominent in masonic, musical and educational circles, his loss will be quite severely felt.

Hon. David Burt of Northfield, Minn., who died on the 23d ult., was a native and former reident of this town, and we clip from the St. Cloud Journal-Press the following tribute to his memory: "In the decease of the Hon. David Burt, late Superintendent of Public Instruction, the schools of the State have lost one of their most loyal supporters, and society has lost a member in sympathy with every worthy interest. His fidelity and perseverance in labor during years of great physical debility have shown him to be a man of remarkable nerve and energy, and reveal the secret of his success in overcoming obstacles of poverty and discouragement, and attaining eminence as a minister of the Gospel and as an educator. He was of English descent, his father, John Burt, having been an English machinist in Monson, Mass. Mr. Burt was born in that town in 1822, and was therefore 59 years of age at the time of his decease. His early history was, like that of many others, one of privation, self-support and hard work. He began Latin and algebra in the district school, taught school Winters, prepared for college in 1843 at Wilbraham Academy, graduated at Oberlin College, Ohio, in 1847, entered Andover Theological Seminary, Mass., and graduated in 1851. After four years of service as a Congregational minister, his health was impaired by bronchitis and severe hemorrhages. In May, 1858, he came to Winona, and was successively pastor of the Congregational church of that city, Superintendent of city schools, and member of the Prudential Board of the State Normal School. In 1866 he was appointed by Gen. Howard on the staff of Gen. C. B. Irish, Commissioner of the Freedman's Bureau at Nashville, Tenn. The climate proving unfavorable, he resigned and returned to this State in 1868. In 1870 he was appointed Superintendent of Schools of Winona county, and in 1875 received the appointment of State Superintendent of Public Instruction, in which capacity he served until his resignation in August last. His influence in the several departments of education tended to harmonize all by a spirit of mutual confidence, and the highest testimony to the success of his labor is the general prosperity of all our schools and the hearty support that is afforded them by the people. His last days were given to a peaceful waiting for the Messenger who should soon close his record in time and introduce him to the scenes and realities of eternity. For twelve years he had done his work from day to day in the very presence of his final victor, consumption; yet with conscientious devotion to duty and with the clear conviction of a future blessedness, he fought boldly for life, and used his strength with such economy that he did the work of a much stronger man. His labor is ended, but his works shall follow him, and his memory shall long be green in the hearts of those who have so long known him, to honor and to love him."

WARE AND VICINITY.

J. H. Storrs has sold the foundry property to S. A. Corsar.

W. B. Lawton lost a large lot of brick by having them frozen.

Henry Utley has returned from Dexter, Iowa, where he has been for nearly two years past.

Miss Mary D. Sagendorph, eldest daughter of P. H. Sagendorph, has returned the past week from California, where she has been for the past four years, having graduated from the celebrated Mills Seminary.

At a meeting of the Womens' Christian Temperance Union held on Thursday, Mrs. F. D. Winslow and Mrs. L. M. Hills were chosen delegates to attend the State union, to be held at Chelsea, Oct. 13 and 14.

A few of the new books to be put in circulation at the library next Monday are: "Lossing's History of the Civil War," 3 vols.; "Young Folks' History of America;" "The Exiles," a Russian story; "On the Threshold;" "Sunset Land;" "The Foreigner in China;" "The Young Miner," by Horatio Alger, Jr.; "Out West," by Oliver Optic.

The first frost of the season came on Tuesday night, and then there was no frost, but a regular freeze. Ice formed ¼ of an inch thick, the ground was frozen, and icicles formed on the fountain basin in Nenemeseck Square, 15 inches in length, where they remained through the day on Wednesday, which was about as uncomfortable a day to be out as we see in mid-winter.

We have received a most interesting letter from a former resident of Ware, now stopping in Toronto, Canada, giving a touching description of the expressions of sympathy in this foreign city for our nation's sorrow, arising from hearts that beat in unison with our people. All places of business were closed last week Monday from 2 to 4 o'clock, and the bells were tolled in all the churches and fire districts. The memorial service was held in the Metropolitan church, all the clergy of the city being present. The words spoken were in the highest praise of the worth and character of our late President. The audience, numbering thousands, filled the vast building to overflowing, and the decorations and floral tributes were most magnificent.

S. F. Stebbins of Holyoke, agent of the Holyoke Machine Co. for the past 11 years, was instantly killed by the cars in that city last Saturday forenoon. His horse was frightened by some approaching freight cars and ran across the track. Mr. Stebbins jumped from the buggy, but his feet caught in the reins, and he was thrown directly in front of the cars, which passed over him, crushing his head and mutilating his body. Mr. Stebbins was an energetic, thorough-going business man, a warm-hearted and true friend, and a worthy citizen, whose death is a real loss to the community, and will be mourned by a large circle of friends. He leaves a widow, who has for some time occupied a prominent position in the city charitable work.

Another Jennie Cramer case was brought to light near Albion, N. Y., last Sunday morning, by the discovery of the body of a beautiful young woman in the canal, her head badly cut, and her clothing put on in a way that showed it was done by bungling hands. An autopsy received the fact that death was not caused by drowning, and it is supposed that she died from taking arsenic, as a letter was found upon her indicating the fact, and accusing one Fred Hopkins of having deserted her. The girl, whose name is Nellie Wright, and who belonged in Millville, was also found to be enceinte. Hopkins has been arrested. He says she left him on the morning of the 29th ult., and he had not seen her since.

The question of the future petroleum supply is growing more and more interesting to Pennsylvanians. Regions once spouting out abundantly are now strewn with ruined derricks over wells pumped dry. New sources of supply have hitherto been readily found in place of the drained reservoirs, but now the great Pennsylvania oil sponge appears to be nearly squeezed. The Bradford region in McKean County, for instance, which pumps 60,000 barrels daily, and is the petroleum centre of the State, steadily failed during the month of August at the average rate of 2500 barrels daily.

Work in the Consolidated Virginia Mine of the "Comstock lode" is now being prosecuted 3000 feet, or a little more than half a mile below the surface. The miners have reached the "infernal regions," where it is so hot that tons of ice are daily introduced to reduce the temperature. It is estimated that it requires eighty pounds per day to sustain each man, and that even under those conditions forces must neccessarily often relieve each other.

An interesting story comes from Erie, Pa., of how Frank Dodson and Ellen Bailey, a runaway couple, being pursued through that town by the bride's father, married themselves in the street by calling witnesses to hear their mutual agreement to take each other, and that a magistrate decided the marriage was legal.

The theological faculty of Yale College has decided to use the revised version of the New Testament, voting it "better than any other English version, because it follows more exactly the Greek text as originally written, and is a more clear and correct translation."

A quarrel over a small sum of money at Barnet, Vt., the other day, resulted in William Morgan, a young man, coming to blows with an old man named Marchant. Morgan received injuries which caused his death in a few hours.

John C. Putnam of Springfield died last Sunday from hydrophobia, the symptoms being very clearly marked, though he had not been bitten by any dog, he said, for over 20 years. He had been bitten by three dogs at different times, more than 20 years ago, but did not know that any of them were mad. He did not feel well last Saturday, and in the evening some watermelon juice trickling on his hand threw him into convulsions, which continued until his death.

At the October meeting of the trustees of the New York suspension bridge, the other day, the fact was brought to light that 1000 tons of steel would be required to finish the structure, in addition to the quantity already contracted for, which had been supposed to be sufficient. It was expected last spring that the bridge would be ready for use by the first of next year, but this blunder will delay the opening for some months.

Jacob Whitmore and his wife, both young and recently married, went into the woods near Huntsville, O., last week Friday, to gather nuts. In the evening Mrs. Whitmore died in convulsions. Before death she said that her husband, with a drawn knife, had forced her to take poison, but he asserts that she took it voluntarily. She was but 16 years old.

President Garfield's body was transferred at Cleveland Wednesday night to an air-tight casket make of sheet bronze, with gold trimmings and a solid gold plate on the top. The town of Madison, Neb., was almost entirely demolished by a tornado on the 29th ult., which also did much damage in the vicinity of Emporia, Kan. Several lives were lost. On Sunday a good deal of property was destroyed in Knox county, Ohio, by a severe gale.

An oil train of fifteen cars caught fire just west of Port Jervis, on the Erie Railroad, Wednesday afternoon, and all traffic was suspended several hours. The tanks exploded one after another, and no one dared to approach until the entire train was in ashes.

Caleb F. Harris and wife of Providence were drowned in Moosehead Lake Sunday night. They were riding in a canoe, without an experienced guide, and becoming alarmed by a little water which was shipped Mrs. Harris tipped the canoe over.

A judge at Erie, Pa., has just decided that Spiritualism is a religion, and its exponents are entitled to all the privileges enjoyed by ministers. A medium who had been arrested for giving exhibitions without a license was accordingly discharged.

New Books, Etc.

We have received from the publishers, Messrs. O. Ditson & Co., of Boston, a copy of the Herald of Praise, a new book for choirs and singing classes, by L. O. Emerson, the well-known author. Probably most choir leaders will feel curiosity enough to obtain and look over a copy of Mr. Emerson's last book. He has a very happy tact at providing music, sacred and secular, exactly fitted to the times, and to popular demand. This is done without any sacrifice of true musical taste and refinement, and his sacred music books, especially, have probably sold far in excess of any others, except, it may be, the earlier works of Dr. Lowell Mason. The Herald of Praise includes a compact chart or description of musical notation, a multitude of new and fresh easy vocal pieces, sacred and secular, for practice of the notes; this part, in fact, constituting an acceptable easy glee and chorus book, a grand collection of new hymn tunes and anthems, and a number of well-chosen pieces for concerts. We all know that new books for choirs, every year or two, used to be a necessity. Although the "chorus choir" seemed for a number of years likely to be numbered with the things of the past, it is now reviving in excellent form, and will, doubtless, appreciate the excellent material of the Herald of Praise. Price $1.00.

Throw off that despondent spirit, crush that feeling of despair, be cheerful, happy and well. Take Simmons Liver Regulator. It is no humbug; its virtues can be proved by hundreds right here at home. Examine the certificates. It has cured the worst cases of dropsy, dyspepsia, and prevents chills, fever, &c.

"I have been a dyspeptic for years; began to use the Simmons Liver Regulator two years ago; it has acted like a charm in my case. Rev. J. C. Holmes, Clayton, Alabama."

The beauty and color of the hair may be safely regained by using Parker's Hair Balsam, which is much admired for its perfume, cleanliness and dandruff eradicating properties. o

Wei De Meyer's Catarrh Cure is unquestionably the result of the most important discovery for the relief of human suffering, since vaccination. It is a constitutional remedy by absorption—an absolute cure at any stage. Supplied by druggists, or delivered by D. B. Dewey & Co., Agents, 46 Dey St., N. Y., for $1 a package. Pamphlets, with full explanations and overwhelming proofs, mailed free. o

Have Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry always at hand. It cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Consumption and all Throat and Lung Complaints. 50 cents and $1 a bottle. †

The Peruvian Syrup has cured thousands who were suffering from Dyspepsia, Debility, Liver Complaint, Boils, Humors, Female Complaints, etc. Pamphlets sent free to any address. Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston. †

Castoria.—For sour stomach, constipation, and fretfulness of children. Pleasant, safe and cheap. 900 drops; 35 doses, 35 cents.

Ash-Tonic.—A perfected purifier of the system. In ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y41

How to Secure Health.—It seems strange that any one will suffer from derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization. It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the Best Blood Purifier ever discovered, effectually curing scrofula, syphylitic disorders, weakness of the kidneys, erysipelas, malaria; all nervous disorders and debility, bilious complaints and all diseases indicating an impure condition of the blood, liver, kidneys, stomach, skin, etc. It corrects digestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it Acts like a Charm, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

Baker's Pain Panacea cures pain in man and beast. For use externally and internally.

Dr. Roger's Vegetable Worm Syrup instantly destroys worms and removes the secretions which cause them.

Centaur Liniment.—Invaluable to families and owners of horses. For sale everywhere.

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. Dr. Swayne's Ointment is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Colton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—Hampden ss. Supreme Judicial Court. September Term, 1881. Agnes S. Felton, Lib. v. David N. Felton.
DIVORCE.
In the above entitled libel for divorce, it is now ordered that a decree of divorce from the bonds of matrimony be entered in favor of the said Agnes S. Felton, for the cause of the adultery of the said David N. Felton, to be made absolute on application of either party to the clerk of the court, after the expiration of six months from the entry of this decree, upon compliance with the terms thereof, unless the court has, for sufficient cause, on application of any party interested, otherwise ordered.
And the libellant is required to publish as soon as may be, an attested copy of this order in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed in Palmer, in said county of Hampden, once a week, for six successive weeks; that all persons interested may, within said six months, show cause, if any they have, why said decree should not be made absolute. "I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHAS. MASON, Commissioner of Patents."
"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."
Boston, October 19, 1870.
R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: You procured for me, in 1840, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you. Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

Maid of Boston.

Maid of Boston, ere we part
Shall I treat you to a tart?

Youth of Somerville, O, no;
Tarts to-night I cannot go.

Maid of Boston, tell me true,
Will you have an oyster stew?

Youth of Somerville, no stew
Shall I take to-night from you.

Wilt have the toothsome bivalve, tell,
Raw, served upon the demi-shell?

Fancy shell, stew nor half-shell
Crave I; therefore youth, farewell.

There's yet one dish within my means,
Say, will you have a plate of beans?

A plate of beans! Well, I should smile!
For that I've waited all this while.

O, clasp me closely to your jacket,
At last you've tumbled to the racket.

—Somerville Journal.

ONE CAUSE OF ILL HEALTH.

I asked a druggist what particular article or line of goods he sold most of. He replied without hesitation, "Compounds for improving the complexion."

The number of these preparations is surprising. They must be generally employed. I have noticed, that while nine girls out of ten have a singularly smooth, perfect skin upon the face, the doctor is constantly consulted with reference to roughness and eruptions upon other parts of their persons. Girls are not generally as healthy as boys, but the skin of their faces seems much smoother and finer than that of boys.

This difference, it is fair to presume, comes from the bottles and boxes found at the apothecaries. I have read and you have all read, of the analyses which careful chemists have made of a great number of these preparations, and in this way we have learned that they are poisonous. Arsenic is a very common ingredient. Not one of them, the analysis of which I have examined, is fit to rub on the human skin. We all rejoice that the hair preparations so generally used to color the hair a few years since, have gone out of fashion. They poisoned us, doing a great deal of harm to the brain and nervous system. These preparations were generally less poisonous than the complexion fluids are, but were taken into the system in the same way, by absorption through the skin. The impression is gaining ground among medical men, that a certain class of nervous affections, too common among our girls, originate in the fluids and powders they employ to improve their complexion.

What a gain it would be every way, if they would keep their faces clear and bright by frequent bathing, exercise, sunshine and pure air! As things now go they are not what they seem; but if they would depend upon the natural methods, they would not only secure a bright beautiful face, but they would be bright and happy from top to toe, all the way through, and not simply on a small portion of the surface.—Dr. Dio Lewis.

FUNCTIONS OF THE NEWSPAPER.

The newspaper is, first of all, a business enterprise. Publishers make newspapers to sell, just as hatters make hats or shoemakers make shoes. The newspaper is merchandise made to suit the market. Those buy it who wish it, and the buyers take their choice of the wares offered. Without this commercial value publication could not be sustained, and it would be as unwise as unjust not to take this fact into account. Newspaper makers, like other manufacturers, must consult popular tastes and market demand.

But the newspaper is also a public agent. It offers to the public, for pay, certain services, such as the advertisment of commodities, the announcement of public meetings, courts, elections and sales. On this work, as an advertising medium and public herald, it depends for much of its support.

These are private and personal aspects of the newspaper, and so far as these are concerned it is the private property and business affair of its publisher. But to count the newspaper as merely a business enterprise, and to reckon with it only as such, would insult the public intelligence as much as it would trifle with the public interests and rights. It assumes public functions and responsibilities which none but a public teacher can hold. We cannot absolve men from the duties attached to positions which they voluntarily occupy. But the press is the professed, if not paid, advocate of whatever set of opinions it publicly accepts. It offers its columns as sources of public information. It speaks in print, and, therefore, with a supposed deliberation, candor and honesty, such as men use under the most solemn circumstances. It is in this public character that it enters into the ranks of the world's teachers, and becomes a public educator.—Exchange.

What maintains one vice would bring up two children. A small leak will sink a great ship. Fools make feasts, and wise men eat them. Buy what thou hast no need of, and ere long thou shalt sell thy necessaries. At a great pennyworth pause awhile. Silks and satins, scarlet and velvets put out the kitchen fire. A ploughman on his legs is higher than a gentleman on his knees. Pride is as loud a beggar as want, and a great deal more saucy. It is hard for an empty sack to stand upright. Drink water, put the money in your pocket, and leave the dry bellyache in the punch-bowl. Pride breakfasted with Plenty, dined with Poverty, and supped with Infamy.—Benjamin Franklin.

Temptation is a fearful word. It indicates the beginning of a possible series of infinite evils. It is the ringing of an alarm bell, whose melancholy sounds may reverberate through eternity. Like the sudden, sharp cry of "fire!" in the night, it should rouse us to instantaneous activity, and brace every muscle to its highest tension.

Nearly all the ills that afflict mankind can be prevented and cured by keeping the stomach, liver and kidneys in perfect working order. There is no medicine known that will do this as quickly and surely, without interfering with duties, as Parker's Ginger Tonic. See advertisement. oc

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT

NECESSITATING A SURGICAL OPERATION—LOVING MOTHER ATTEMPTS TO TAKE A PAIR OF SHEARS FROM HER CHILD.

PARENTS BE CAREFUL.

Domestic accidents are common to women, and some of them are very serious. Mrs. Warner of South Rondout, Ulster Co., N. Y., some weeks ago attempted to take from her child a pair of shears with which it was playing. A slight struggle ensued, in which the point of the shears entered Mrs. Warner's left eye, entirely destroying the sight. Her family physician did what he could, but intensely painful inflammation arose, which, by sympathy, threatened the loss of the other eye. Total blindness to a woman having the care of a household is an irretrievable calamity. In this strait Mrs. W. applied to the well-known and skillful surgeon, Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who removed the injured eye by a very successful operation, setting aside all danger of further harm to the sight of the other eye. But, owing to pain and mental distress, her system needed a tonic and restorative medicine. To do this work the doctor prescribed "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which sustained its reputation and laid a sure foundation of health.

DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY" removes all impurities from the blood, regulates the liver and kidneys. Cures constipation, and all diseases and weaknesses peculiar to females. It is for sale by all druggists at ONE DOLLAR a bottle. 1m22

CARTER'S IRON PILLS

—FOR THE—

BLOOD, NERVES AND COMPLEXION.

We recommend CARTER'S IRON PILLS to every woman who is weak, nervous and discouraged; particularly those who have thin, pale lips, cold hands and feet, and who are without strength or ambition. These Pills quiet the nerves, give strength to the body, induce refreshing sleep, enrich and improve the quality of the blood, and purify and brighten the complexion. They cure palpitation of the heart, nervousness, tremblings, nervous headache, leucorrhœa, pains in the back, and other forms of female weakness. Remember that Iron is one of the constituents of the blood, and is the great tonic. CARTER'S IRON PILLS are also valuable for men who are troubled with nervous weakness, night sweats, &c. In metal boxes, at 50 CENTS. Sold by all druggists, or sent by mail. Address

PROTECTION FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE, INTERMITTENT FEVER, GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER, LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER, NAUSEA, ARE THE

PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use. If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Prepared only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS

Are the mildest ever known, they cure Headache, Malarial Disease, Biliousness and Indigestion.

The Difference.

Two little words were adrift,
In the boundless space of time,
One was gloomy, chill and harsh—
The other was soft and kind.

The kind word went to the poor man's door;
It entered his lonely cot;
It left a peace and a gladness there
That brightened the humble spot.

It entered a prison-cell;
It spoke to the convict there;
It eased the load on his troubled soul,
And lightened his dull despair.

The kind word came to the sinning soul,
And whispered in accents sweet,
Till the weary one, with repentant heart,
Laid her sins at her Saviour's feet.

It entered the palace and cot—
The darkened and sad sick room—
And wherever it went its presence bright
Dispersed its chill and gloom.

The harsh word went on its gloomy way,
Through palace, and prison, and cot,
And wherever it passed it left a spell
That was never—no, never—forgot.

It darkened the convict's soul
With the blackness of mad despair;
It hardened the woman's sin-stained heart
As its venom entered there.

Two words came floating in
To the Great White Judgment Throne,
And sentence was passed on them then and there;
They were judged by their deeds alone.

Each day of our mortal lives
We are sending our words afloat.
Shall they happiness, gladness and joy increase,
Or sin and sorrow promote?

TRUE LOVE ASSERTS ITSELF.

She was the proudest woman I ever knew. Poor and proud, this Kathleen Langley; but the adopted child of a very wealthy aunt, she had never felt the chilly blasts of poverty; probably never would, since now she was the betrothed wife of Arthur Fanshawe, and his name was good for a million.

I had been Kathleen's intimate friend and chosen companion ever since our schooldays; to me, there never had been so true and dear a friend.

But I could not shut my eyes to her besetting sin, pride. In vain I had argued with her, lectured her on its evils. She had always listened patiently, but with a sarcastic gleam in her brown eyes, and when I had finished she would lay her head on my knee and smile up into my face mischievously.

"Dear old mentor," she would say, "it is no use. Pride was the sole heritage left me; and though it wreck all my happiness, I cannot conquer it."

One day she came to my side and held up one white finger encircled by a costly diamond ring.

In answer to my startled look of inquiry, she said slowly, as though it pained her—

"It is Arthur Fanshawe's ring, cherie; I have promised to be his wife."

Arthur Fanshawe, the blase man of the world; a cynic, a sceptic, everything hard and unnatural. To throw away her youth and beauty, and purity upon Arthur Fanshawe! It was a cruel thing.

"Oh, Kathie," I cried, "tell me it is not true! You do not love him—I know it. Why, then, oh, why do you make this sacrifice?"

Her red lip curled scornfully.

"There are a million reasons," she answered bitterly.

Then she went away, and when I saw her again she was in the midst of a gay group, lovely in her glittering ball dress, and Arthur Fanshawe was at her side, his hard, cold eyes lighted with the frosty gleams of a selfish love, his engagement to the fair New York belle publicly announced.

I knew then that the match had been of her Aunt Langley's making. That her ambition for her beautiful niece had at last attained the height of a wealthy marriage and that to induce Kathleen to submit she had contrived to make her realize her dependence. And Kathleen, feeling herself a burden on her bounty, grew

"Weary of eating another's bread
And toiling up and down another's stairs."

Her pride had carried her through, and she had consented to the sacrifice.

Soon after, Mrs. Langley projected a trip to Florida, and begged me to accompany her and Kathleen; Mr. Fanshawe, of course, was to follow.

We arrived at our destination, a romantic little town in the last stages of dilapidation.

We settled ourselves in a long, rambling cottage near the loveliest lake in the world, and enjoyed the semi-tropical climate to our heart's content.

We had not been there three days when Kathleen appeared one morning, in the room where I was sitting with her aunt over our fancy-work, looking charmingly in a short costume with wide sun hat and gauntleted gloves.

"I'm going to learn to row, auntie, if you have no great objection," she began, gaily.

"Who in the world is going to teach you?"

Kathleen glanced through the long French window to the shore but a few rods away, where a tiny boat lay moored and a masculine figure lounged back among the cushions, lazily puffing a good cigar.

"Oh, I don't know his name," she laughed scornfully. "One of the aborigines here! I have engaged his service at so much an hour, and for the rest, as Mr. Toots would say, it is of no consequence, auntie."

"I trust Mr. Fanshawe approves," began her aunt.

"I am not Mr. Fanshawe's property as yet," suggested Kathleen; and before another remark could be proffered, she was out of the house, down the path, and off in the direction of the lake shore.

The boating lessons seemed to take up a great deal of her time and attention after that; but I never chanced to get a nearer view of her teacher, and judging him by others of the native inhabitants whom I had met, I felt little interest in the unknown.

"Come, ladies," said Mr. Fanshawe, one day, "let us go out on the lake; I have a boat engaged, and waiting your service."

We did not require a second invitation, and soon we gathered on the beach, where the lake spread out before us its broad, unruffled bosom, its green, cool lily-pads, and over all the blue, cloudless sky of a Florida midwinter, with the sun, like a great untwinkling eye, staring lazily down upon us.

"Miss Langley," said a voice near us, a low, rich, sweet voice, like liquid music, "I beg your pardon for intruding, but that boat is unsafe. She has been for some time out of repair. I fear you will meet with an accident if you go out in her."

A young man stood at Kathleen's side—a tall, slender man, with a face like a picture, with great, slumberous dark eyes, and a nameless grace and fascination about him. But his dress was coarse and common, and his hands were embrowned with toil.

With that wonderful face and a figure like some rare old statue, he was only a fisherman after all!

Kathleen's face was flushed, and she glanced up timidly. But before she could say a word Mr. Fanshawe turned upon the intruder with a cool stare of insolence.

"What do you mean?" he demanded. "How dare you interfere in my affairs, sir?"

The young man raised his hat with a graceful bow.

"My name is Sanford," he said, quietly, "Ray Sanford. I live a mile above the beach. I am accustomed to the lake; I spend half my time upon it. I know all the boats; the one you have chosen is unworthy. If you go out in her you will certainly be drowned."

He put on his hat and walked away without another word. He was proud, too; it was easy to see that.

I glanced at Kathleen. She did not see me; her eyes were bent upon the graceful figure, in its coarse dress, moving away down the shining sands.

I saw her clench her hands and set her teeth together, then her gaze encountered mine, and then starting slightly she forced a smile.

"Are you ready, ladies?"

Arthur Fanshawe's voice broke the silence.

"Are you going in the boat?" inquired Kathleen.

"To be sure. I am not foolish enough to pay any heed to the croakings of yonder clodhopper. I'll teach him that I, too, understand managing a boat if I do not spend half my time on the lake."

"You are careless in your epithets, Mr. Fanshawe," observed Kathleen, frigidly—"mistaken likewise. Mr. Sanford is a gentleman."

"You have the honor of his acquaintance, it seems."

Kathleen's eyes flashed, but she controlled her anger.

"He taught me to row," she answered, and said no more.

But she said enough to set me to thinking.

Well, we yielded to the ruling power; and soon seated in the pretty boat were dancing merrily over the water, far away and soon out of sight of land.

It was a perfect day, and full of life and gayety we had forgotten all about young Sanford's warning, when suddenly there was a low exclamation of horror from Kathleen:

"The boat is filling with water! I do believe we are sinking!"

It was too true!

The boat leaked at every seam; the water was pouring in; soon we would be beyond the reach of human aid.

I shall never forget that hour as long as I live!

Fanshawe, livid with fear, crouched in the bow of the boat and uttered never a word.

Mrs. Langley wrung her hands and alternately shrieked and moaned—now praying, and now her voice drowned in a storm of sobs and tears.

Kathleen sat like a statue of stone, her hands folded, her eyes bent on a spot far away.

On we drifted. The boat was rapidly filling; it was more than half full.

I crept to Kathleen and put my arms around her.

"Kathie—Kathie!" I cried, "we must die! Is it not dreadful?"

"There are worse fates on earth," she answered, her pale lips scarcely seeming to move, and still her brown eyes watched that tiny speck as it grew large; a man in a boat—a man bending all his energies to meet us.

A strange smile touched Kathleen's lips.

"Ray," she muttered, as though she had forgotten our presence, "Ray, I knew you would come!"

It was indeed Ray Sanford, and he was rowing with the strength of a giant and the energy of a man determined to win or die.

He reached us at last—not a second too soon. I aroused Mrs. Langley from a fit of incoherent sobbing and ejaculating, and pointed to our rescuer.

He stood up in his boat and had Kathleen in his arms in an instant. Then he turned to Mrs. Langley and me. Fanshawe followed us, and soon we were all safe in his boat—saved from a dreadful death!

Not a word was spoken during the long run home. Kathleen never looked at Ray; she seemed unconscious of his presence.

When we reached the shore she dropped from the boat unassisted, as though she did not see the young man's proffered arm.

Fanshawe, safe on shore, was himself again. Turning to Sanford, he took a bank note from his pocket and tendered it to the young man.

"Here," said he, in a cold, insulting tone, "you've helped us out of a scrape; allow me to—"

But he never finished. Ray Sanford struck the money from his hand, and then without a word strode off down the shining beach. After that we saw him no more.

The time for our departure for home drew nigh.

Kathleen had grown pale and thin during these days. Her eyes were unnaturally bright, and her cheeks wore a hectic flush—there was something wrong about Kathleen.

It was the evening before our intended departure, and we two walked alone on the beach.

The sun was setting, dropping slowly down its golden ladder into fleecy cloud banks of scarlet and amber; up and down we paced, neither of us speaking. So the sun set and the twilight gathered.

Suddenly the form of a man rose before us in the gray twilight. He came straight up to Kathleen, and held up both his hands.

She laid both her own within them. There was a sweet smile on her lips; her eyes were luminous.

"Is it good-by?" she said, softly.

"Never!" he cried fiercely. "Tell me, Kathleen, is it true, are you going to marry that man—that Fanshawe?"

A sneering laugh fell upon our ears—Fanshawe stood beside us.

"A pretty scene!" he sneered. "A flirtation between my betrothed wife and a common fisherman."

With a face like marble and eyes like flashing diamonds, Kathleen slipped her engagement ring from her finger and laid it in Arthur Fanshawe's hand, saying coldly:

"I have worn it too long, Mr. Fanshawe!"

Ere Fanshawe could recover from his amazement, Ray Sanford spoke:

"And who told you, Mr. Fanshawe, that I was but a common fisherman? Not that I attach any ignomy to the vocation, which has been followed by some of the noblest and grandest heroes of earth; but unfortunately I have no claim to the title. I am merely passing a few months on the Florida coast roughing it, that I might regain the health and strength which had unaccountably deserted me. I leave soon for my home in the north. You have heard of Hugh Sanford of Boston?"

"A merchant prince!" ejaculated Fanshawe, beginning to move away.

"He is my father," said Ray Sanford, coolly, and bending over Kathleen, who stood clinging to me, he continued, while Fanshawe slunk on through the evening shadows—

"Kathleen, say you forgive me my unintentional deception. I had known you a week or more before I realized the full extent of my guilt. Forgive me, for I love you so!"

Her head was on his shoulder, his arm around her. They had forgotten all about me, and I went home alone.

An hour later Kathleen came to my side, her eyes shining like stars.

"You'll be my bridesmaid, cherie," she whispered, kissing me with tears in her eyes. "I'm the happiest little woman alive! And the best of it is I loved him just as well when I thought him a poor fisherman as I do now that I know he is of a wealthy and aristocratic family. I tell you, cherie (another kiss), pride is a very good thing in its place, but true love is always and ever the best."

SEVERE DROUGHTS.

An interesting record is that of severe droughts as far back as the landing of the Pilgrims. How many thousand times are observations made like the following: "Such a cold season!" "Such a hot season!" "Such dry weather!" or "Such wet weather!" "Such high winds or calms!" etc., etc. All those who think that the dry spell we had last spring was the longest ever known will do well to read the following:

In the summer of 1621, 24 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1630, 41 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1657, 75 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1662, 80 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1674, 45 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1680, 81 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1694, 62 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1705, 40 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1715, 45 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1728, 61 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1730, 92 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1741, 72 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1749, 108 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1755, 42 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1762, 123 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1773, 80 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1791, 82 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1802, 23 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1812, 28 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1856, 24 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1871, 42 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1875, 26 days in succession without rain.

In the summer of 1876, 27 days in succession without rain.

It will be seen that the longest drought that ever occurred in America was in the summer of 1762. No rain fell from the first of May to the first of September, making 123 days without rain. Many of the inhabitants sent to England for hay and grain.

"I'LL PAY YOU FOR THAT."

A hen trod on a duck's foot. She did not mean to do it, and it did not hurt much. But the duck said, "I'll pay you for that."

So the duck flew at the hen; but, as she did so, her wing struck an old goose who stood close by.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the goose, and she flew at the duck; but, as she did so, her foot tore the fur of a cat who was just then in the yard.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the cat, and she flew at the goose; but as she did so, her tail brushed the eyes of a sheep that was near.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the sheep, and he ran at the cat; but as he did so, his foot hit the foot of a dog who lay in the sun.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he ran at the sheep; but as he did so, his leg struck an old cow who stood by the gate.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried she, and she ran at the dog; but, as she did so, her horn grazed the skin of a horse who stood by a tree.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he ran at the cow.

What a run there was! The horse flew at the cow, and the cow at the dog, and the dog at the cat, and the cat at the goose, and the goose at the duck, and the duck at the hen. What a noise they made, to be sure!

"Hi, hi! What is all this?" cried the man who had the care of them. "I cannot have this noise! You may stay here," he said to the hen.

But he drove the duck to the pond, and the goose to the field, and the cat to the barn, and the sheep to her fold, and the dog to the house, and the cow to her yard, and the horse to his stall.

"I'll pay you for that!" said the man.

"Papa, didn't you beat me once for biting little Tommy?"—"Yes, my child: you hurt him much."—"Well then, papa, you ought to whip sister's music master too; he bit sister yesterday afternoon right on the lip, and I knew it hurt her, because she put her arms around his neck and tried to choke him."

A little girl was told not to ask for anything to eat when she went visiting. The next time she went she sat quietly for a long time, and finally said: "I promised not to ask for anything; but when are you going to give me something?"

This is the latest Western form of saying a man was hanged: "He was unaminously chosen by a convention of six property-holders to jump from a new pine platform into the sweet subsequently."

Old proverb: "The darkey's hour is just before dawn," remarked Sambo, when he started out before daybreak to steal a young chicken for breakfast.

Put Down the Brakes.

No matter how well the track is laid,
No matter how strong the engine is made,
When you find it running on a downward grade,
Put down the brakes.

If the demon drink has entered your soul,
And his power is getting beyond your control
And dragging you down to a terrible goal,
Put down the brakes.

Remember the adage, "Don't trifle with fire;"
Temptation you know is always a liar;
If you want to crush out the burning desire
Put down the brakes.

Are you running in debt by living too fast?
Do you look back with shame on a profitless past,
And feel that your ruin is coming at last?
Put down the brakes.

Whether for honor, for knowledge or gain
You are fast wearing out your body and brain
Till nature no longer can bear the strain,
Put down the brakes.

THE WHITE HOUSE.

Its corner-stone was laid Oct. 13, 1792, under the superintendence of Captain James Hobon, an Irish architect direct from Dublin, who accepted the award of $500 (then thought to be a large amount) for the design. He is buried in the Catholic cemetery at Washington, and his descendants still live in that city.

The British destroyed the building in the year 1814, but it was rebuilt by Captain Hobon, and was first opened for the reception of visitors on Jan. 1, 1818.

The portico of four lofty columns, on the north side, was added in 1829, during the administration of President Jackson.

It is a lofty building, two stories in height, with a frontage of one hundred and eighty-five feet. The vestibule within the front door is fifty feet long, by forty feet wide.

The famous East room, which was finished fifty years ago, is eighty feet long, forty feet wide and twenty-two feet high. Eight large mirrors and three chandeliers, of crystal and silver, adorn the room. The walls are covered with gray paper, and the furniture is velvet. With the exception of our public halls, it is the largest in the country, and, for its size, is certainly the handsomest.

The President's office, which is on the second story, and which is the cabinet-room also, is not very large. It is thirty-five or forty feet long and thirty-five or forty feet wide, with a ceiling about twenty feet high. In the middle of the floor is a long table, surrounded by leather seated chairs; long lambrequin curtains of a dark, bluish gray color adorn the windows, and the carpet is of a red tint, with large figures, and a large map of the United States on the wall.

Washington is a Government creation, and the White House is chiefly memorable on account of the men who have lived in it. Every one of our Presidents except Washington has resided in this famous house.

The original cost of this building in 1792 was about $335,000, and the total cost up to this time is about $1,800,000.—Golden Days.

PREMATURE READING.

When I was young, I remember my father, from a conscientious feeling, I suppose, that he ought to do something positive for my mental and moral good, and general æsthetic cultivation, made me learn Pope's "Messiah" by heart, and a number of other masterpieces of the same character. He might just as well have tried to feed a sucking babe on roast beef and Scotch ale! Without understanding a word of it I learned the "Messiah" by rote, and I have hated it, and its authur too, from that day to this, and I hate them now. So I also remember well when I was a boy from ten to fourteen—for I was a considerable devourer of books—being incited to read Hume's "History of England," and Robertson's "Charles V." and Gibbon's "Rome" even, and I am not sure I might not add Mitford's "Greece." I can't now say it was time thrown away; but it was almost that. The first thing in trying to stimulate a love for reading is to be careful not to create disgust by trying to do too much. The great masterpieces of human research, and eloquence, and fancy, are to boys pure nuisances. They can't understand them; they can't appreciate them if they do. When they have grown up to them, and are ready for them, they will come to them of their own accord. Meanwhile, you can't well begin too low down. The intellectual, like the physical food of children, can't well be too simple, provided only it is healthy and nourishing.—Charles F. Adams, Jr.

On the 14th ult. President Garfield was permitted to sit by the window, while Mrs. Garfield was in the adjoining room. Love, hope and gratitude filled her heart, and she sang the beautiful hymn commencing—

"Guide me, O thou Great Jehovah!"

As the soft and plaintive notes floated into the sick chamber the President turned his eyes to Dr. Bliss and asked:

"Is that Crete?"

"Yes," replied the doctor, "it is Mrs. Garfield."

"Quick, open the door a little," anxiously responded the sick man.

Dr. Bliss opened the door, and after listening a few moments Mr. Garfield exclaimed, as the large tears coursed down his sunken cheeks:

"Glorious, Bliss! isn't it?"

Money is "the best gift" which most men earnestly court, but money is a curse to its possessor unless he has learned how to get it, how to keep it and how to use it. Money is a means to an end; only as it passes current through the benevolences as well as through the trades and manufactures does it yield its true increase.—Rev. Daniel Dorchester.

We hold reunions, not for the dead, for there is nothing in all the earth that you and I can do for the dead. They are past our help and past our praise. We can add to them no glory—we can give to them no immortality. They do not need us, but forever and forevermore we need them.—James A. Garfield.

"Why does the penny fall to the ground quicker than the feather, my son?" "The air takes the feather, the cent is so heavy it goes right in." "Could they both be made to fall at the same time?" "Yes, tie them together."

A recent writer relates of Russian peasants that in some parts of the country they take the weekly vapor bath, which plays an important part in their lives, in the household oven where the bread is baked.

Wood burns because it has the proper stuff in it; and a man becomes famous because he has the proper stuff in him.—Goethe.

There is a Methodist editor out West who knows about how it is. He says: "If our paper was about as large as the mainsail of a three-thousand-ton ship, we could probably publish one-half of the ponderous documents we get. Just now comes about a half acre of printed matter with a request to publish. We may have time to read it when we get to Heaven. Earth and time are limited. For pity's sake, if you have anything to say, say it without going back to the pre-Adamites. We are delayed once a week with everlasting stupidities from all manner of semi-benevolences. We have just disemboweled one of these, and put six columns in one inch of space."

An eminent geologist is firm in the belief that the so-called meteoric stones from time to time cast upon the surface of our globe are thrown from other planets by volcanic eruptions. If this theory be true, then it must be accepted as a fact that these planets are not inhabited. Bootjacks, shaving mugs, chunks of coal, porter bottles and other missiles would also be cast upon our earth if life was the same there as here. When a man heaves a bootjack at a cat he infuses enough strength into his arm to send the missile into a neighboring planet, and Mars must be thickly strewn with such things.—Norristown Herald.

This is the way a Vassar girl tells a joke: "O, girls! I heard just the best thing to-day. It was too funny. I can't remember how it came about, but one of the girls said to Professor Mitchell—oh, dear, I can't remember just what she said, but Professor Mitchell's answer was too funny for any use; I forget just exactly what he said, but it was too good for anything!"

The Countess of X——was summoned as a witness in a French court. "Your age, Madame?" asked the Judge. "My age," said the Countess: "well, I—really have such a miserable memory." "But certainly you must know when you were born." "No, indeed, Judge, on my faith I don't, I was so little at the time." The Judge did not insist any furfher.

"I wish," said the farmer's wife to her husband and six boys, "that some of you would shoot the yellow cat." So they all, when they happened to think of it, went and loaded the gun. Luckily, it was the youngest boy who fired it, for he was very healthy and could stand being kicked through the fence. —Rochester Democrat.

"What is the meaning of the word tantalizing?" asked the teacher. "Please, marm," spoke up little Johnny Holcomb, "It means a circus procession passing the school-house and the scholars not allowed to look out."

It is said that kerosene will remove stains from furniture. It has also been known to remove the furniture, stains and all, with the stove, and a servant-girl thrown in, oftentimes.

We know not where heaven is, but we know what it contains; and this knowledge opens to us an infinite field for contemplation and delight.—W. E. Channing.

The difference between a cat and a comma is that the one has the claws at the end of the paws, while the other has the pause at the end of the clause.

"Guilty or not guilty?" asked a Dutch justice of a prisoner. "Not guilty." "Den what do you want here? Go about your pizness."

The Journal.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1881.

Ohio and Indiana have been carried by the Republicans in the elections this week, by a strong majority.

Connecticut civil service reformers are to hold a State Convention at Hartford on the 25th inst., for the purpose of organization.

Ex-Gov. Tilden of New York has taken the trouble to write a letter denying that he is a candidate for gubernatorial honors next year. That is too small a catch for him now.

President Arthur is credited with the commendable purpose of sending to the Senate for confirmation about all the nominations made by President Garfield after the Senate adjourned.

Boss Kelly was refused admission to the New York State Democratic Convention this week. His downfall is complete, and opens the way for a needed improvement in the politics of New York City.

Conkling's friends say that he would not accept a place in President Arthur's cabinet if offered to him, but that his influence will be felt in his administration. That is just what the people are afraid of, though there have been no signs of it yet.

Ex-Secretary Boutwell is reported to have declined an invitation from President Arthur to return to the head of the treasury department. Don't you believe it, though. The invitation has probably not been given; but if it should happen to be, Mr. Boutwell would not be in a declining mood, depend upon it.

President Arthur steadily persists in refusing to receive office-seekers, and insists on their applications being made to the head of the proper department. If he can only have backbone enough to adhere to this rule during his administration, it will be a bigger step in the direction of civil service reform than any of his predecessors have been able to take.

Mayor Haile of Springfield declines to be a candidate for re-election, and R. F. Hawkins, who was supposed to be in training for the succession, refuses to allow the use of his name, having enough business of his own to look after. This leaves the Springfieldites all afloat, and they are anxiously wondering where to look next for a candidate. Better have kept Mr. Powers in office another year.

Intimations have been made for some time that a committee of investigation in the treasury department at Washington found ex-Secretary Sherman mixed up in corrupt practices, and that their report was suppressed, in consequence, by Secretary Windom. The coming successor of Mr. Windom, whoever he may be, should look into this matter, and let the truth be known, whatever it may be, or whomsoever it may affect.

The Senate met at Washington on Monday, and the Democrats inproved their temporary majority by refusing to allow the new senators to be sworn in, until after they had chosen Senator Bayard president pro tem. This accomplished, they adjourned, and on Tuesday made no further objection to the admission of the new Senators. On Thursday the Repuplicans ousted Mr. Bayard and installed David Davis president pro tem.

The letter which Mr. Blaine wrote to Gen. Garfield last Winter, accepting the offer of the state department, has been published the past week, and is a very frank and friendly document. In it Mr. Blaine speaks of the unbroken friendship which has existed between them since the time they entered Congress, and pledges himself to devote his best energies to the service of Gen. Garfield and his administration. The publication of the letter at this late day has given rise to many speculations as to Mr. Blaine's purpose in giving it publicity, and it is taken by many to indicate his desire to be considered the political heir of Garfield, and the natural candidate of his friends in the next Presidential canvass. It seems, however, that the letter was published by a friend of Gen. Garfield without Mr. Blaine's knowledge.

Garfield memorial enterprises are multiplying so rapidly that there are naturally some fears lest some or all of them may fail. The proposal of a Garfield endowment to Williams College, so dear to the late President, is one which would doubtless give him more gratification than all the other plans, and this should be carried to a successful issue by all means. The proposition to erect a Garfield Memorial hospital on the site of the depot at Washington where he was shot, is also a most appropriate one, and as the land belongs to the government, and the matter has been taken hold of by Secretary Blaine, Gen. Sherman and other influential persons, the hospital will doubtless be built, and will be a fitting companion to the national museum in the theatre where President Lincoln was shot. The soldiers and sailors of the late war are also talking of erecting a suitable monument at Washington in memory of Gen. Garfield, and it is understood that a large number of ex-confederate soldiers have already signified their desire to co-operate; while of course Cleveland wants an imposing pile to mark the last resting-place of the dead chief. The still-unfinished Washington monument is a warning not to attempt too much in the monumental line. A monument of modest dimensions would, we believe, best accord with Gen. Garfield's unpretentious tastes. Let this be built, and then let the contributions of the people go to swell the endowment and hospital funds, as better and more durable memorials of the dead, while they will also be a constant help and blessing to the living.

Dr. J. G. Holland, the well-known author, and editor of Scribner's Monthly, died suddenly at New York Wednesday morning, of angina pectoris, at the age of 62 years. Dr. Holland was born in Belchertown July 24, 1819. For a short period of his early manhood he was a practising physician, but soon abandoned his profession to adopt a literary career. In 1849 he became associate editor of the Springfield Republican, and two years later purchased an interest in that journal, which he retained till 1866. In 1870 he became the editor of Scribner's Monthly, now the Century. The public is chiefly acquainted with him in this capacity, as a writer of novels and poems, and as a lecturer on literary and social topics. He was not a great author, but was a popular one. His writings were pure and healthful in tone, and he succeeded in a strong personal hold upon his readers. His funeral occurs to-day at Springfield, where his remains will be buried.

The Republican State Committee has issued a brief address to the Republicans of this State, presenting the reasons why they should not let their interest in the approaching election lag. The committee does not propose to rest on its oars, as though victory were certain, but is taking the usual steps to insure a rousing Republican vote.

Passengers on the Southern Pacific Railroad who came through Wilcox, Arizona, last week Thursday night, reported that at El Paso a battle was going on between the citizens and the Indians of such a tremendous character that the firing of the guns drowned the noise of the train, while several line men were seen lying dead beside the track. This is an interesting story, not the least interesting part of it being the discretion shown by the passengers in pushing right through, instead of stopping to help exterminate the redskins.

The four Arkansas officers who arrested the Iron Mountain train robbers, and secured $8000 of the stolen money, divided it among themselves and swore to secrecy, agreeing with the robbers to pay each of their families $100 per annum as the price of their silence, and to use their best efforts to secure their release after conviction. One of the officers weakened, however, and exposed the transaction. The train robbers have been sentenced to 70 years' imprisonment and the officers ought to be sent to keep them company.

Cleveland is still a center of attraction to multitudes of people who flock to the city to see the relics of President Garfield's funeral. Thousands visited Lake View cemetery last Sunday, and the park where his body lay in state is througed with visitors night and day. The railroads centering in the city still run special trains daily to accommodate the multitude still desirous of seeing what is left of the surroundings of the body at the obsequies.

The Virginia Industrial Exposition opened at Richmond on Thursday, and will remain open until November 11. There has not been an industrial exhibition in Richmond since 1859. The one now to be opened, together with the one just opened at Atlanta, Ga., indicates that the South has entered upon a new era of enterprise and prosperity.

New York has a supply of water sufficient to last about a month, and unless copious rains occur the situation at the end of that time will be one of serious apprehension. The Evening Post urges the utilization of the salt water which surrounds the city for cleaning the streets, flushing sewers, flowing water closets, and other similar purposes.

The help already given to the Michigan sufferers, together with the promise of more, has saved many a farm to its owner. Immediately after the fire, speculators hurried into the burned-over district with cash, expecting to be able to buy the land at trifling prices; but the farmers, encouraged by the prompt assistance, hove declined to sell.

The New York court of appeals decided last week that a marriage valid in the State where it is contracted is valid in every other State of the Union; even in a State which may have forbidden by local law one of the contracting parties to marry within its territory.

The gas company of New Bedford encourages the use of gas stoves in that city by leasing the stoves and making the connection with the pipes without cost. In four years they in this manner let over four hundred stoves from June to November.

General N. P. Banks has been invited by the city authorities of Boston to deliver the eulogy upon President Garfield. He was long intimately associated with the late President on the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives.

An elegant framed copy of the photograph which Mrs. Garfield considers the best ever taken of her husband has been sent to Queen Victoria in response to Her Majesty's request to be supplied with a picture of the late President.

C. B. Butler, a North Adams farmer, was in a tree picking apples last Saturday, when a sportsman fired at him, mistaking him for some game. The shot took effect in his legs, but is not dangerous.

A couple had taken their places before clergyman to be married, at Lowville, N. Y., when a quarrel arose about the handling of the ring and the wedding was postponed indefinitely.

Charles Stuart Parnell, the Irish agitator and member of Parliament, was arrested at Dublin Thursday and lodged in Kilmainham jail, where several other land leaguers are confined.

Thirty murderers are in jail in Philadelphia awaiting trial, and it is thought that not less then half of them will be convicted of murder in the first degree.

Col. H. R. Stoughton has been chosen commander of the Grand Army post in this place, to succeed Capt. Stone, resigned, and D. W. Taft of Bondville becomes senior vice commander.

Van Amburgh's circus was favored with good weather last Saturday, and gave a couple of entertainments of rather more than average merit, which were witnessed by good-sized audiences.

People are subscribing for the "Life and Public Career of Gen. James A. Garfield," for which N. M. Goodale is canvassing in this vicinity, at a rate which clearly shows the remarkable interest everybody feels in the history of the late President.

We will state once more, for the benefit of the forgetful ones, that we cannot use anonymous communications, except as food for our waste basket. We often receive items of news from unknown parties, but must have the name of the writer as a guarantee of good faith.

Happy the man who didn't have any stoves to put up, or stove-pipes to adjust at this season. Yea, thrice happy is he, for

> His temper remains cool and calm,
> His fingers escape many a jalm;
> He isn't tempted to do halm,
> Nor to say to his wife, "You be dalm."

Skiff's California Minstrels held forth in Wales Hall Thursday evening, and gave an entertainment worthy of a larger audience, the funny sayings of Wally Gibbs and singing by the California Quartette being especially good. As a whole it was rather above the average of traveling minstrel troupes.

Horse thieves are around again, and Charles Russell of Three Rivers mourns the loss of his horse and buggy which he left near the show grounds while attending the circus in this place last Saturday. Officers were promptly put upon the track, but no traces of the stolen property have yet been discovered.

Rev. Frank Palmer, of Norwich, Conn., preached at the Congregational church last Sunday. To-morrow morning Rev. R. G. Toles, of the Baldwin Place Home for Little Wanderers, Boston, will speak at this church, and will be assisted by a choir of children from the Home. In the evening he will speak at St. Paul's church.

The selectmen had a hearing at Bondville, Tuesday, on the petition for the new road which the Duck Co. want made to cross the river near the site of their new mill, and voted to lay it out as desired. In another column they advertise for proposals for building this road and also the two new bridges which it will necessitate.

The receipts at the post office for the last quarter, ending Sept. 30th, were as follows: For postage stamps and postal cards, $775.94; envelopes and wrappers, $41.73; box rents, $43; total, $860.67. Number of money orders issued 263; number paid, 112; amount received for orders issued, $3871.62; amount paid on orders, $1749.83.

With the approach of cold weather, special care should be exercised in lighting the first fires in stoves and furnaces which have not been used for the past few months, to see that pipes and flues are all right, and that nothing combustible is near a heated surface. It is from carelessness in these respects that so many disastrous fires originate.

Some twenty friends of Hiram Ferry in this place, who have frequently enjoyed the hospitalities of his house when on hunting trips, descended upon him all "unbeknownst" last week Friday evening, and showed him what they thought of him and his wife by leaving with them a new carpet, an easy chair, and a purse of money, having chipped in nearly $60 for this purpose.

The savings bank managers have begun some changes in the basement of their block, occupied as a lock-up and tramp room. The recent change made in the location of their vault necessitated the filling up of two cells in the lock-up, and four new ones are now to be built in the tramp room, which will give six good cells for the use of the town. W. N. Flynt & Co. are doing the work.

The oyster supper at the Congregational vestry Wednesday evening under the auspices of the Improvement Association, was a pleasant social occasion, and was very well patronized, the net receipts of the evening being about $20. It has been decided to give another supper a week from next Wednesday evening, at the Universalist church, and it is proposed to bring these entertainments under the direction of the different trades in the place, in order that all may become interested in the work of the association. The next supper is to be conducted by the dry goods merchants.

Residents of Springfield and other points along the Connecticut river were astonished at the sudden rise in that stream last Monday till they learned that 240 pounds of Conductor Williams had been indulging in a bath in its waters at Brattleboro. Jim had been out fishing in a boat, and in returning to the shore, having had poor luck, and while in the meditation necessary for one of his first-class fish stories where there is nothing to base it on, he forgot himself and his whereabouts, toppled over and fell in to the drink. He was pulled out by a companion, and then and there vowed to mend his ways in the matter of fish stories.—Norwich Bulletin.

It is perhaps a little late in the season to speak of it, but a good many people often wonder why it is that the Boston & Albany Railroad does not add to the comfort of its patrons by putting ice water tanks into its passenger cars. It is all very nice having the water brought to you in the car, but one's thirst and the water-boy do not always come along together, and most people prefer drinking when they feel like it, rather than merely when they can get it; while many have the feeling that it would be quite as desirable to have a glass for each car, as to pass two glasses through a whole train, beginning with mouths that have been sweetened with tobacco juice. Then again, on some trains no water-boy nor water is to be found, and passengers must swallow their thirst. On the New London Northern, and indeed on most of the railroads, it is now customary to have a tank of drinking water in each car, and it is hoped that the Boston & Albany road will not cling much longer to its present method of furnishing travelers with water.

BRIMFIELD.

N. F. Hubbard and family are expected home from London about the 20th.

A barrel of clothing, bedding, etc., valued at $75, have been sent to the Michigan sufferers by the ladies' union of the Second Congregational church.

THORNDIKE.

Maurice Lawlor has sold his place near the Catholic church to Rev. F. J. Lynch.

A son of E. Goodreau, 11 years old, fell from a tree last Saturday, and broke his left arm very badly, the bones between the wrist and elbow breaking up into small pieces, while above the elbow the bone broke off, and the end penetrated through the flesh and clothing and went into the ground about two inches.

Potatoes are selling at $1 per bushel. Apples are scarce, not a barrel of Winter fruit having been offered for sale.

Widow Morrison was found dead in her bed last Friday morning. A granddaughter slept with her, but arose early and noticed nothing unusual.

A rather excited individual wanted to make an arrest a day or two ago, but not knowing exactly the procedure, and being from an adjoining town, he did not succeed. His talk to one of our assessors about assistance in the case was rather amusing.

The man that usually drives the stage from Wales to Palmer evidently became excited one morning recently. It being rather cold the night before, he put his overcoat on the bed to keep warm, and on getting up in the morning in a hurry left it there. After getting ready to start, it suddenly occurred to him that his overcoat would not be uncomfortable, but his memory failed him as to its whereabouts, and he drove around the street getting people up and inquiring "if they knew where he left it." It finally occurred to him where he "left it," and with a muttered whisper he drew himself into that coat instanter, and left for Palmer in a hurry.

WARREN.

The boot and shoe business is quite dull just at present.

A spiritualist's meeting was held in the town hall Monday evening.

Mrs. Livermore opens the first of the course of lectures next Monday evening.

Our highways are getting to be in a very bad condition. Dust, ruts and "cradle holes" make it impossible to drive much faster than a walk, and this state of affairs is likely to continue until we have a heavy rain.

The manager of the Star course of entertainments proposes to have a good course of concerts and lectures during the Winter, if the public appear to desire them. A chance will be given them to show their desires within a fortnight.

Between fifty and sixty relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Almon Beebe gathered at their house last Saturday afternoon, his only sister and her husband being present from Kentucky. After spending a very social afternoon all had supper from the bountifully loaded tables. Nearly all left at an early hour, feeling that they had had an enjoyable time.

The annual meeting of the Hampden Conference will be held in the Congregational church in this place Oct. 25 and 26. On the forenoon of the first day there will be a discussion upon the state of religion in the country, opened by Rev. D. Buckingham of Springfield. In the afternoon will occur the anniversary of the Benevolent Association and the meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions. The evening session will be devoted to a praise meeting and a discussion of revivals. On the second day a debate on the "Ways to Promote Christian Fellowship in the Loyal Church" will be opened by Rev. M. S. Howard of Wilbraham, and one on the "Growth of Christian Character" by Rev. L. H. Cone of Springfield. In the afternoon a sermon by Rev. Washington Gladden of Springfield will be followed by the Lord's supper.

The death of three old prominent citizens like Albert Norcross, Amasa King and Austin Newell, within a few hours of each other, is a solemn and unusual event for this community. In years past they have been intimately connected with the life of the village, and were much respected. Mr. Newell in his younger days was a prominent carpenter and builder, and was one of the pioneer settlers of the town of Monson, Me., named after this town, and was always a strong advocate of temperance. He retained much of his youthful vigor until within a few years. Mr. King was a man of rare judgment, and a kind and genial neighbor. He was for a time landlord of the old Monson Hotel. Disease a number of years since removed him from the active duties of life, but did not dull his quick perception of human character, or chill the warmth of his heart. Mr. Norcross has as merchant and manufacturer been more intimately connected with the business of the place, and was always foremost in matters of village improvement.

WARE AND VICINITY.

It is reported that "Jack" Davis has entered a law office in New York.

All our good people who can attend, will be interested in the meetings of the Brookfield Associational Conference, to be held at the church in Ware Center, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week.

Octave Girard, who was a member of the Societe St. Jean Baptiste, was buried Tuesday morning under the auspices of the society, who came out in a body with their regalia on, escorted by the Ware Cornet Band. This society has been organized for some years, but this is the first member they have lost by death.

Fires.—An immense furniture storage building and the Fourth avenue car stables, on Thirty-second and Thirty-third streets, New York, were burned Monday night. Two hundred horses perished in the stables, and a large amount of valuable furniture, paintings, etc., were destroyed in the storage building. The total loss is estimated at about $2,000,000.——An incendiary fire at Miller's Falls last week Friday morning destroyed the factory of the German Harmonica Co., causing a loss of $40,000. The works will probably be rebuilt at once.——A woman and a child were burned to death in a fire at Oswego, N. Y., on Tuesday.——Sparks from an electric lamp set fire to a mill at Philadelphia Wednesday, which was destroyed, and it is feared that several lives were lost.

When Mrs. Garfield paid her last visit to the room in the White House in which her husband so long lay ill, she grew so deadly pale that the friend who was with her believed she would faint, but with her customary self-control she maintained her composure and gratefully noticed the flowers with which some kind soul had decorated the bed in anticipation of her coming.

If you want to see new chamber sets, parlor suites, ranges, easy chairs, and the best display of crockery and carpets you ever saw, you should go to Metcalf & Luther's, Springfield.

If you want a pair of those men's pure gum Woonsocket rubber boots, Morse, of the "Central Shoe Store," Springfield, is selling for $2.75, you better "go for them." Such prices ain't apt to lie around loose a great while.

If you are nervous or dyspeptic try Carter's Little Nerve Pills. Dyspepsia makes you nervous, and nervousness makes you dyspeptic; either one renders you miserable, and these little pills cure both. 2w30

Distress after eating, one of the most unpleasant results of indigestion, will no longer be experienced if a tablespoonful of Simmons Liver Regulator is taken after each meal. This will prevent the distress referred to, and by persevering in the use of this remedy for a few weeks a permanent cure will be effected, and pain no longer be the penalty of eating.

D. H. Brigham & Co., "the Clothiers," promise with three more openings to have the most complete mercantile establishment in New England. Wednesday, the 12th—Robes and Blankets. Wednesday, the 19th—Their new trunk and bag rooms, which are the largest and finest retail rooms in New England. But Wednesday, the 26th, will be the attractive day for the ladies, when they throw open their entire second floor as a Fur Department, containing all the choice novelties of the season.

The beauty and color of the hair may be safely regained by using Parker's Hair Balsam, which is much admired for its perfume, cleanliness and dandruff eradicating properties. o

Wei De Meyer's Catarrh Cure is unquestionably the result of the most important discovery for the relief of human suffering, since vaccination. RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

Dee-pot—Day-pot—Dep-pot.

Said Master Jones, "Now must we go,
Without delay to the dee-pot."

Laughed sweet Miss Jones, "I should say so,
Let's start at once to the day-pot."

Smiled Mrs. Jones, "in quick step, oh,
We'll all run down to the dep-pot."

Groaned Mr. Jones, "It's mighty hot
To drive you all to the dee-pot."

These conflicts of pronunciation
Would not be if they called it "station."

WHEN TO EAT.

Never eat till you have time to digest, for digestion requires leisure; we cannot assimilate our food while the functional energy of our system is engrossed by other occupation. After a hearty feed animals retire to a quiet hiding place, and the "after-dinner laziness," the plea of our system for rest, should admonish us to imitate their example. The idea that exercise after dinner promotes digestion is a marvelous fallacy. Jules Virley settled that question by a cruel but conclusive experiment. He selected two curs of the same size, age and general physique, made them fast a day and treated them the next morning to a good square meal of potatoes and cubes of fat mutton, but as soon as one had eaten his fill, he made the other stop, too, to make sure they both had consumed the same quantity. Dog No. 1 was then confined to a comfortable kennel, while No. 2 had to run after the doctor's coach, not at a breathless rate of speed, but at a fair, brisk trot, for two hours and a half. As soon as they got home the coach dog and his comrade were slain and dissected. The kennel dog had completely digested his meal, while the chips and cubes in the coach dog's stomach had not changed their form at all; the process of assimilation had not even begun. Railroad laborers, who bolt their dinners during a short interval of hard work, might as well pass their recess in a hammock; instead of strengthening them their dinner will only oppress them, till it is digested with their supper, in the cool of the evening.—Popular Science Monthly.

Mr. Mills, the apostle of ensilage or the preservation of crops in a green state for fodder, the possibilities of which he is illustrating at Arrabeck farm, Pompton, N. J., lays down the following conditions as essential to success: Air must be perfectly excluded from the pit or silo by a uniform and continuous pressure of about 250 pounds to the square foot; the crop should have flowered before being cut, and the knives should be sharp enough not to tear the saccharine sacks. Last year Mr. Mills fed for seven months 140 animals, cows and horses, from ten acres of corn fodder. The past Summer he fed for six weeks 100 cattle, mostly milch cows, from five acres of oats sown in the Spring, and he believes that during the coming Winter and until his corn crop for 1882 is ready he can, in spite of an inferior yield occasioned by the drouth, keep 150 cattle on the corn fodder cut from twenty-five acres. Mr. Mills states that one ton of grass preserved green in a silo possesses as great feeding capacity as twenty tons of the best hay. These are startling figures, but if anyone feels disposed to dispute them Mr. Mills will gladly furnish the proof, and triumphantly point to his sleek and happy cows, whose rich milk brings one cent a quart more than the usual price.

"Can I see the lady of the house?" inquired the peddler. "Well, yes, you can if you ain't blind!" snapped the woman who had answered the bell. "Oh, beg pardon, madam; you are the lady of the house, then?" "Yes, I am! What d'yer take me for? Did yer think I was the gentleman of the house, or the next door neighbor, or one of the farm hands, or the cat, or the ice chest?" "I didn't know, madam, but you might be the youngest daughter." "Oh, did yer? Well, that was nat'ral, too," said the l. of the h. "What d'ye want, sir?" Then the peddler displayed his wares, and when he left that doorstep half an hour later his face was full of pleasure and his pockets full of money. He understood human nature and made a good sale.

Most people would say that that important member, the nose, was placed exactly in the centre of the face, but it is asserted that, as a matter of fact, it is rarely or never found thus placed; it is almost invariably a little out of the "square," and the fact of its being so is often that which lends a peculiar expression and piquancy to the face. A medical writer points out that there are anatomical reasons why a slight deviation from the true central line may be expected, and that the nose which is thus accurately straight between the two eyes may, after all, be considered an abnormal one, the only absolutely true and correct organ being, in fact, that which deviates a little to the right or left.

A very little boy had climbed into his mother's lap, and was rubbing his soft cheek against hers. "Oh, dear mamma!" he said, "shall I have to be a man when I grow up, and have old, rough fizkers, like papa? Shan't I never, never be a lady?"

It is amusing to detect character in the vocabulary of each person. The adjectives habitually used, like the inscriptions on a thermometer, indicate the temperament.—H. T. Tuckerman.

t is noticed by the Utica Observer that at some time or other the man who does not advertise is brought into prominence, and a red flag is always used.

Anybody can catch a cold now. The trouble is to let go, like the man who caught the bear. We advise our readers to keep a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup handy.

Nearly all the ills that afflict mankind can be prevented and cured by keeping the stomach, liver and kidneys in perfect working order. There is no medicine known that will do this as quickly and surely, without interfering with duties, as Parker's Ginger Tonic. See advertisement. oc

An Interesting Account!

STONE IN THE BLADDER EXPELLED BY USING DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY."

Mr. S. W. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess Co., N. Y., the son of Mr. E. S. Hicks, whose name may have appeared in this journal in connection with an article similar to this, was, like his father, afflicted with Stone in the Bladder, only that his case was more serious than his father's. On the appearance of the disease the father advised the son to write to Dr. David Kennedy of Rondout, N. Y., who, he said, would tell him what to do. Dr. Kennedy replied, suggesting the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which had worked so successfully in the father's case. Mr. Hicks, who had been assured by the local physicians that they could do nothing more for him, tried "Favorite Remedy" at a venture. After two weeks' use of it he passed a stone ¾ of an inch long and of the thickness of a pipe-stem. Since then he has had no symptoms of the return of the trouble. Here is a sick man healed. What better results could have been expected? What greater benefit could medical science confer? The end was gained; that is surely enough. Dr. Kennedy assures the public, by a reputation which he cannot afford to forfeit or imperil, that the "Favorite Remedy" does invigorate the blood, cures liver, kidney and bladder complaints, as well as all those diseases and instances peculiar to females. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

PROTECTION

FROM

MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE, INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE

PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use. If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

The Best That I Can.

"I cannot do much," said a little star,
"To make the dark world bright!
My silvery beams cannot struggle far
Through the folding gloom of night!
But I'm only a part of God's great plan,
And I'll cheerfully do the best that I can."

"What is the use?" said a fleecy cloud,
"Of these few drops that I hold?
They will hardly bend the lily proud,
Though caught in her cup of gold.
Yet I am a part of God's great plan,
So my treasures I'll give as well as I can."

A child went merrily forth to play,
But a thought, like a silver thread,
Kept winding in and out all day
Through the happy, golden head;
Mother said, "Darling, do all you can,
For you are a part of God's great plan."

She knew no more than the glancing star,
Nor the cloud with its chalice full,
How, why, and for what all strange things were;
She was only a child at school!
But she thought, "It is part of God's great plan,
That even I should do all that I can."

She helped a younger child along,
When the road was rough to the feet;
And she sang from her heart a little song,
That we all thought passing sweet;
And her father, a weary, toil-worn man,
Said, "I will do likewise the best I can."

Our best? Ah! children, the best of us
Must hide our faces away,
When the Lord of the vineyard comes to look
At our task at the close of day!
But for strength from above ('tis the Master's plan),
We'll pray, and we'll do the best that we can.

THE FIRST QUARREL.

"Sakes alive! what a looking room! I declare, George Graham, if you aren't enough to try the patience of Job! I don't believe there is another woman living who has to bear what I do! Who'd ever think that I came in here after breakfast and worked a good hour putting things to rights! And now what does it look like?"

Tears stood in the little wife's eyes, and her face lengthened out till you would have thought she had just heard of a death.

"What is it, Susie? What's up now? What does what look like?" And Mr. Graham turned carelessly and good naturedly, too, from the double-leaded article on reconstruction, which he had been so earnestly reading that though he had heard he had scarcely comprehended a word of the complaint.

"That's just like you, George! If I were to tell you the house was on fire, you'd only look round and say, 'where, Susie?'"

He laughed; a hearty laugh it was, too, clear and ringing; a laugh that many a wife would have treasured up as men do pearls and precious stones.

It nettled Mrs. Graham, and she said sharply, "If you'd open your eyes you'd see what does what look like."

He rubbed them briskly and then peered around. "I declare, Susie, I don't know what you mean. The carpet is swept, the furniture is dusted, the lamps trimmed, the fire bright—what is it? I can't for the life of me see anything wrong."

"You can't! No, of course you can't! See there, and there, and there," and she pointed rapidly, her emphasis growing more and more incisive each time, to his heavy overcoat which lay in a tumbled mass on the lounge; to his hat which was lodged unceremoniously in the middle of her work basket; to his rubbers which were roasting on the stove hearth, and to his gloves which had demurely settled themselves on the mantel piece.

"I see, Susie, but then you know I'm a careless, good-for-nothing sort of a fellow who never had any bringing up, and you must make allowance, my dear," and tossing the paper on the table he caught her hand and drew her gently upon his lap and said soothingly, as one might talk to a fretful child, "don't be cross now pet, 'cause I didn't mean anything bad, you know. Put up your lips and let me kiss away that pout."

But the lips were not put up to meet the touch of those bearded ones. Instead, they assumed rigidity, squareness, immobility.

"Must I have the lecture first, wifey, before I can either give or claim a kiss? Well, out with it then. The sooner I'm whipped, the sooner it'll stop hurting, as I used to say to the boys when the schoolmaster was after me with the rod of correction. But, Susie," and here his tones, which had so far been jocular, assumed a touching earnestness, "I don't like this being scolded every time I come into the house. I've borne it so far patiently, but it's wearing on my temper. I shan't be able to hold in much longer. I'm afraid I shall scold back, and then we'll quarrel, and then—our home will be no home, but—shall I say it, Susie?—what too many homes are, nothing more nor less than cheap editions of hell itself."

"But George, how can I help it? You do try me terribly."

"How, Susie?"

"Why, by never putting things where they belong. I was brought up to have a place for everything and everything in its place, and it does worry me to come in from the kitchen, tired and hot, and then find the sitting room looking so. I like to have things neat and orderly."

"But you know we can't have all we want in this world, Susie, and is it worth while for you to fret your life away just because I can't always think to put my gloves in my pocket, and hang up my coat and hat, and leave my rubbers in the entry?"

The word "fret" was an unfortunate one; it stung her, and she said bitterly: "But you never think, George. You come rushing in like a whirlwind, and you toss your things pell mell every which way, and if they're ever picked up and put in their places, it is I and not you that do it, and I'm getting tired of it. I can't and I won't stand it any longer."

"What will you do, Susie?" There was severity in his tone now.

"Do? Why, I won't stand it. I won't be any man's slave;" and the black eyes flashed defiantly.

"Did I ever ask you to be my slave?" The man's eyes were flashing now.

"But what else am I? I toil like one from morning to night to do up the work and put things in order, and you come in and undo it all, just as I've got through. It is enough to make a saint swear."

She was so excited now she hardly knew what she said.

"And what am I?" he retorted. "If you're a slave, I'm one quite as much. Who earns every cent that's brought in? Who pays the rent, and buys the fuel, and lays in the provisions? Who clothes Mrs. Susan Graham, I'd like to know?"

"She earned her own clothes once, and can do it again, George Graham, if it is necessary, and no thanks to you, or any other man."

"It is a pity she hadn't kept on earning them herself. Then she'd never had to pick up and put away her husband's, and he—well it wouldn't be gentlemanly to say it"—

"Out with it, sir. Never spoil a joke for relation's sake."

"And he wouldn't have caught a Tartar, but been a happy old bach. Lord, but how I wish I was!"

"Are you in earnest, sir?"

"In earnest, madam."

"Then perhaps we'd better part."

"Part it is, then."

"The sooner the better, too."

"My sentiments exactly, madam."

"To-day."

"Why not!"

"Where will you go?"

"I? I shan't go. I shall stay here."

"But you don't mean to say you're going to turn me out of house and home! I never would believe that of you, George Graham."

"It isn't I that's turning you out. Suppose you stay; you've no money to pay the rent or run the affair. It costs something to keep house, I can tell you. I've found it out by bitter experience."

"But where can I go? You know I haven't a relative left me."

"You should have thought of that before you proposed parting. 'Tis not my business to look you up a home."

"I don't know whose else it is. You might do as much as that for your own wife."

"For my wife I'd do a great deal more. But you are not my wife any more; only the legal tie remains to be severed, and I'll apply for a divorce at once."

"And disgrace us both?"

"But what can a fellow do? Now I've got used to having a home I want one, and once free from you, there are dozens of girls that'll be glad to take up with me, careless, good-for-nothing scapegrace as I am."

"And a pretty life they'll lead you, too."

"It can't be worse than that you've led me the last six months. Zounds! but I've been a fool to bear it so long. Fret, fret, fret, from morning till night. Thank Heaven, it is all over at last!" and he whistled gaily.

"You seem to be glad to be rid of me, sir."

"You've made me glad, madam." He put on his overcoat, drew on his rubbers, and gathered up his hat and gloves. Was he really going, and without his dinner?

"When will you be ready to leave, madam? I will order a carriage at any hour you name."

"You are an unfeeling wretch, George Graham; you are, and that's the truth. You might, for decency's sake, give me till to-morrow to pack up my things and decide what to do."

"You can have a week, madam, if you wish. I thought you were in a hurry to go. Yes, you may have a week. Meanwhile, I'll go to a hotel."

"And have the whole town talking about us! Why can't you stay at home just as well?"

"Because I never like to be in any one's way."

"But it is your own house, and—and—if you ever had any regard for me, you'd stay till—till I'm gone." Her voice was not quite as steady as it had been.

"Well, I'll stay then. But not now. I'll come back to-night. It'll be late when I get in, and—I'll take the spare chamber till you're gone."

The front door clashed after him in another moment. He was gone; gone without his dinner; gone, and not coming back till—nobody knew when, and then going up stairs to sleep alone. They had quarreled. They had as good as parted. They would be divorced. He would get another wife, and bring her home here, and she would have to go out alone into the cold, dreary world and earn her own living. She didn't know enough about divorce, poor thing, to think of alimony. And all this because he neglected to leave his "things" in the hall, and she found fault with him for the said neglect. Careless husband! Fidgety wife! And because he was careless and she fidgety, they must live apart!

Mrs. Graham looked about her just then. Everything was neat and orderly. There was nothing to worry her. Nothing? There was everything. And she sat down and cried; she who had been so resolute and defiant only ten minutes before. But that resolution, that defiance, had been born of anger, and the anger was all gone now. How sorry she was she had been so cross to him, for she had been cross, real cross, wickedly cross. What if he had tossed his things any and every way? It was a man's trick—and—and—here she sobbed outright, he never had a mother to train him. Poor fellow, he'd been knocked around from pillar to post all his life till he was married, and now he would have to knock round again, for of course he could not get married right away; no, he would have to get a housekeeper, and she would worry the life out of him, and when he did get married could he ever find one who would love him as she had and did, yes did! the love was there yet, swelling and overflowing.

She went into the kitchen, hardly knowing why; driven, perhaps, by the force of habit. There stood the table laid for dinner, and so neatly: the cloth white and in its crease, the plates and glasses shining brightly; the knives and forks polished almost to silver brightness. She gave it one look and mechanically opened the stove oven. The chicken was cooking nicely. George liked roast chicken better than a fricassee, so she had cooked it in that way. The potatoes and the turnips were dancing merry jigs in the pot, and the tea kettle was softly humming. The mince pie stood on the hearth warming itself quietly, and exhaling a spicy odor that was tempting even to a dyspeptic stomach.

"Such a nice dinner, and no one to eat it! I wish—I—I—I hadn't been so cross to him. I began it, and kept it up, too; he wasn't cross first; he held out till I made him mad. O, dear! I wish—I do wish it didn't worry me so to see things lying around. I wish he was more careful, thoughtful—such a dear, good fellow as he is about everything else. Never scolds when bills come in, like Hannah Benton's husband. Mercy! I don't know how she does live with him. And he's always giving me change, too. I never hardly have to ask for a cent; I don't know what I should do, if I had to manage as Carrie Stanford does to get a dollar out of Jim. If I had such a man, I'd leave him, if I had to work my fingers to the bone to earn my living. And he wants me to have a girl and be dressed up all the time, and read, and practice and go out with him, and there's poor little May Miller that never sits down once a week, but is forever stewing in the kitchen, and never a word of thanks, Joe always wondering why she don't do more than she does. He ought to go to a tread mill himself. And he never tastes a drop of liquor, nor wouldn't for the world, and there's Nelly Grey's sot of a husband coming home beastly drunk every night of his life, and scaring the life out of her. I'd see him drowned before I'd live with him. And he never smokes, nor chews, while you can't go into anybody's else house hardly, without standing over spittoons or being suffocated with somebody's pipe or cigar. Dear me! I should die in a week if I had to live that way. And he is always so good natured, too, never gave me a cross word till to-day," but here she broke down entirely, sob after sob tearing away in her throat and threatening to choke her.

The paroxysm was too violent to last long. As it subsided she dashed off the tears that flooded her cheeks, wiped her eyes, brushed back her hair, and going to the sink, bathed her face thoroughly. Then she stood a few minutes as if gathering up resolution, a calm, beautiful expression playing about her lips.

The words of her old pastor had come back to her all once as she sat there weeping. The words he had spoken to her the evening before her marriage: "My little girl, you have made a good choice. George Graham, your promised husband, is a young man of excellent principles and good disposition, and will do his best to make you happy. But he is not perfect. No man is. And you must be patient with his failings—always patient. One cross word leads to another, and that to another, till by and by there's a quarrel, and then good-by, happiness! Don't scold, but coax; don't drive, but lead. And if you ever feel tired with him, think how much worse it might have been. And always remember that he is no saint, but only a man; a man mortal and weak. Be it your work, little girl, to make his earthly home a happy one, and to lead him onward and upward towards that holier one not made with hands."

"Dead; yet speaketh," she said solemnly, as that long, earnest talk came back to her. "And—and, I'll do it any way. If he won't agree to begin again and try it over, why—Oh, I never, never can go out alone into the world, and see him married to another woman. Oh, I'll never say another word, I won't, not one, if he has every chair piled to the ceiling with coats and pants, and the floor waist deep with rubbers and boots. I don't see what made me speak so cross to him. I'll just get a girl to-morrow; somebody that can cook better than I, and keep out of the kitchen; and whenever he comes in, I'll take his things, myself, and take care of them. What must he have thought of me, to hear me say such dreadful things!"

And filling up the stove with coal, draining the water off the vegetables, and leaving the oven door open, she ran up stairs and put on her sacque and bonnet, seized her muff and gloves, and locking the door after her, went out.

It was bitter cold, but she did not mind it. The wind was driving the sleet right into her face, but she only drew the thick veil closer over her swollen eyes and hurried on. It was slippery as glass, but her gaitered feet ran along as if sharp shod. She had but one thought: to see George again, tell him how very sorry she was, and bring him back to dinner.

With a shout and a "hurrah," a little fellow came coasting down one of the cross streets just as she had set her foot on the curb-stone. The sled whirled, zigzagged a moment, and then ran her down. She screamed involuntarily, and, as she fell, put out her hands implorингly. Some one clasped them tightly a brief spell, and then gently assisted her to her feet. Some one spoke kindly to her. Some one said kindly, tenderly, lovingly, "Are you much hurt, Susie?" Some one drew aside her veil. Some one looked pityingly into her eyes. Who was it, think you?

"O, George! I'm so glad you happened here. I was going down to the office after you!"

"Were you, Susie? And I was coming up to the house to see you!"

He looked about him a few seconds, and then said, meaningly, "Just half way, and we met."

The next minute he was tucking her little hand under his elbow and guiding her back home, walking slowly, cautiously, and asking at every few steps, "if she was sure she were not much hurt," and adding, "he'd send the little rascal to jail if she were," to all of which she said earnestly, "Not any, hardly; only frightened a little; he wasn't to blame for the sled turning; I'm so glad we met."

Inside the front door before hardly the lock had sprung, he caught her to his heart and as he held her in the warm, close embrace, he kissed her passionately.

"What did you think of me, George, scolding you as I did; if you only knew how I cried afterwards."

"But I plagued you dreadfully, I know, Susie. You're so neat, and I'm such a careless scamp."

"It was I who plagued you, George. I've no business to be so neat as to make myself a fussy cross old thing, and I won't any more. I won't say one word, George, if you turn the house topsy-turvey every time you come in. Oh, George, to think of our quarreling so before we've been married a year!"

"And you running away to leave me here alone. O, Susie, I should have run after you before morning."

"It was awful—the way we talked to each other. Can you ever forgive me?"

"Yes, indeed, I forgave you ten minutes after I reached the office; though, going down there, Susie, I did wish, almost, that you were a little sloven, instead of such a tidy bit of a lady."

"I don't wonder, George; it's enough to make a man hate the very word neatness when his wife is forever scolding about it so. I'm going to hire a girl to cook, wash, iron and scrub, and I'm going to meet you at the door every time you come in, and put away all your things for you, so that we'll both be suited. The house'll be in order, and you won't be bothered in helping about it."

"The deuce you will, Susie. Pardon, pet, I don't mean it. Have the girl. I always wanted you to; but hang me if I'm going to have such a doll of a wife put away my things, and me a great six-footer. No, no, you may meet me, but—just see how nice I can do it when I've a mind to," and releasing her from his folded arms, he deliberately took off his hat and overcoat and hung them up by plummet and line, and then kicking off his rubbers, he set them squarely under the rack.

"Only, Susie, if I once in a while forget."

"I won't scold, George; no I won't, if I have to bite my lips till they bleed to keep the ugly words in."

"And when I see you biting your lips, Susie, I'll know what's up, and hurry and put things in their places, and then wipe the hurt off just so," and he pressed his bearded chin close to hers, so smooth and so soft and so sweet, and took a dozen or so warm kisses.

"And now put away your things, wifey, and let's have some dinner, for I'm as hungry as a church rat."

"I'm afraid it's all dried up by this time, but I'll hurry and make you a nice cup of coffee."

"You know what the good book says, my dear Susie; 'Better is a dry morsel'"—

"I know, I know, George," and turning back again she took his right hand and laying it tenderly on her heart, said tearfully, "help me to be good."

"We will help each other, wife, and Heaven shall help us both."

And so ended the first quarrel. God grant it may be the last.

A PITIFUL SCENE.

Just after leaving the office, a few days ago, we saw a man, well clad, moving very slowly and evidently very drunk. A pretty little girl, five or six years old, her face wet with tears, was holding the man's hand and trying to lead him along. Two little boys were with them, and all the little ones seemed deeply concerned about something. The man at last stopped, reeled off the sidewalk, sank on his knees, and then sat down in the sand. He was all the time muttering to himself, and now he seemed endeavoring to say something to the children. The poor little girl that had been leading her father was greatly perplexed when he sat down in the dirt. She went up to him, and lovingly threw her arms around his neck, as if to charm him by her love to another effort to go home. We saw her tiny hands as they met back of the fathers' neck. Strong men hurriedly going home, stopped, and moaned at that spectacle of helpless love and maudlin drunkenness. The little girl was very neatly dressed, and the apparent gentility of the group gave hideous emphasis to the lesson before us. "What can we do?" said a stalwart gentleman near us. With our hearts bursting with sympathy, we answered, "Nothing, but to get a policeman to take him home." How long, Oh Lord, shall such things be?

A little further on stood an unconcerned saloon keeper in the door of his shop.—Christian Advocate.

MALARIA IN NEW ENGLAND.

It is a fact somewhat unaccountable to the medical fraternity, that malaria is beginning to appear in New England. The sudden change of temperature is a warning to exercise care about clothing, over-fatigue, and food. People who have lived for any length of time in the Southwestern states, learn to quickly detect this insidious foe. An unaccountable drowsiness is one symptom; aching pains in the limbs and back, accompanied by headache and a general lassitude or weakness, are almost invariable accompaniments of malaria. These feelings, unattended to, are almost sure to be followed by a chill. The best antidote, so far as known, for this subtle poison, is quinine; but care must be taken in properly using it, which should not be done without either medical knowledge or medical advice. A previous fast of ten or twelve hours is considered to better prepare the system to receive it. Rest and quiet are absolutely essential, and even if it seems time lost it is more than compensated for by a speedy return to health. By rest is meant absolute repose in a literal sense,—the keeping quiet within doors. No vegetables should be eaten. Beef tea, or bouillon, is one of the best nourishments to enable the system to throw off this malarial poison.—Boston Traveller.

Some of the foreign tourists of the present year have not been pleased with their experiences. A correspondent of a New York paper met one of these recently at a railway restaurant in France, and entering into conversation with him, he soon called out the following burst of feeling: "Yes, sir, I landed two weeks ago and have seen all I wanted to see of these parts. I shall run up to Scotland for a week, and then sail for home. I've heard a good deal of routes for tourists since I've been in the old country, but I've only just now hit the right route. It's London, Liverpool, New York, Detroit and thank God!"

The man who was about to marry for the sixth time, and who replied, "We've usually sat," when asked by the minister to stand up, has been heard from again. He recently led No. 7 to the altar, and when asked for the ring, replied, "Parson, I've hooked onto six of 'em without a ring, and I reckon we kin git along this time. I'll try and remember it in future, though."—Detroit Free Press.

Two old ladies, evidently from out of town, were walking along a Boston street one day recently, when one of them discovered a bunch of bananas. Stopping to look at them, she adjusted her glasses and exclaimed: "Well, I do declare, if them ain't bigger string beans than I ever saw in my life."

Two boys of four and six were overheard talking together during a very heavy thunder-shower. "Aren't you afraid?" said the younger. "Oh, no, it's jolly." "The lightning does kill folks sometimes," continued the little one. "Yes, but God steers the lightning, you know."

"Are you fond of Wagner's works?" asked Mr. Sharpe. "Fond of them!" exclaimed Miss Posigush, "I think they are just splendid. So easy and comfortable, you know. Why, I rode in one from Boston to Chicago, and I wasn't a bit tired when I got there."

The ground about Niagara Falls is to be turned into a great national park. If the Government will take possession of the hacks and continue the present prices, the national debt can be paid off in a year.—Chicago Times.

There is this difference between happiness and wisdom; he who thinks himself the happiest man really is so; but he who thinks himself the wisest is generally just the reverse.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1881.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR is reported to have asked for the resignation of Assistant Postmaster-General Tyner, on the ground of having been cognizant of the star route frauds, while doing nothing to abate them.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL JAMES has accepted the presidency of the Lincoln National Bank, just organized at New York, under the auspices of the Vanderbilts. This settles the question of his remaining in the cabinet in the negative, though his departure will be sincerely regretted by the whole country. President Arthur will need to look sharp to find a man who can fill his place.

REV. DR. LEONARD W. BACON of Norwich has "put his foot in it" badly. A couple of years ago he made a sharp war on the steamboat companies of that city for running Sunday excursion boats, and succeeded in breaking up the business, under an old law forbidding all Sunday travel. Now he has been taking ex-President Hayes out for a Sunday drive, to show him the city, and the steamboat folks are after him for it, and rightly enough, too. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

GUITEAU was arraigned at Washington last week Friday for the murder of President Garfield, and pleaded not guilty to the indictment. He was in great fear of being shot or assaulted in some way in the court room, and was much relieved when safely back in jail. His trial is fixed for November 7, and his counsel, Mr. Scoville, has published an appeal to the public, asking for evidence to prove his insanity. Mr. Scoville does not succeed in finding any lawyer to assist him in the defence of Guiteau, and he will have to conduct the case alone, unless the court assigns some one to help him.

THE Republican county convention at Springfield on Thursday renominated the old officers, and chose a county committee, the members from this part of the county being as follows: Brimfield, James S. Blair; Hampden, W. R. Sessions; Holland, William A. Webber; Ludlow, Benjamin F. Burr; Monson, A. A. Gage; Palmer, S. S. Taft; Wales, H. A. McFarland; Wilbraham, Stebbins Foster. The councilor convention, which meets at Chester next Wednesday, will go through the form of renominating Councilor Woods, while it seems to be settled that Mayor Haile of Springfield will receive the senatorial nomination at Palmer next Thursday.

SPRINGFIELD people are beginning to wake up to the fact that their post office is managed in a loose and unsatisfactory manner, and they propose to do something about it. It is high time they did. We have had at different times numerous complaints from subscribers of delays and non-receipt of their papers which pass through that office, and shall be glad to see any change made which will insure the prompt and correct delivery of mail matter there. Postmaster Lee has an unfortunate habit of indulgence in strong drink, which he now promises to amend, but there is seemingly quite a general feeling that the time has come for a new head in the office.

IT is given out that President Arthur will respect the so-called rule of "Senatorial courtesy," so far as to confer with Senators in regard to appointments, though he will not make any promises. President Garfield began his administration with similar plans, but soon ran afoul of the imperious Conkling, the latter's resignation and fight for re-election, and Guiteau's shot, soon following. President Garfield would have been alive and well to-day, doubtless, but for the quarrel with Conkling; and while President Arthur probably stands in little danger of assassination, the reviving of this rule of Senatorial courtesy will be likely to give him many an uncomfortable experience.

THE English government has at last resorted to active and stern measures for the suppression of the Irish troubles. Parnell was arrested and put in jail last week, causing great excitement throughout Ireland, and the land league issued a manifesto this week advising the farmers to pay no rent whatever until the existing wrongs are righted. The government has now met this challenge by proclaiming the league an illegal and criminal organization, whose meetings will be forcibly dispersed, and all the powers of the government used, if necessary, to preserve order and enforce the laws. This must put an end to the work of the league, and it is hoped that the new land court, which opened in Dublin on Thursday with a crowded attendance, will bring the needed relief to the tenants, and peace to the country.

THE Yorktown centennial celebration began on Tuesday, when the corner stone of the monument to be erected there was laid with Masonic honors. The chair occupied by the grand master was occupied by George Washington when grand master of the Virginia Masons; and the sash and apron worn were worked by Mrs. Lafayette and presented to Washington in 1784. On Wednesday the anniversary of Cornwallis's surrender was celebrated with a brief but very appropriate address by President Arthur, remarks by the French and German guests, an oration by Robert C. Winthrop of Boston, a centennial poem by James Baron Hope of Virginia, and music, after which President Arthur gave a reception in Lafayette Hall, Gov. Long and staff being the first to be introduced. The celebration closed on Thursday with a grand military and naval review. President Arthur did a very graceful act on Wednesday by ordering that the British flag should be saluted, at the close of the ceremonies, by the U. S. army and naval forces.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Buyers of kip boots should call at Milligan's and see the saddle seam boot, something that will not rip.

Seeing is believing. Park has the largest and richest show of hanging and table lamps, decorated chamber sets, fancy and white table ware ever shown in this town. "Don't you forget it!" Every piece of Maddock white granite ware is warranted not to craze.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

New moon to-night.

Fine October days, these.

The leaves are carpeting the ground thickly.

Rev. Mr. Quimby of Charlton preaches at the Universalist church to-morrow.

George Griffin has the frame of his new house on Park street up and nearly inclosed.

A. H. Willis has just taken the agency of the Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. of Newark, N. J.

A petition in insolvency has been filed on the estate of David A. Hoag, late of this town.

H. C. Stoughton, of Otsego, Mich., is visiting his brother, Col H. R. Stoughton, in this place.

Robinson & Brooks have this week flung to the breeze a fine new sign, which he who runs may read.

It is expected that Rev. Mr. Dearborn of Springfield will occupy the pulpit of the Baptist church Sunday afternoon.

The schools in the village were closed Thursday and Friday, so that the teachers could attend the institute at Wilbraham.

Secretary O. P. Allen is now ready to pay the premiums awarded at the recent exhibition of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society.

Section Master McQuade, of the Boston & Albany road, starts to-day with his wife for his old home at Rockingham, Vt., for a short vacation.

John M. Converse and C. T. Brainerd have been drawn as jurors for the October term of the superior court, which meets at Springfield next week.

Dr. Warren has purchased a nicely-matched pair of seal brown horses in Worcester the past week, for use on his new coupe. They are said to be pretty fine roadsters.

Rev. A. F. Newton, of Townsend, is to preach at the Congregational church to-morrow. On the Sunday following, Rev. J. L. Scudder, of Shrewsbury, will occupy the pulpit.

Rev. C. H. Eaton of New York has been in town this week, and conducted the conference meeting at St. Paul's church Thursday evening, greatly to the pleasure of his old parishioners.

S. S. Taft has purchased of Mrs. M. W. French the house on the corner of Park and Central streets, formerly occupied by Rev. C. H. Eaton, for about $4000, and will move into it shortly.

Stillman Ellis is having a concrete walk laid in front of his residence on Park street, and S. Leach and Mrs. C. C. Shaw are putting in curbing, preparatory to laying the same kind of a walk.

Gov. Long and staff, with some 40 invited guests and the Boston Cadets, passed through here on a special train of eight cars, Monday forenoon, en route to the centennial celebration at Yorktown, Va.

Our neighbors, Ludlow and Wales, have not yet paid their county tax, and must now add 12 per cent interest to the amount due, when they do pay. Holyoke, Tolland and Southwick are in the same boat.

The supply of postal cards at the post office has been exhausted, and there is a general dearth all around, occasioned by the removal of the postal card works to New York State, and the consequent suspension of their manufacture for a short time.

Mayor Carlton, of Port Huron, Mich., has gratefully acknowledged receipt of the money and goods recently shipped from this place for the Michigan sufferers, and promises to see that they are properly distributed among the destitute people in that vicinity.

Remember the next social of the Improvement Association, to be held at the Universalist church next Wednesday evening, under the direction of our dry goods merchants. An oyster supper will be served, and contributions of scalloped or fried oysters, cake, etc., will be thankfully received.

Charles Benjamin, formerly in the employ of the New London Northern road at Palmer, was fireman on the train that recently came into collision with a gravel train at Hyde Park, on the New York & New England road, in which two men were killed. He saved his life by jumping, but was somewhat bruised.

The winter time table of the Boston & Albany Railroad will probably go into effect the 31st inst. It is understood that the 11.37 a. m. accommodation train from the west will arrive a few minutes later than now, and that the 2 p. m. express from New York and Albany will reach here three-quarters of an hour earlier than at present.

An adjourned session of the probate court was held in Springfield Thursday, when administration was granted on the estates of—Wilson Brainard of Palmer, William H. Brainard administrator; Reuben F. Keith of Ludlow, Ira G. Potter administrator. An inventory was filed on the estate of David A. Hoag of Palmer, personal $4223.

The Boston & Albany managers concluded to try one more cheap excursion to Boston this week, and on Wednesday took into that city 1188 excursionists from Springfield and stations as far east as West Brookfield. One hundred and thirty-five tickets were sold at this station. It looks as though the road could run one or two more such excursions at a profit.

A special meeting of the Young Men's Library Association was held Monday evening, when it was voted to expend $250 in the purchase of new books. The committee are now making up the list of books to be bought, and they invite residents of the town to send to O. P. Allen the name of any book they would like especially to read, and the committee will endeavor to meet their wishes, as far as possible, in making their purchases.

The Republicans held a caucus at the town house Wednesday evening, for the choice of delegates to the various conventions, which are as follows: Councilor, S. S. Taft, J. S. Loomis, A. R. Murdock; county, J. S. Loomis, D. B. Bishop, John Clough; senatorial, C. L. Gardner, S. S. Taft, E. G. Murdock. The caucus also made choice of the following town committee for the ensuing year: S. S. Taft, D. B. Bishop, John Clough.

As Mrs. Charles DeLand, who lives on the hill near Joshua Graves, was driving home Thursday afternoon, some part of the harness broke, letting the wagon shafts drop to the ground. Mrs. DeLand clung to the lines and was drawn several yards in the wagon, when the thills caught on a stone, and she was pulled to the ground, breaking a thumb, bruising her hip, and jarring her considerably though her injuries are not considered serious.

A change is to be made in the time table of the New London Northern Railroad next Monday. On and after that date the boat train will leave Brattleboro at 3.30 p. m., and Amherst at 4.58, arriving at Palmer at 5.44, leaving for New London at 7.05, as now. The train which now leaves Amherst at 4.50 p. m. for Palmer will be discontinued, but the 2.07 p. m. train for Amherst will run as at present until the 31st, when some other changes are anticipated.

At a meeting of the Palmer Dramatic Club Tuesday evening the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, H. H. Paine; vice president, Wm. A. Barnes; Sec. and Treas., W. A. Weld; executive committee, W. A. Weld, George Robinson, W. P. Webster; committee on plays, W. C. Hitchcock, B. M. Griswold, Miss Jennie Kenerson. The club voted to present a play about Thanksgiving time for the benefit of the Improvement Association.

A new railroad velocipede, made by the Worcester R. R. Velocipede Co., was exhibited in this place Tuesday. It is a four-wheeled vehicle, the forward wheels being small, while the rear ones are 4½ feet in diameter. Between these the rider sits, propelling himself by means of treadles, while there is a seat for an additional rider, if wanted, and room for carrying tools. The whole thing weighs about 150 pounds, and can be easily propelled at the rate of 10 or 15 miles an hour.

Monday was rather an unfortunate day for the modoc train, though there was no serious mishap. On its way to Boston in the morning two cows were run over and killed. In the evening, on its return trip, a draw-bar pulled out at South Framingham, causing considerable delay while another car was substituted, and at South Worcester the forward engine broke loose and ran ahead a piece, causing another slight delay, so that the train was three-quarters of an hour behind time at this station.

Mrs. Mary S. Barnes of Sturbridge, mother of W. A. Barnes of this place, celebrated her 91st birthday on the 4th inst. The Southbridge Journal speaks of the event in these words: "She received money from her children and beautiful bouquets and baskets of flowers and many tokens which showed to her the love and respect of her many friends. She is probably the oldest person in town, and although somewhat feeble in body, her mind is acute and active. She reads, knits and sews, all without artificial eyes, as she never has used glasses in her life."

Thomas Owens, Jr., a dissipated young man formerly employed on the railroad, but for some time working at odd jobs, and last employed by F. J. Wassum as hostler, died Thursday afternoon, from drink and exposure, it is supposed. He fell down the stairs at Gray's restaurant in the N. L. N. R. R. depot Wednesday evening, on his way to supper, and being evidently in liquor was carried out and laid on the grass, and word sent to his folks. He soon got up and started off, and it was supposed he had gone home, but he was found Thursday morning on the railroad bank near the depot, where he had evidently lain all night, and he remained in an unconscious condition until his death.

BONDVILLE.

Did our teachers last week Friday see any better disciplinarians than we find in our village school?

Our schools closed Thursday and Friday, to give the teachers an opportunity to attend the institute at Wilbraham.

O. A. Parent has in a new stock of goods, and his three competent clerks are busy filling the numerous orders. If our local merchants keep on improving and adding to their merchandise, there will be no necessity for people to go out of town to find a good selection.

There was a social gathering at Mr. and Mrs. E. Rythar's last Monday evening, it being the fifteenth anniversary of their marriage. They were the recipients of a number of presents, among them a nice easy chair and a silver castor, which were presented by Rev. Mr. Manson in behalf of their friends. About one hundred were present, The Bondsville band furnished some good music and with games the evening passed pleasantly.

WEST WARREN.

The land league has been revived, and has nearly 50 members, with Timothy Collins, Jr., as president.

The creditors of Wood & Swindell have closed their dry goods and grocery store. They will probably pay 20 cents on a dollar and resume business.

J. L. Sedgely, the long-time dyer at the mills, has accepted a position with the Lawrence Mfg. Co. at Lowell. H. J. Woodward, until recently master mechanic at the mills, has removed to the provinces.

A course of six lectures has been arranged to be given in the Methodist church, as follows: Oct. 25, V. A. Cooper of Chelsea, "The Natural World we have not Seen;" Nov. 7, F. J. Wagner of Springfield, "A Trip to Mt. Katahdin, or the Lakes and Woods of Maine;" 15th, A. A. Wright of Lynn, "Wise or Otherwise;" 21st, N. T. Whitaker of Lowell, "America, Her Mission and Destiny;" Dec. 5, S. B. Sweetser of Springfield, "Hitting the Mark;" Dr. Edward H. Rice of Pittsfield, "An Evening with Authors—Grave and Gay."

THORNDIKE.

A small waiting room has been put up at Whipple's station.

The cloth room at the new mill is being enlarged by an addition.

Sumner Hastings lost a valuable cow recently. She got into the mire while after water.

The scarcity of rain is troubling the people of this village for water. The Thorndike Co. are impeded as last year.

Preaching service at the Congregational church will be in the afternoon at 1.15 instead of 10.45 a. m., the present hour. The Winter arrangement begins Nov. 1.

Joseph Duffy and Morris Cavin were seriously injured a while since at R. S. Hastings' quarry. They were taking out an unexploded cartridge, which exploded, injuring Duffy's hands and Cavin's eyes. Both are much better.

There are now four new houses erected, though not completed, on the new street opposite the Congregational church. Another foundation is laid at the west end of Church street. Preparations are also being made for the erection of another building on the company's ground facing Church street.

WALES.

Several citizens went to Boston on the excursion train last Wednesday.

Dea. Eugene Needham has been trading horses, and bought another new one, and now drives a four-in-hand.

Our local fishermen are enjoying themselves hugely about this time, in bringing in handsome strings of pickerel.

George. W. Royce has the agency for the book "From Log Cabin to White House," and will canvass the town for orders.

Our meat market man, since returning from his Vermont trip, has found his cares so increased as to require a third hand, and has employed George Martin, of Chester, Vt.

The Republicans have chosen the following delegates: A. A. Hubbard and D. A. Shaw, Jr., to county; G. S. Rogers and Willie E. White to councilor; J. C. Burley and David A. Shaw to senatorial; H. A. McFarland, F. L. Burley, G. S. Rogers, David Shepardson and Warren Shaw to representative convention.

The "Roxy Perkins" place, so called, was sold at auction Tuesday to Mrs. Julia A. Belding, of Rockville, Conn., for $650, her agent in the matter paying down the desired ten per cent to hold the sale. This is $110 less than the same property was bid off at a previous sale, which did not hold owing to some technical legal point.

Mrs. Maria D. Cooley discovered three men in the act of stealing her horse last Friday night. They had taken it from the stall, but fled when discovered, leaving the horse. Mrs. Cooley, with a young man in her employ, pursued them three miles, when they lost the track. She arrested two young men with whom she had had some difficulty, but they proved an alibi, and were released.

HAMPDEN.

E. M. Hitchcock, who has rented S. C. Spellman's store, has opened a very neat and cozy drug and fancy goods store, and should receive a share of patronage from those who desire goods in his line of trade.

Dea. William Root of Greenfield, brother of Rev. E. P. Root, who has been wasting away with consumption for months, died at his residence Wednesday, aged about 28 years. His funeral will be held to-day.

The Lacowsic mill, which has been stopped for awhile under repairs, is now running all its machinery. The various repairs have been made, and the company feel that the delay in business will soon be more than made up.

There is to be a harvest festival in the Methodist church Tuesday evening next. An address will be given by one of the professors of Wilbraham Academy. The Hampden Brass Band, which has been in training for the past three months, under the leadership of Frederick Andrews, will furnish music for the occasion, and all are cordially invited.

The scandal from Glendale (Wilbraham) still comes up like the "voice of many waters." It would seem to go back as far as the days of one Merrill, who preached in Glendale, since which time to talk of bigamy and improper conduct in social life, and gross improprieties in life generally, is an every-day occurrence. "Civil servicere form" is needed in Glendale.

The Hampden people are more than glad at the thought of civil service reform in the post office at Springfield. We have suffered almost beyond endurance from either gross neglect or inexcusable carelessness in the mails made up there for this office. Important letters fail almost daily of coming to time, and in not a few instances have caused not only delay but loss and derangement of business. Let us have a new deal. Avery J. Smith is the right man for the place.

WILBRAHAM.

Malaria is quite prevalent.

The new uniforms of the Wesleyan base ball club came this week.

The students of the academy had a holiday for a chestnut walk Thursday.

Mrs. Henry Brewer of North Main street is quite ill with chills and fever.

Mrs. Smith has sold her house on Faculty street to Elijah Munsell, who will take possession shortly.

Arthur Kilgore has moved into Mrs. Mear's house, and Wm. Eaton goes from there into part of Calvin Robbins' house.

The Wesleyan foot ball association have organized with the following officers: President, A. B. Call; secretary and treasurer, C. R. Harrington.

The delegates from this town to the Sunday school convention at Springfield Thursday and Friday were Rev. F. B. Smith, Mrs. Dr. Steele, Mrs. A. L. Bridge, R. R. Wright.

The Junior class held their reception at Philo hall Saturday evening. Vocal music was furnished by Myra King and Harvey Paine, and instrumental by Hattie Dustin and Miss Loomis.

The teachers' institute was held in this place on Thursday and Friday, with the following programme: Wednesday evening, address at Fisk Hall by Col. T. W. Higginson, on "History." Thursday forenoon, at the Congregational church, addresses on "Elementary Physics," by I. J. Osbun; "Arithmetic," G. A. Walton; "Elementary Chemistry," Mr. Osbun. Afternoon, "Penmanship," G. A. Walton; "Language and Grammar," J. W. Dickinson; "Drawing," C. W. Carter. In the evening, at Fisk hall, lecture, with illustrations, by Prof. W. H. Niles, on "Holland and its People." Friday morning, "Geography," Prof. Niles; "Principles of Teaching," J. W. Dickinson; "Reading," G. A. Walton. Afternoon, "Botany," J. G. Scott; "Natural History," Prof. Niles; "School Management," E. A. Hubbard. The sessions have been well attended, and full of interest.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The schools were closed Thursday and Friday, to enable the teachers to attend the teachers' institute at the Street.

E. B. Gates has put in a private telephone connecting his house with the store. There is some talk of having an instrument in this village connecting with Springfield, for public use.

Last Saturday evening the following were chosen delegates to the various Republican conventions: Councilor, E. H. Cutler, H. M. Bliss; county, Ira G. Potter, Dr. Stebbins Foskit; senatorial, F. E. Clark, C. E. Peck; representative, F. E. Clark, Nelson Mowry, E. B. Gates, A. E. Bell.

The masons at work on Dennis Powers' house seem to have no regard for the Sabbath, as they continued their work all day last Sunday. It was evident they were ashamed to be observed at work, by the way they acted when going out for the mortar, as they would dart in again as if shot. We believe they are not North Wilbraham citizens.

Rev. M. S. Howard has introduced the practice of alternate reading from the Scriptures at the afternoon service of Grace Chapel. All are invited to take their Bibles with them to church. It is thought advisable to have a praise service at the close of Sunday evening meetings, which will enable more to enter into the singing and become familiar with the pieces.

As A. E. Bell was driving to the Street last Saturday night his carriage collided with a heavy team standing in the road, yet hitched to a hitching-post opposite R. R. Wright's, completely destroying one wheel and badly breaking another, and causing damage of $12 or $15. The road at that place and for some distance south is nearly overcapped by the trees, and on dark nights it is impossible to avoid any teams that may be hitched in front of the houses. This is the second accident within two weeks at that place. Will not the selectmen take notice and have the matter righted?

WARREN.

The skating rink is to be opened to-night.

Dr. J. W. Hastings is to erect two dwelling houses.

Dennis O'Neil has bought the Fay farm on Coy's Hill for $5300.

A goodly number of our people went to Boston Wednesday.

Two hundred new books have just been added to the library.

Lyman A. Powers has gone to Worcester this week, on the grand jury.

The musical people are talking of commencing their usual rehearsals.

The Knowles pump works are driving business, and are run night and day.

The Clara Burton Grand Army post was inspected last evening by Commander Sloane of Spencer.

Rev. Dr. Butler, secretary of the American Bible Society, will speak in the Congregational church to-morrow evening.

Mrs. F. W. Kimball dislocated both shoulders Thursday afternoon by falling from a fence, while climbing Marks mountain.

A man who recently engaged board at Mrs. Pierce's disappeared on Tuesday, with $20 of his room-mate's money, and $40 belonging to C. A. Prouty.

Mrs. Livermore's lecture was listened to by a large and appreciative audience. Rev. V. A. Cooper will give the next lecture on Monday at the town hall.

F. E. Goodspeed, who has been so long in Drake & Co's. store, has bought out the fish market of W. A. Putman, who goes to Concord State Prison as an assistant. Frank Keith takes Mr. Goodspeed's place in Drake's store.

The teacher's association has the following officers for this term: President, Wm. O. Pratt; secretary, Miss Millman; executive committee, Miss Hitchcock, Mr. Hager and Miss Tyler. The next meeting will be held Nov. 8.

The iron molders of the Knowles steam pump works will give their first grand ball next Thursday evening in the town hall, with music by the North Brookfield Orchestra, and T. E. Flannery as prompter. The boys are exerting themselves to make it a success, and promise a good time to all.

MONSON.

Chas. F. Jordan has returned from his studies at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

The address of Rev. E. H. Byington at the Garfield memorial exercises is to be printed.

The squirrel crop seems to be good. One party in a two-day's hunt brought in 28; another in one day captured 16.

G. H. Newton has returned to town, having disposed of his interest in the mammoth whale to Fred J. Englehardt, who is now exhibiting it in Iowa.

Several of the Main street residents have been adding to their water supply, profiting by the experience of the past few years, when the supply has often been short.

Rev. Frederic Woods of Westfield will deliver his popular lecture entitled "The Tortoise and the Hare," in the Methodist church next Wednesday evening at 7½ o'clock.

A petition is being circulated for a new road east of the village, to run from a point near the residence of C. S. Pease southerly to intersect the Wales road, near Austin King's.

Chas. Fowler shows a fine lot of Fall goods, blankets, dress goods, etc.; E. F. Willis makes a display of trunks, robes, etc., and W. N. Flynt & Co. offer full lines of all their goods.

The Star course of entertainments will open Oct. 31st with Alfred J. Knight's famous Lyceum Combination, which includes four first-class artists—Alfred J. Knight, impersonation; Sophie M. Osburn, reader and elocutionist; Frank M. Howard, basso; Emma Howard, soprano. The course has not been fully arranged, but will consist of two lectures, one concert, one comedy company and one combination entertainment. Only first-class talent will be engaged, and the management will make a strong bid for success.

The annual meeting of the Hampden Conference of Congregational churches will open at 9 a. m. in the Congregational church next Tuesday with devotional services, led by Rev. S. G. Austin, followed by the organization, and written reports from the churches, after which there will be a discussion upon the state of religion in the country, by Rev. Dr. S. G. Buckingham and others. In the afternoon the anniversary of the Benevolent Association will occur, and also the meeting of the Woman's Board, and Rev. S. E. Hurlbut of West Springfield will read a paper on "The Way to Increase the Work of the Societies and to Secure Larger Contributions." In the evening there will be a praise meeting and discussions on revivals of religion, hindrances, and helps, opened by Rev. W. L. Gaylord of Chicopee. Wednesday morning, at 8.30 o'clock, there will be a devotional service, followed by business matters and the report of the committee on fellowship meetings. Rev. M. S. Howard of Wilbraham will open a discussion on the ways to promote Christian fellowship in the local church, and Rev. L. D. Calkins of West Springfield one on growth of Christian character—how secured. The meetings will close in the afternoon with a sermon by Rev. Washington Gladden of Springfield, followed by the Lord's Supper.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The Barrett's Junction water company, having a capital of $50,000, has been incorporated, with William B. Kimball of Enfield as president and treasurer, and Hubert M. Coney of Springfield, formerly of Ware, and Alfred G. Osgood as his associates. The company will construct dams and canals, and furnish water power for manufacturing purposes on Swift river, running through Palmer and Belchertown.

The celebration of the anniversary of the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown being the current topic this week, it may be interesting to our readers to know that Gen. Lafayette once visited Ware. It was in the year 1825, and he was accompanied by his son. The town then had but 600 inhabitants, who turned out en masse, the mill, for there was but one, being closed in the morning, to do him honor. Mrs. Cynthia Loomis, who we believe is our only resident who saw him at that time, gives us these facts. The ladies were assembled in the hall of the hotel, the building now standing next to Dr. Yale's store, and the men on the common opposite. The General shook hands with all, the ladies first. While shaking hands with Mrs. Loomis he said, "I rejoice to see you, my children, enjoying the liberties for which we fought." When he left town the ladies formed on one side of the carriage, the men on the other, and escorted him to the limits of the village, the General bowing to the right and left. Mrs. Loomis describes him as a tall, handsome man, with a commanding mien.

Voters should perhaps be reminded that the following proposed amendment to our State constitution is to be voted on at the approaching election:

"No person having served in the army or navy of the United States in time of war, and having been honorably discharged from such service, if otherwise qualified to vote, shall be disqualified therefor on account of being a pauper; or, if a pauper, because of the non-payment of a poll-tax."

It is estimated by Private Secretary Brown that the expenses of President Garfield's sickness will be $100,000, of which $53,000 is for the doctors. Bliss wants $25,000, Agnew and Hamilton each $12,000, Reyburn $8000 and Mrs Edison $1000. Woodward and Barnes, being government officers, may not get anything.

Many patriotic and charitable people will doubtless be surprised to learn that there are now between one and two hundred Massachusetts soldiers in our almshouses, candidates for a pauper's grave. While many States have provided for their soldiers a home, Massachusetts has done nothing of the kind until recently, when the Highland Park Hotel, a fine building on Powder Horn Hill, Chelsea, was purchased for a soldiers' home by a board of trustees, at a fraction of its original cost. Money is now needed to complete the purchase, and provide a fund for the suppport of the soldiers who will be admitted as fast as the resources of the home will allow. To assist in raising the needed fund, arrangements are now on foot to open a grand State bazaar or fair for this soldiers' home, next December, on the largest scale ever seen in this Commonwealth, and under the auspices of the most distinguished names. The bazaar will be held in the new exhibition building of the Charitable Mechanic Association, in Boston, and contributions are earnestly solicited from all parts of the State, either in money, or articles for the fair. Money may be sent to Henry P. Kidder, the treasurer, at 40 State street, Boston.

New York is threatened with a water famine unless the reservoirs are soon replenished by heavy rains. The reservoirs now hold only about a 20 days' supply, and the daily flow into them is only 9,000,000 gallons, while the city consumes 95,000,000 gallons daily. It is proposed to ask the ocean steamers to stop taking city water on their vessels, and supply themselves with the apparatus which each vessel has for the distillation of sea water. Apprehensions of a failure of water are felt, in case of a great fire, and then the only thing to be done would be to blow up the buildings in its path with dynamite. For this work the city has a special department of sappers and miners, who are thoroughly drilled in the use of high explosives.

FIRES.—The town of Kokoma, Col., was almost entirely destroyed by fire last week Thursday night, the loss amounting to over $400,000.——The business part of Humboldt, Tenn., was burned last Saturday.——Four little children were burned to death in a house at Cook's Corners, near Malone, N. Y., Sunday night, the parents barely escaping with three other children.

One hundred and thirty British and foreign vessels were wrecked last week during the terrific gale on the coasts of Great Britain and Germany, and one hundred and thirty-eight persons are reported lost or missing. It also is feared that a Danish emigrant ship, with five hundred lives, was lost in the gale.

Mrs. Harriet Smith, of Upper Montclair, N. J., was determined to die last Saturday, and after being rescued from drowning, she cut her throat. She was then removed to a hospital, where she tore open the wound, and with her fingers separated the jugular vein, causing instant death.

Captain E. P. McCrea, commander of the flagship Tennessee, fell dead on the deck of the Dispatch at Yorktown last Friday, as he advanced to address Admiral Wyman. Captain McCrea's widow is a lineal descendant of the Comte de Grasse.

Joseph A. Allen, the new superintendent of the Westboro Reform School, assumed control of the institution last Saturday. In the evening 20 boys made their escape.

Magazines, Etc.

Good Company makes a tempting offer to subscribers who send to its office at Springfield $3 for a year's subscription, beginning with the September number, which opens a new volume. For 75 cents additional the publishers will send the twelve numbers for the past year, containing besides many short stories a serial story in six instalments by Ellen W. Olney, six articles on Arctic experiences and adventures by Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, U. S. A., commander of the late Franklin Search expedition, an anonymous serial in six parts entitled "Mildred's Caprice," and including among other contributors John Burroughs, Maurice Thompson, Edward Bellamy, H. E. Scudder, Ernest Ingersoll, T. S. Collier, Octave Thanet, Rebecca Harding Davis, Mrs. Gen. Lew Wallace, Mrs. Lizzie W. Champney, Saki Wakamatz, Elaine Goodale. Those who have not seen Good Company can send twenty-five cents for the September number, containing a twenty-two-page story by Constance Fenimore Woolson; a twenty- story by Ellen W. Olney; a New England story entitled "'Squog;" "The Atlanta Cotton Exposition," by Edward Atkinson, its originator; "A Florida Fantasy," by Maurice Thompson; "A Ladies' Enterprise of the Pacific Coast;" "Venice in the Dog Days;" also poems and various sketches and short articles. After examining this number, but $3.50 need be sent to secure the other 23 numbers offered above. Otherwise obtained these twelve past numbers will cost $3 instead of 75 cents.

The Atlantic Monthly for November is a number which cannot fail to please its readers. It has a short article on President Garfield, its thoughtfulness and grace of style indicating Mr. Howells as its author, though no name is given. Miss Lucy Larcom contributes from her own recollections an interesting article entitled "Among Lowell Mill-Girls." Sidney Howard Gay, in answer to the question, "When did the Pilgrim Fathers land at Plymouth?" seems to show conclusively that the date heretofore given for that world-famous landing is incorrect. Miss Sarah Orne Jewett has one of her characteristic sketches entitled "From a Mournful Villager," which will probably be reproduced in her book called "Country By-Ways." John Fiske discusses in a thorough and very interesting manner the "Theory of a Common Origin for all Languages." Mrs. E. D. R. Bianciardi writes a very engaging paper on a "Florentine Family in the Fifteenth Century." Sylvester Baxter contributes an important paper on the "Forestry Work of the Tenth Census." The two serial stories, Mr. Howells's "Dr. Breen's Practice," and Mr. James's "Portrait of a Lady," continue in a manner that cannot fail to be very satisfactory to their many readers. W. O. Stoddard has an interesting short story, "So as by Fire." The remainder of the number contains reviews of new books, some brief essays in the Contributors' Club, and its usual excellent comments on the books of the month. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The Pennsylvania Railroad is soon to make a trial of a new Fontaine locomotive which has been constructed with the purpose of making 90 miles an hour with its fast train between New York and Philadelphia.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, have just opened a very elegant assortment of silk-lined and fur-trimmed cloaks. They are offering a lot of silk dolmans at $25. Every lady expecting to buy a silk garment this Fall should see them. They have a new line of children's flannel suits.

Tinkham & Co., Springfield, had their second grand opening of Paris and Berlin cloaks Thursday and Friday (20th and 21st). They have just bought 100 elegant cloaks of Paris and Berlin make to close a consignment of sample cloaks, no two alike. The prices will range from $25 to $40. They have made a large addition to their fine stock of cloth cloaks. Their opening of seal cloaks and fur-lined silk garments will take place on the 26th and 27th. They promise the finest display of these goods ever made in the city, and cordially invite all to view their new cloak rooms.

There are no such overcoats shown in Springfield as you can see at Foster, Babbitt & Chapin's. They are leading on fine goods, and as their stock is new and very large they offer some special inducements to buyers. There is no better place to buy boys' and children's goods in Western Massachusetts, while their stock of hats, caps and gloves, which they have just added, are only additional attractions to this young but most popular clothing house.

Little Dora's Soliloquy.

I tan't see what our baby boy is dood for, anyway;
He don't know how to walk or talk, he don't know how to play;
He tears up ev'ry single zing he posser-bil-ly tan,
An' even tried to break, one day, my mamma's bestest fan.
He's al'ays tumblin' 'bout ze floor, an' gives us awful scares,
An' when he goes to bed at night, he never says his prayers.
On Sunday, too, he musses up my go-to-meetin' clothes,
An' once I foun' him hard at work a pinc'in' dolly's nose;
An' ze uzzer day zat naughty boy (now s'pose you zink?)
Upset a dreat big bottle of my papa's writin' ink,
An' 'stead of kyin' dood and hard, as course he ought to done,
He laughed, and kicked his head most off, as zough he zought 'was fun.
He even tried to reach up high, an' pull zings off ze shelf,
An' he al'ays wanted you, of course, jus' when you want you'self.
I rather dess, I really do, from how he pulls my turls,
Zey all was made a-purpose for to 'noy us little girls;
An' I wish zere wasn't no such zing as naughty baby boys—
My—why, zat's him a-kyin' now; he makes a dreffful noise.
I dess I better run and see, for if he has—boo-hoo!—
Felled down ze stairs and killed hisself, whatever s-s-s'all I do! —St. Nicholas.

DRIVING WITH A PARASOL.

The other evening the Jester was bathing his eyes in cold water, and suspended the operation long enough to remark:

"If a woman can't take her parasol to Heaven when she dies, she won't be happy there. She will come back after it."

An impressive quiet followed this dogmatic statement, and the parasols of the court knew some of them were in for it.

"We were driving this afternoon," the aggrieved Jester resumed, "and the princess kindly shaded my head with her parasol. It was very kind, indeed. It limited my view of the country, at times, to my knees and the dashboard of the wagon. Whenever we met a team, especially if the road was very narrow, the princess lowered her parasol between me and the passing wagon, so that I turned out by faith, or stood on my head to catch a glimpse of the colliding wheels. When we started down a steep hill she dropped the parasol between me and the horses, and I trusted to the good sense of the animals to keep out of the ditch. When we met any acquaintances to whom I wished to bow, she knocked my hat into my eyes. When she would point my admiring gaze to some exquisitely tinted Autumn leaves, she jabbed a projecting rib into my eye. When she turned to speak to any one in the rear seat, she rasped the back of my neck. Oft as the carriage struck a stone or lurched over a rut, she prodded my long-suffering head with vicious little jabs. I drew my head down between my shoulders and sat crouched and bent, but the remorseless parasol still pursued me. I have been pelted and prodded, and all from a mistaken sense of kindness. A woman's unselfishness and kindness of heart always prompts her to hold her parasol over the man who drives. And if the man who drives is allowed to choose for himself, he will choose sunstroke in preference to the parasol every time. I do not complain, mind you, I merely make a statement of plain fact. Any man who has had to drive a pair of horses while some gentle-hearted woman held a parasol over him, knows what I have suffered. And when she holds an umbrella it is infinitely worse. Then the man is utterly and hopelessly extinguished, and the material world is to him only a wild, blank chaos of alpaca and whalebone." —Burlington Hawkeye."

Edward, aged three and a half, asks for more cookies. "Have you an appetite, Edward?" says his father. Edward, reflecting that if he answers "Yes," he will be given graham bread, and that if he says "no," he will be told he doesn't need anything more, replies to his father (a minister,) "Well, pa, God has given me an appetite for cookies and not for graham bread." He got the cookies.

A little girl, three and one-half, asks for some bread and butter. Her mother is busy and gives her a piece of bread, saying, "If you are very hungry you can eat that." She replies, "Well, I ain't very hungry, and I want some butter on it."

Mme. Z. lost her husband, and would not be comforted. For days and days after the funeral she wept floods of tears. Suddenly a thought struck her. "I have one little consolation," she said. "I will know where he is nights."

Spoony dry goods clerk to smart miss trying on a hat before the glass. "Don't I wish I was a looking-glass?" Smart miss: "Yes, perhaps you'd get more girls to look at you then." Clerk collapses and is carried out.

The heart will commonly govern the head; and it is certain that any strong passion, set the wrong way, will soon infatuate even the wisest of men; therefore the first part of wisdom is to watch the affections.

The New Haven Palladium remarks that the one redeeming feature of Mormonism seems to be that it does not throw the burden of the support of a husband on one woman.

It is stated that the brewers of Cincinnati are the political masters of Ohio, more potential in shaping and controlling its legislation than all its pastors and church-members combined.

The poor sufferer that has been dosing himself with so-called Troches and thereby upset his stomach without curing the troublesome cough, should take our advice and use at once Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and get well.

Nearly all the ills that afflict mankind can be prevented and cured by keeping the stomach, liver and kidneys in perfect working order. There is no medicine known that will do this as quickly and surely, without interfering with duties, as Parker's Ginger Tonic. See advertisement. oc

An Interesting Account!

STONE IN THE BLADDER EXPELLED BY USING DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY."

Mr. S. W. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess Co., N. Y., the son of Mr. E. S. Hicks, whose name may have appeared in this journal in connection with an article similar to this, was, like his father, afflicted with Stone in the Bladder, only that his case was more serious than his father's. On the appearance of the disease the father advised the son to write to Dr. David Kennedy of Rondout, N. Y., who, he said, would tell him what to do. Dr. Kennedy replied, suggesting the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which had worked so successfully in the father's case. Mr. Hicks, who had been assured by the local physicians that they could do nothing more for him, tried "Favorite Remedy" at a venture. After two weeks' use of it he passed a stone ¾ of an inch long and of the thickness of a pipe-stem. Since then he has had no symptoms of the return of the trouble. Here is a sick man healed. What better results could have been expected? What greater benefit could medical science confer? The end was gained; that is surely enough. Dr. Kennedy assures the public, by a reputation which he cannot afford to forfeit or imperil, that the "Favorite Remedy" does invigorate the blood, cures liver, kidney and bladder complaints, as well as all those diseases and instances peculiar to females. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

CARTER'S
IRON PILLS
—FOR THE—
BLOOD, NERVES AND COMPLEXION.

We recommend CARTER'S IRON PILLS to every woman who is weak, nervous and discouraged; particularly those who have thin, pale lips, cold hands and feet, and who are without strength or ambition. These Pills quiet the nerves, give strength to the body, induce refreshing sleep, enrich and improve the quality of the blood, and purify and brighten the complexion. They cure palpitation of the heart, nervousness, tremblings, nervous headache, leucorrhœa, pains in the back, and other forms of female weakness. Remember that Iron is one of the constituents of the blood, and is the great tonic. CARTER'S IRON PILLS are also valuable for men who are troubled with nervous weakness, night sweats, &c. In metal boxes, at 50 CENTS. Sold by all druggists, or sent by mail. Address

PROTECTION FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE,
INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE
PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR
(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use. If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

BACK ACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.
Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.
Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.
Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.
Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH
Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.
Because the manufacturers haue received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

Summer Gone.

The milkweed bursts its silken pod,
The ripe and downy grasses nod;
The golden rod is blossoming,
And plaintively the crickets sing,
For, underneath the fading grass,
Alas, alas!
The Summer lies!

The winds are sighing o'er the sea,
And woods catch up the threnody,
The homesick robin sings no more,
And swallows fly to fairer shore,
Piping, as to the South they pass,
Alas, alas!
That Summer dies!

Ah, something from my life hath flown
Than Summer, sweeter, dearer grown;
Though sleeping, only sleeping they,
My heart cries out impatiently,
That underneath the fading grass,
Alas, alas!
My darling lies!

Doth sleeping Summer ever dream
Of bare brown woods and fettered stream?
What joy to waken from repose
And on her bosom find a rose;
But we behold the fading grass
And cry, alas,
That Summer dies!

THE STAGE-DRIVER'S STORY.

In '67 Jake Pool was staging the route from Gallatin to Helena, in Montana, driving a four-horse coach in summer and a "jerky" in winter, seventy miles a day through the wildest region and over one of the most dangerous routes in the United States. The country through which the trail ran—for it was little else than a trail—was totally uninhabited, but for the three stage stations where horses were changed, and which were dug-outs, or log-huts, twenty miles apart. The Indians, though generally friendly, were liable to become enemies at a moment's warning; road agents and outlaws were thicker upon the Gallatin road than any other north of the Union Pacific railroad, and the route itself ran through gullies and canons, and along the verge of dizzy precipices, as though originally laid out by mountain sheep. Notwithstanding all this, Jake was a successful driver, made better time, lost fewer mails and express safes, and ran his coach at a smaller expense to the company than any other man in their employ. But when misfortune did overtake him, it was no light hand that the genius of evil laid upon him, which the following adventure proves:

One muggy morning in early May as Jake hauled up in front of the stage office and prepared to receive mails, express and messenger, and passengers, if any there should be for Helena, the Wells-Fargo agent called to him from within. Throwing the reins over the foot-brake, Pool descended from his perch and entered the office.

The agent shut the door behind him; then drawing near he said, in a half-whisper:

"There's fifteen thousand in currency in the safe to take over to-day."

"All right!" responded Jake. "I've carried more before now, and carried it safely."

"But," said the agent, drawing still nearer, "Dick's sick, and there's no messenger."

"Ah!" said the driver, meditatively; then touching the revolver which hung at his belt: "I'll be messenger and coachman both then."

"But," still continued the other, "there's one thing more," and he leaned forward so that his lips touched his companion's ear. "Copper Tom and his pal, old Jim, are on the road. A man from Cross Trees was robbed by them last night."

Pool whistled long and low, and his hand fell from his pistol-butt. "Copper Tom" was the worst road agent in Montana—a desperado, with both courage and brains.

"Don't send the rags."

"I must!" said the expressman, anxiously. "The order is peremptory; the money must go to-day, messenger or no messenger. Now, will you take it and carry it through?"

Jake laughed.

"I'll take it; that's part of my business. Throw the safe under the seat and give me your pistol; I may need two." And he took the other's revolver from the desk where it lay and thrust it into his boot-top. "As to carrying it through, that's another matter, with those fellows to stop it. But I'll promise you this—if I go through, the safe shall!"

The agent grasped his hand and shook it warmly. The door was thrown open, the driver mounted his seat, the iron box was stowed beneath his feet, the single passenger (an old woman, to be left at the first station,) got in, the whip cracked, the horses plunged, the coach lurched heavily forward, and amid a shower of mud disappeared down the steep mountain road.

Although it was May the morning was cold, aad it was not until the sun had climbed well up the eastern sky that the chill thawed out of the air, and by that hour Pool was more than twenty miles upon his journey, with fresh horses in the traces and an empty coach behind him. He began to brighten with the sun.

"After I get through the Devil's Pass," said he to himself, "Copper Tom or any other man may whistle for me, for from that to Dickson's is as handsome a road as ever a horse struck foot upon, and whoever tries to stop me there, unless he shoots first, will go under the leader's feet. I intend to make that little seven miles in just twenty-eight minutes without brakes."

And he gathered his reins with a firmer hand, as if already whirling at that mad pace down the mountain-side.

"Let's see," he continued, "if nothing goes wrong and the road's all right I ought to make my last change by five o'clock and reach the Pass before six. It will then be broad daylight, so I can rattle right along, and then, after the spin down the 'causeway,' I'll strike Dickson's before seven, certain. Beyond that the road is too open and too much traveled into Helena to be dangerous. By Jove!" he concluded, his heart warming as he struck his heels against the safe beneath the seat. "I can't see where the road agents can stop me, unless—Good heavens? what if they try it in the very pass itself? I had not thought of that!"

The man was silent for a moment, and his face grew grave; then, brightening, he shook his reins, loosened his revolvers in boot and belt, and, with a sigh, concluded his soliloquy with the remark:

"Well, if they should meet me in the Pass, 'twill be about an even thing. If they miss their first shot, I'll run 'em down, drive 'em into the canon, or drop 'em with my pistols. If they don't miss, why then the swag's theirs!"

It was now high noon, and soon station two was reached, where horses were again changed, and where Pool dined upon jerked bear-meat, hot bread and black coffee.—Strong food, but none too strong for the long ride yet before him.

As he mounted the box and prepared to depart, the keeper of the station slipped from his dug-out and drew near.

"There's an old pard down the road apiece 'll want a ride. He war here 'bout two hours ago. He'll bear watchin'."

And the rough frontiersman touched the pistol-butt which protruded from his open shirt-front to emphasize his warning.

Jake nodded.

"Thanks, Tom! I'll keep my eyes open. Go-long!"

The fresh steeds in harness sprang strongly forward and the empty coach whirled away.

"It's old Jim, sure!" half-whispered Pool to himself, as his trained eyes searched the winding road before him. "The old scamp wants to ride so that he'll be on hand when Copper Tom turns up in the Pass. I see it all."

The teeth closed with a snap.

"Good!" he continued a moment later. "He shall ride."

Some five miles were passed when, in the shadow of a great pine that grew near the trail, Jake espied his prospective passenger prone upon the ground at the foot of the tree, apparently resting. As the rattling coach drew near the man bestirred himself and slowly rose.

"Hullo, driver! Kin ye favor an old beggar with a lift? I'm played, fer I'm too old to tramp as I used to, and too poor to pay for a ride. Kin ye give me one?"

He stepped forward as he spoke. Poor he was, if tattered garments betoken poverty, for his clothing was but a single patched rag from head to foot. Old he surely was, for the withered skin and scanty gray locks, the claw-like hands and sunken eyes, could not well be disguised.

Half in scorn and half in pity, yet with a brain awake to his danger, Jake drew rein and replied to his petitioner:

"Yes! Be lively and climb up here. I'm behind time now. Where do you go?"

The old man answered, as he struggled to a seat at the driver's side:

"Dickson's."

A touch of the whip and the horses were again upon a quick trot. Pool eyed his companion as they rode onward, and almost unconsciously dropped his hand to his boot-top and loosened the revolver carried there.

"Cold day for May," said the new-comer, shivering. "This yer wind's sharp, too."

"Yes," responded the other, mentally wondering where about his ragged clothes the scoundrel at his side had concealed his weapons, "it is cold; but you'll find it warmer in the pass."

"Sure?" said the old man, leering in Jake's face.

"Sure!" responded that worthy, his blood chilling with the covert hint in the word; and he urged his horses to yet greater speed.

The grade was sharply descending now, and the road rocky and rough. A mile more and the Pass would be reached. The coach fairly swayed under its rapid motion.

Old Jim was forced to cling to the seat with both hands, in order to prevent being hurled to the ground. This was as Pool desired, and he smiled grimly as he noticed the other's actions.

"Yer—a-drivin—purty—fast!" screamed the gray-haired desperado, the words fairly jerked from him as the coach sprang forward, rocking from side to side. "You'll—hev—to—hold—up—at—the—Pass—I—reckon!"

Jake set his teeth.

The granite walls of the Pass were before them, and the roadway, descending and steep, ran into the shadow of the coming night and the gloom of the grave-like opening—a narrow path, but little wider than the coach itself.

The roar of the river far below knelled a never-ending warning as it ran, ragged and torn, among the jagged rocks, and the death-like mist that crept upward was damp and chill.

"I won't hold up!" and with these words the driver struck his horses, sharply, and, snorting, they sprang forward into the Devil's Pass.

At the same instant, half-way through the terrible gorge, standing motionless in the center of the roadway, a beetling wall of rock upon the one hand, a chasm of unknown depth upon the other, was seen a man!

Copper Tom was awaiting his quarry!

The old man at Pool's side uttered a cry, and loosening his grasp of the seat with one hand, he would have thrust it into his breast; but the other leaned suddenly toward him, and pressing a revolver muzzle against his forehead, whispered, hoarsely;

"Down with yer hands! If ye stir ag'in I'll kill ye! I know ye, old Jim, an' ye can't catch Jake Pool nor his load this time! Down with yer hands!"

The shuddering rascal's hand fell at his side; his face grew ashen hued, and his eyes stared before him. They were rapidly approaching Copper Tom.

For an instant as they drew near, that worthy stood facing them; then through the fading light he saw the position of his pal, upon whom he had depended—he saw the stern, set face of the driver—he saw the furious horses plunging down upon him—and with a terror-stricken cry he turned and fled!

Could he but reach the lower end of the causeway he might escape—could he but find a single spot to turn aside he would be safe; but it was not to be.

Nearer and nearer thundered the iron-shod hoofs behind him, narrower and still narrower grew the fatal road, until there rang a certain horrible, despairing cry, mingled with the frightened snort of the horses, a dark something bent down before the plunging steeds, rolled an instant beneath their grinding feet, and then, spurned by the flying wheels, was hurled, an undistinguishable mass, into the canon beneath, and the coach sped on!

Half an hour later Jake Pool pulled into the corral at Dickson's ranch, and tumbling a half-fainting man from the seat at his side into the arms of the astounded hostlers, he said:

"Bind that man and give him to the sheriff! It's old Jim, the road agent! His pard's at the bottom of the gulf in the Pass; this one ought to stretch hemp when the officers get him, and I've driven my last run from Gallatin! There's too much risk about the business for me!"

And Jake kept his word. He no longer coaches it, but now keeps a public house in Helena itself, where, not long since, at his own snug fireside, he told me this thrilling tale.

Selfishness mars the loveliest action; it stains the fairest beauty; it dims the brightest luster; it blotches the most munificent charity.

"Mamma," asks a little girl, "why is it they sing in church, 'We'll dine no more,' and then go right home and dine?"

A wandering tribe called the Siouxs,
Wear moccasins, having no shiouxs,
They are made of buckskin,
With the fleshy side in,
Embroidered with beads of bright hiouxs.

When out on the warpath, the Siouxs
March single file—never by tiouxs—
And by "blazing" the trees
Can return at their ease,
And their way through the forest ne'er liouxs.

All new-fashioned boats he eschiouxs,

A THOROUGH JOB.

Judge M——, a well known jurist living near Cincinnati, was fond of relating this anecdote. He had once occasion to send to the village for a carpenter, and a sturdy young fellow appeared with his tools.

"I want this fence mended to keep the cattle out. There are some unplaned boards—use them. It is out of sight from the house, so you need not take time to make it a neat job. I will only pay you a dollar and a-half."

The judge went to dinner, and coming out found the man carefully planing each board. Supposing that he was trying to make a costly job of it he ordered him to nail them on at once just as they were, and continued his walk. When he returned the boards were planed and numbered ready for nailing.

"I told you that this fence was to be covered with vines," he said angrily, "I do not care how it looks."

"I do," said the carpenter gruffly, carefully measuring his work. When it was finished there was no part of the fence so thorough in finish.

"How much do you charge?" asked the judge.

"A dollar and a half," said the man, shouldering his tools.

The judge stared. "Why did you spend all that labor on the job, if not for the money?"

"For the job, sir."

"Nobody would have seen the poor work on it."

"But I should have known it was there. No; I'll take only the $1.50." He took it and went away.

Ten years afterward the judge had the contract to give for the erection of certain magnificent public buildings. There were many applicants among master builders, but one face caught his eye.

"It was my man of the fence," he said. "I knew we should have only good, genuine work from him. I gave him the contract and it made a rich man of him."

It is a pity that boys were not taught in their earliest years that the highest success belongs only to the man, be he carpenter, farmer, author or artist, whose work is most thoroughly done.

QUAINT PROVERBS.

Silence is a cheap virtue.
Short pleasures, long lament.
Simple diet, healthy children
Sloth is the mother of poverty.
Sin and sorrow are inseparable.
Sincerity is the mother of truth.
Silent waters are seldom shallow.
Silence is the sanctuary of truth.
Sharp stomachs make short graces.
Solitude is at times the best society.
Short reckoning makes long friends.
Solid sense is ever preferable to wit.
Set bounds to your zeal by discretion.
Severity may be softened by diffidence.
Small matters win great commendation.
Sluggards cause their own misfortunes.
Show me a liar and I'll show you a thief.
Sneer not at that which you cannot rival.
Set not every one's dial by your own watch.
Sincerity is the basis of every manly virtue.
Set not too high a value on your own abilities.
Speak what you think, but not what you know.
So long as you are ignorant be not ashamed to learn.
Reason without exercise will degenerate to insanity.
Sound not the vain trumpet of self commendation.
Speak well of your friend; of your enemy say nothing.
Small griefs are loud, but great ones are mostly silent.
Sin is not less dangerous because men are hardened in it.
Slight not good counsel, come from what quarter it may.
Small thoughts indulged are little thieves to let in greater.
So the heart is right, it matters not which way the head lies.
Suspicion is no less an enemy to virtue than to happiness.
Scholarship without good breeding is but tiresome pedantry.

They tell of a mule at Big Evans, Nev., who amused himself by driving nails with his heels. There was a post containing nails partly driven, and the mule, backing up within easy reaching distance, began kicking the nails home. When the head of a nail projected but a short distance he would tap it gently, and drive it like the carpenter with a hammer. When a nail was half driven, then it would require a heavier blow; but the mule apparently understood perfectly the weight to be applied. Fifty or sixty nails were driven in this manner, and then a rough old twenty-penny was encountered. Two or three fair blows were administered without perceptible result, and then the mule trembled with rage. Stepping a little furthur away from the post, he laid back his ears, doubled up his back and fired away with both heels. The blow was terrific, and the post was broken off at the ground. In the kick, though, the mule sprained the tendons of the left hind leg seriously, and now goes lame. It is the first instance where a mule has been known to lame itself in kicking.

The most thoughtful man has been discovered in New Jersey. Just before he died he said to the undertaker, "When you put me on ice do not waste any on my feet; they have already been frozen."

REARING AND TRAINING OF CHILDREN.

Every mother should bear in mind that it is easier to keep the children well than it is to cure them after they become ill. A few simple rules, faithfully and unflinchingly observed, would banish nine-tenths of the sicknesses among children that too often lead to fatal results. Give them in the first place plenty of love—expressions of love! Oftentimes fathers and mothers deeply love their children, yet show such little evidence of affection that the children are apt to have a forlorn feeling that it doesn't exist at all. An occasional word of praise, a caress, an expression of sympathy—these are as necessary to healthy and happy child-life as summer showers to growing vines. Especially bear this in mind—they should never go to bed cold, or hungry, or unhappy. Let them have plenty of healthy and palatable food, at regular hours. Small children should have a slice of bread and butter, or an apple, or some simple "bite," half way between meals. and nothing more in the way of lunches. It is the constant nibbling and "piecing" that does harm. Never force a child to eat anything he has a real dislike for. When plain food is declined because of the more tempting dessert ahead, it is a different affair; but I have seen little children compelled to eat things, when every mouthful would be swallowed with tremendous effort and genuine disgust. Some of us have an utter abhorrence of onions or tomatoes, or codfish, or some article of food that ought to be relished. How would we like to have some mighty giant put such food on our plates, and compel us to eat it amid wild flourishes of his knotted club? Would we sweetly feel that the dear giant knew what was best for us, and proceed to swallow every mouthful? or would we say to ourselves—"We'll eat it, because we must, but we hate it all the same, and we hate you, too!" Children have as much right to their likes and dislikes as we have to ours.—American Agriculturist.

SWEET HOME.

When two young people love each other and marry, they restore the picture of the apostolic church. They are of one heart and of one soul. Neither do they say that anything they possess is their own, but they have all thtngs in common. Their mutual trust in each other, their entire confidence in each other, draws out all that is best in both. Love is the angel who rolls away the stone from the grave in which we bury our better nature, and it comes forth. Love makes all things new; makes a new heaven and a new earth; makes all cares light, all pain easy. It is the one enchantment of human life which realizes Fortunio's purse and Aladdin's palace, and turns the "Arabian Night" into mere prose by comparison. Before real society can come, true homes must come. As in a sheltered nook in the midst of the great sea of ice which rolls down the summit of Mont Blanc, is found a little green spot full of tender flowers, so in the shelter of home, in the warm atmosphere of household love, spring up the pure affections of parents and child; father, mother, son, daughter; of brothers and sisters. Whatever makes this insecure, and divorce frequent, makes of marriage not a union for life, but an experiment which may be tried as often as we choose, and abandoned when we like. And this cuts up by the roots all the dear affections of home; leaves children orphaned, destroys fatherly and motherly love, and is a virtual dissolution of society. I know the great difficulties of this question, and how much wisdom is required to solve them. But whatever weakens the permanence of marriage tends to dissolve society; for permanent homes are to the social state what the little cells are to the body. They are the commencement of organic life, the centers from which all organizations proceed.—James Freeman Clarke.

LOSERS OF MONEY.

"Pardon me for troubling you, sir, but did you drop a $20 gold piece?" asked a man with an earnest look on his face and a memorandum book in his hand of a well-dressed individual on the corner of Jefferson and Woodward avenues.

The man addressed ran his hand nervously into various pockets and replied:

"Well, now, I declare! Can it be possible that I was so careless as to drop that coin? Yes it's gone. I must have lost it right here, near where we stand."

The man opened his memorandum book, took from his vest pocket the stub of a pencil and said;

"Will you favor me with your name and address?"

They were given, and the questioner started on, when the well-dressed man cried:

"Hi, there! Where's the money. Give me my gold piece."

"Oh I didn't find any money. I took a notion this morning that in a city like this, where thousands and thousands of dollars are handled every hour, there must be great losses, and started out to investigate the matter. Between here and the river I found seven men that lost twenty-dollar gold pieces, and I expect to run the list up to 200 before I reach the City Hall. Good-day, sir."

Johnny, an ambitious and musically inclined youth of twelve years, has been taking lessons on the guitar, and has recently had a present of a fine instrument upon which to practice at home. The family were talking about it before it had come from the shop, when little four-years-old, on being asked if she knew what a guitar was, wisely said: "Course I do; papa's got one in his nose. I heard him say so."

Everybody remembers the famous Irish echo which, when the guide called out, "How do ye do?" answered, "Purty well, I thank you." But this is quite outdone by an echo in the Pyrenees. "Observe," says the guide, "how the sound is repeated from rock to rock, and from crag to crag, and especially how beyond the frontier the echo has a perfectly distinguishable Spanish accent."

Never hold any man by the button or the hand in order to be heard out; for if people are unwilling to hear you, you had better hold your tongue than hold them.—Chesterfield.

The time for reasoning is before we have approached near enough to the forbidden fruit to look at it and admire.

Treat all with due respect, and none will think the worse of you for it.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1881.

THE United States Senate expected to finish up the business of the extra session and adjourn yesterday.

SECRETARY WINDOM was on Tuesday re-elected to the United States Senate, by the Minnesota Legislature, without any opposition to speak of.

THE Democrats met at Springfield Tuesday and nominated E. H. Lathrop for senator, and Reuben Noble of Westfield for county commissioner, but these old war horses are balky, and refuse to budge an inch, and the party must find some other conveyance to carry it to defeat this year.

FATHER CLARK, a Catholic priest at Brockton, recently forbade his people to buy the Gazette of that city, because its views on the Irish question did not suit him, and last Saturday he attempted to stop the Irish boys from selling it on the street; but he found that America is not Ireland, and his attempt to "Boycott" the Gazette resulted in almost doubling its sales.

THE meeting of men interested in civil service reform at New Haven, Ct., on Tuesday, called together some of the best men of that State and resulted in the formation of a State association, with Charles B. Andrews as president, and a strong list of names as vice presidents and executive committee. The reform leaven seems to be working at a very gratifying rate all around.

C. A. CORSER of Holyoke has been nominated for the Senate by the Republicans of the 2d Hampden district. Mr. Corser is a prosperous boot and shoe dealer, and is a quiet, level-headed business man of good judgment and of some experience in public affairs. Hampden county will be fortunate if it is always represented in the Senate as well as it will be by Mayor Haile and Mr. Corser.

OF the thirty-three members of the New York Legislature who voted for Conkling to the end, last Summer, 19 have failed of a renomination, three secured a nomination, but will probably be defeated by a bolt, and one only has clear sailing. The other conventions have not met yet. Mr. Conkling's "appeal to the people" is being answered in a manner hardly calculated to fill him with perfect satisfaction.

THE report of the treasury investigation, which has been sent to the Senate, fails to show, as most people supposed it would, that Secretary Sherman had any knowledge of any improper use of the treasury funds. It does show, however, that the custodian paid for lunches with bogus items in contractors' accounts, bought livery overcoats for carriage drivers as cloth to cover desks with, bay rum as alcohol, and so on through a long list of articles for the use of subordinates.

THERE has been considerable talk in the papers about the conduct of the Massachusetts 9th regiment at Yorktown. It was charged with disorderly conduct, but the regiment and its friends deny the report very emphatically, and say it originated with one Gen. Grubb of New Jersey, who was envious of their fine appearance. One correspondent, however, cautiously admits that some of the boys may have taken a little too much liquor, and well-authenticated reports indicate that they behaved like drunken rowdies on their way to Yorktown, whatever their conduct may have been while there. Adjutant General Berry has detailed a couple of officers to visit Richmond and other points, and investigate the charges, and if they are found to be true, the disgraced soldiers will be punished, it is to be hoped, as they deserve.

A LETTER written by Secretary Blaine in June to our representatives in Europe, setting forth the views of the Garfield administration upon the control of ship canals across the Isthmus, was sent to the Senate on Monday, and itspublication bids fair to arouse the diplomats and lead to considerable lively arguing back and forth. England, in particular, would like to join with other European nations and the United States in a joint guaranty of the neutrality of the Panama canal, when built, but Secretary Blaine informs the world in general that they must keep their hands off. Other nations may put all the money they wish into such a canal, but our government proposes to be alone responsible for its neutrality, as the canal will be practically a part of our natural coast line. The letter is couched in polite but strong language, and sets forth the Monroe doctrine in a manner that will meet the approval of every American citizen.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR on Monday nominated ex-Governor and ex-United States Senator Edwin D. Morgan of New York as secretary of the treasury, and the nomination was promptly confirmed by the Senate. The nomination gave general satisfaction throughout the country, and was a graceful compliment by the President to the man who, as the war governor of New York, gave him his first political start by making him his quartermaster general. But Gov. Morgan positively declined to accept the office, on account of his health, and on Thursday Charles J. Folger, chief justice of the New York court of appeals, was nominated for the position and confirmed. Judge Folger was for some time assistant sub-treasurer at New York, and is well qualified for the position. The President also renominated Postmaster General James, and he was promptly confirmed, though it is understood that he will retire from the cabinet in January.

The Second Congregational church of Westfield celebrated its silver wedding on Wednesday.

LOCAL NOTICES.

M. Fox has fifty barrels of good Baldwin apples for sale.

W. R. Milligan, having had ten years' experience in the shoe business, does not take a back seat on buying and selling boots and shoes at the lowest market prices.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

All-Hallow eve next Monday.

Next Tuesday will be All Saints day.

Wednesday was blustery and dustery.

The moon is beginning to show her face again.

The sun now retires for the night before 5 o'clock.

The mercury dropped to 24 yesterday morning.

Rev. J. L. Scudder of Shrewsbury preaches at the Congregational church to-morrow.

The warrant for town meeting, for the election of State officers, appears in another column.

Rev. H. A. Phillbrook, of Pawtucket, R. I., will occupy the pulpit at St. Paul's church to-morrow.

Dr. A. B. Cowan & Son are about opening new dental rooms on the corner of Main and Thorndike streets.

C. L. Gardner and Enos Calkins have been appointed commissioners on the insolvent estate of D. A. Hoag.

Flannels and furs are being pulled out from their Summer retreats, and people have rather a camphory odor these days.

Yesterday was "almanac day" for November. If November follows the pattern, it will be a pretty nice kind of a month.

The net income of the Boston & Albany Railroad for the year ending Sept. 20 was $2,186,872, against $2,402,618 for the preceding year.

Edward Davis's little son, who lives just across the river, was hooked by a cow Wednesday evening, his under lip being badly torn, but he escaped without serious injury.

The supreme court has ordered a new trial of the case of Elvira Makely, who was last May convicted of setting fire to the house of Montraville Ackert in Brimfield, at his instigation.

Those peaches which W. O. Hovey left on our table the other day were truly "immense," both in size and flavor, being the more palatable on account of the lateness of the season for such fruit.

Wilson Lawrence and O. P. Allen were delegates from the Congregational church in this place to the annual meeting of the Hampden Conference at Monson, this week Tuesday and Wednesday.

The selectmen will be at the town house next week Saturday afternoon for the purpose of revising the voters' list, and all who wish to vote in the coming election should see that their names are on the list.

Our South Belchertown neighbors are again agitating the question of annexation to this town, and will very likely meet with better success than before, when they next apply to the Legislature for authority to make the change.

Another change will be made in the running of one or two trains on the New London Northern road next Monday, to correspond with the Boston & Albany changes, but the new time table was not out at the time of our going to press.

The attention of persons whose eyes trouble them in any way is invited to the advertisement, in another column, of Geo. B. Brigden, who will visit Palmer next Thursday, to fit spectacles where needed, and treat all classes of eye disease.

The president, directors and superintendent of the New London Northern Railroad passed through Palmer Wednesday, in the Central Vermont car "Bellevue," on a trip to Montreal, stopping over at Brattleboro to inspect the new narrow gauge road.

A party of so-called serenaders were around the village last week Friday evening, destroying the rest of all within reach of their voices, while their musical tones caused a number of people to start up in haste, under the impression that a fire alarm was being sounded.

The social and oyster supper of the Improvement Association at St. Paul's church Wednesday evening called out a good attendance, and was a pleasant and profitable occasion, the treasury of the association being enriched to the amount of about $20 from the supper.

J. H. Smith has just put in two new carding machines at his shoddy mill in Blanchardville, enabling him to turn out nearly double the amount of shoddy he has heretofore produced. Work is brisk at the mill, but considerable care has to be exercised in the use of water, which is getting pretty low.

The selectmen have let the contract for making the new road at Bondville to Chas. D. Foster for $950, while the two new bridges, over the river and canal, have been awarded to the Canton Bridge Co. of Canton, Ohio, for $3140, to be completed in February. The same firm will also put in another bridge across the canal there for the Boston Duck Co.

The Palmer Democrats did not feel enough interest in the conventions at Springfield Tuesday to send delegates to them. Joseph Thompson of this place, Gardner Green of Monson, F. E. Cook of Brimfield, Frank McLean of Ludlow, Joseph Baldwin of Wilbraham, P. E. Wall of Hampden, F. H. Olmstead of Wales and C. B. Drake of Holland were chosen members of the county committee.

The 83d birthday of Mrs. Col. Isaac King was pleasantly celebrated last Saturday by a party of nineteen friends and relatives, who made her a surprise visit in honor of the occasion. The visitors were from this and adjoining towns, and they ranged in age from 70 to 81 years. The party was planned by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph King, who treated the guests to a bountiful supper, and after a social afternoon and many pleasant reminiscences of the "long ago," the guests took their departure, leaving with Mrs. King several gifts as tokens of kindly remembrance, and wishing her many more happy birthdays.

The Winter time table of the Boston & Albany Railroad will go into effect next Monday. There is to be but one slight change in trains going west, the afternoon express for New York leaving Palmer at 1.24 instead of 1.22. The noon accommodation train for the east leaves at 11.53, 15 minutes later than now, and the first afternoon express for Boston at 1.15, instead of 2, while the 4.34 accommodation will leave one minute earlier, at 4.33. These are all the changes to be made on the main line. On the Ware River branch, the train now going north at 11.45 a. m. will leave at 11.05, upon arrival of express train from the east, and the afternoon train up will leave at 1.30 instead of 2.05. Trains will arrive from the north as at present, except the first afternoon train, which will come in at 12.50 instead of 1.35.

It seems that Palmer has for many years entirely ignored one of the State laws, which requires that in every town of 1500 inhabitants the selectmen shall appoint an inspector of kerosene and fix his compensation, which is to be paid by the persons having occasion to employ him. The law provides that no person shall sell or keep for sale at retail any kerosene or product of petroleum, without having the same inspected and approved by an authorized inspector, under penalty of a fine not exceeding $100, or imprisonment not exceeding one month, or both. Dealers in kerosene must also have a license from the selectmen, while there are certain regulations as to the storage of the oil, with penalties for their non-observance. We do not suppose any of our dealers are selling any oil which does not come up to the legal test, but as the law requires the appointment of an inspector, it would seem to be well for our selectmen to appoint such an officer.

THE SENATORIAL CONVENTION.

The 1st Hampden Republican senatorial convention was held at the district court room in this place Thursday afternoon, and was called to order by C. L. Gardner. J. L. Shipley of Springfield was chosen chairman, and C. L. Gardner secretary. P. P. Kellogg of Springfield, C. R. Dudley of Monson and E. G. Murdock of Palmer were appointed a committee on credentials. Their work was not arduous, and after their report an informal ballot was taken, which resulted in 25 votes for W. H. Haile of Springfield, 4 for Wm. R. Sessions of Hampden, and 1 for C. B. Fisk of Palmer. On motion of C. L. Gardner Mr. Haile was then unanimously nominated by acclamation. Mr. Gardner was then reelected member of the State central committee, and after one or two brief congratulatory addresses the convention adjourned, well satisfied with its work.

WHO SHALL BE REPRESENTATIVE?

The State election is only a little more than a week ahead, but hardly anything has been said yet about the representative question, though there are supposed to be any number of Barkises who are "willin'" to have their names considered in this connection. Palmer is entitled to the candidate this year, and when the convention meets will doubtless be ready to present the name of some good man for the place. Among the "mentioned" are S. S. Taft, Dr. Wm. Holbrook, H. P. Holden and John Foster of this place, either of whom would most creditably represent the town at Boston. D. B. Bishop and Geo. A. Murdock of Thorndike, and Dwight M. Stebbins of Three Rivers, are also named as possible candidates. The town should make it a point to send one of its best and strongest men as representative, and it does not lack for material to choose from. It is reported that Lawyer Strong, who withdrew at the last moment, last year, from his independent canvass for the House, may try his luck again, while it is also possible that the Democrats will conclude to make another effort to send Conductor Sanders to the Hub for the Winter. In this event considerable life will be infused, locally, into a campaign which otherwise promises to be uncommonly dull and quiet.

GRANBY.

George C. Montague's new and unfinished house at Granby was burned Sunday night, with his farm buildings and a quantity of hay. Loss $6000; insured for $4500. The origin of the fire was undoubtedly incendiary, and the selectmen have offered $500 reward for the detection of the guilty person. Mr. Montague was burned out the same way last May.

THREE RIVERS.

John Hamlin stepped into a vat of vitriol at the dye works Thursday and had one foot badly burned. John Betters is just getting around after a similar experience two or three weeks ago.

It is understood that Rev. C. R. Dudley has resigned the pastorate of the Union church, and will accept a call to New Hampshire, with a considerable advance of salary. The choir of the church have disbanded, and they now have congregational singing.

WEST WARREN.

The mills lost nearly half a day Thursday, because of low water.

Rev. A. H. Somes has resumed his labors at the Congregational church.

Wood & Swindells have resumed business, having settled with their creditors.

Wednesday evening's dramatic entertainment and ball in aid of the band resulted in a financial loss.

A sportsman's ball glanced from the pond the other day and passed through W. W. Witherell's coat, close to his body.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The Rapid Telegraph Co. have done much damage to shade trees in this village. When they reset a great portion of the poles running through here, they cut and slashed generally, and a number of citizens have notified the company to settle damages, or they will take means to get redress.

The selectmen are doing a work in the square that will give great satisfaction to all, especially to the pedestrians who have waded through slush and water for the past five or six years. It is proposed to fill in to the depth of about 12 inches, and put in a trap so that the water can run off through the sewer.

LUDLOW.

The funeral of Mrs. Lucy M. Harris, wife of E. D. Harris, and daughter of the late Samuel White of Ludlow, was largely attended at the church in Indian Orchard last Sabbath afternoon. She was buried in the cemetery in Ludlow, the remains being followed to the grave by a large concourse of people. She was a kind and loving wife, an affectionate mother, an obedient daughter, and an earnest Christian worker. A few months since her two boys united with the church, which she witnessed with a glad heart. Mr. Harris in his sore bereavement has the sympathy of all.

WARREN.

Miss Fay meets the teachers this afternoon to discuss the subject of drawing.

The ladies' temperance union met with Mrs. Lucian Gilbert Wednesday afternoon.

There will be a Sunday school concert at the Congregational church Sunday evening.

The skating rink was not opened last Saturday as was announced, but will be open this evening.

Dr. Butler, agent of the Bible society, spoke at the Congregational church last Sabbath evening.

A large number of people are putting furnaces into their houses, which makes brisk business for the tinmen.

The Republicans held a caucus at the town hall last evening, and chose delegates to the representative convention.

Nathan Richardson has purchased two building lots of Mrs. Alvin Bliss, and it is expected houses will be erected upon them.

Alice J. Osborne will deliver the next lecture in the course Monday evening. The programme will include songs and readings.

WALES.

The drouth is becoming quite severe, and nearly all the wells are getting roiled up for want of rain.

Rents are high in the street, if one may judge by the outrageous rent one man recently paid for storing his goods.

The Baptist ladies' aid society held a pound party Wednesday evening in the vestry, and 75 pounds of various articles were sold at auction, which handsomely swelled the funds of the treasurer, while all seemed to enjoy it as they opened their treasures.

The Sunday school concert at the Methodist church last Sunday evening was fully attended, every seat being taken and the aisles of the church filled with people. A very interesting programme was presented, especially by the younger portion of the school, and the decorations were quite handsome.

Mr. George has moved his family from Vermont to this place, and is now busily engaged with three hands at the old blacksmith stand near the Dell mill, and is prepared to do all kinds of iron work. The shop has been thoroughly repaired, making it warm and comfortable for the cold weather now coming on.

There has been considerable drunkenness in town this week. Nobody sells, but men will go out and get beastly drunk in half an hour's time. Where do they get the "critter?" We can judge from appearances. We saw three fellows approaching a place where they claim to sell no liquor; two of them gave the other money, while they hid in the bushes, and he went to this respectable place. Of course he didn't get anything, but all three were staggering through the street in a short time.

MONSON.

Voters should see that their names are on the voting list.

Hon. W. N. Flynt and Miss Flynt have returned from their extended Western trip.

Rev. Mr. Wood's lecture at the Methodist church Monday evening was fairly attended, and well received.

Mark Noble has a new coach on his Monson and Palmer line that will be just the thing for cold or rainy weather.

Mrs. W. A. Lincoln of Chicago and Mrs. D. M. Gordon of Rochester are spending a few weeks in Monson, their native town.

The sale of seats for the star course of entertainments began at the post office Thursday morning. The first entertainment comes next Monday evening, by Alfred J. Knight's Lyceum Combination, which includes Alfred J. Knight, Shaksperean impersonator; Sophie M. Osburn, reader and impersonator; Frank Howard, buffo basso; Emma Howard, soprano, and Prof. Groom, pianist. This is a fine combination and sure to please.

The following persons were chosen delegates to the different Republican conventions at the caucus last Monday evening: Councilor, S. F. Cushman, C. W. Holmes, Jr., Chas. R. Dudley; senatorial, Horace Squier, A. D. Norcross, Chas. Fowler; representative, at Holland, A. A. Gage, W. M. Tucker, B. A. Day, Rev. Chas. Merrill, W. A. Lyon, E. D. Kelso, J. H. Thompson, H. E. Bugbee, A. Bodurtha, W. H. Bradway, R. M. Reynolds, Lester Howe, H. C. Day, L. C. Bates, Arba Squier.

Nearly all the churches connected with the Hampden conference were represented at its annual meeting in the Congregational church Tuesday and Wednesday, and the sessions were well attended and full of interest to all present. Rev. J. H. Lockwood of Westfield was chosen register, Charles Marsh of Springfield treasurer of the benevolent association, and Rev. L. D. Calkins of West Springfield treasurer of the conference. The receipts of the benevolent association during the year were $11,976, of which $3477 was for foreign missions and $4294 for home missions. The First church of Springfield contributed $3680, the South church $1241, and the Palmer church $959. The receipts of the woman's board were $3294. Addresses were made in behalf of some of the benevolent societies, and the rest of the exercises were successfuly carried out according to the programme published last week, closing with the communion service Wednesday afternoon.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Blueing don't sell well now. No need of it with Ludlow water.

Rev. F. M. Sprague is endeavoring to institute a revival, but there is not much material to work upon.

L. L. Ward, who has practiced law at the Orchard for about a year, has lately removed to Boston, given up law practice, and is now studying for the ministry. His friends here hope to hear him when he starts out in his new profession.

Whist parties have been talked of for the Winter season. The other day, one of our citizens, who was discussing card playing, was asked if he played poker. He replied: "No, but my wife does," and felt mournfully for a bald spot on top of his head.

Ware is evidently proud that Gen. Lafayette visited that place one day, but it has no reason to be, as that was the very day he set apart for a visit to the Orchard, but when his cuffs came in from the washerwoman he found them ruffled and unfit for use, so he gave up his visit here and went to Ware.

Hope Temple of Honor is regaining its lost ground. It has secured the lease of its old rooms in Wight and Chapman's block for a year, with privilege of sub-letting, and has also redeemed its furniture. Hampden Council of the American Legion of Honor has leased the rooms for two evenings a month for one year, and has changed the evenings of its meetings from Tuesday to Monday.

The boys enjoy practicing the "hitching kick," but a kind-hearted out-of-town farmer don't enjoy it at all. He endeavored to assist a green young man who did not know "how the darned thing worked," to hitch a tug which unhitched going down the hill. He hitched it and received the hitching kick, and when he gets out of his wagon and helps a young man out of trouble with a horse again he will "be dumbed."

The outlook for the Winter socially at the Orchard is not brilliant, by any means. The Young People's Lyceum will not reorganize. The Young Ladies' Industrial Club, a society which has done much good in the past, and always had something pleasant to offer to the public, is, or appears to be dead. The Father Mathew temperance society is no more. The Catholic parish will not hold a fair before next Spring, and the Evangelical society never holds any, while Hope Temple of Honor and the Legion of Honor have as yet made no arrangements for entertainments. In fact, the only thing in the social line is the series of dances which the Columbia Quartette is to give, and with the strong anti-dancing sentiment now prevailing, these will be but fairly attended.

WARE AND VICINITY.

A new reservoir has been put in, to be used for fire purposes, on Prospect street, near the head of Spring street.

Co. will change their hours of labor during the Winter so as to work more of the time by daylight. The hours will be from 6.45 a. m. to 12 m., and from 12.45 to 5.30 p. m., Saturdays included.

The Young Men's Library Association is to give a course of entertainments at Music Hall this Winter. The first of the course is to be given on Friday evening, Nov. 18th, by Rev. Henry G. Spaulding, who it will be remembered gave one of the most interesting lectures in last season's course. The subject is not as yet fully decided, but will probably be on "Rome and the Catacombs." The second will be a concert, by the Bay State Concert Co., on Wednesday evening, Dec. 21, to be followed by Archibald Forbes Jan. 11, Miss Janie Savage in select readings Feb. 1, and Gen. John L. Swift Feb. 22.

There has been quite a demand of late for Confederate bonds, at $2.75 per $1000, the purchasers, it is said, expecting to get hold of the million dollars or so which was in the Bank of England to the credit of the Confederacy when it collapsed. The money has never been withdrawn and with accrued interest must now amount to nearly double that sum. The United States does not claim this money, because it will be held that whenever our government demands the money it will practically assume the obligations of the late Confederate States.

The Mississippi river has broken through the levee below Quincy, Ill., covering the farms with water several feet deep, drowning many horses and and cattle, and compelling farmers to flee with their families to high ground. Valuable crops are destroyed, and the loss will be very heavy. The river is fully nine miles wide at Quincy, the lowlands being flooded to the bluffs opposite. At Burlington, Ia., the river is two inches higher than ever before recorded.

Mrs. Garfield has requested that five of the flags which decorated the inside of the pavilion wherein her dead husband lay at Cleveland, should be given to her children. Of the remaining three, one is to be given to the elder and another to the younger Mrs. Garfield. The dais and the casket which first held the President's body are to be carefully preserved by the Western Reserve Historical Society.

At the Boston Institute Fair is exhibited what is claimed to be the only existing relic of the rebel privateer Alabama. It is the favorite flag of Admiral Semmes. It was made on board the privateer, and is about 4½ feet in width and 7 feet in length, with a white ground and a red jack, containing a blue cross with thirteen stars. Its owner, a Hartford man, values it at $10,000.

There is such a large demand for mementoes of the Garfield funeral at Cleveland, that a relic bureau has been organized, and has begun the manufacture of mementoes of various kinds from the catafalque and pavilion, for which contributions of from $1 to $5 will be received, to be applied to the Garfield monument fund.

OUR SPRINGFIELD LETTER.

A Charming Scene on Main Street!

The other day we were struck with the superb glass front of the greatest dry goods house of that city. A wide entrance, flanked by glittering fabrics of the loom and needle, ushered us in. On the right were $25,000 worth of cotton and woolen domestic goods, finely displayed by J. R. FARRELL. Next was $30,000 worth of cloaks and cloak cloths, under the direction of M. W. SIKE. A great crowd of ladies and children were exclaiming "how cheap," especially when handling those $25 silk dolmans, now having such a run there. Throngs of ladies were passing through the millinery rooms, made attractive by the taste of H. W. SHELLINGFORD, assisted in the trimming by that experienced New York milliner, Mrs. M. B. Priest, and her young ladies, the Misses Ward, Mrs. Huber, Miss Quimby and Miss Linda Washburn. Here were pyramids of hats and bonnets, feathers, plumes and rich colored trimmings. Near by are silks, satins, plushes, velvets, brocades, and moires, most distractingly lovely, and valued at not less than $50,000, under the charge of GEORGE DENOON, a man well versed in all styles and of fine taste in selecting. J. H. CLARKE showed us his fine line of black cashmeres, black Henrietta cloths, where ladies can find as good a stock as in the large cities. J. D. KELLOGG, who most efficiently conducts the fine dress department, kindly showed us some of the new patterns that have just been imported. It is a wonder how man can make such articles of dress. E. F. FISKE sells the medium priced dress goods. The dress flannels and Scotch plaids are drawing a busy crowd from the country, who say, "How cheap! better than I can do at home!" Mr. JOHN STEINHOUSE wields the yard stick over the domestic dress goods—a very heavy stick, making the gentleman quite active in attending to the dozens of customers who swarmed around him.—F. A. SPEAR and ROBERT WEBSTER attend to the department for ladies' skirts and cambric prints, saying they were very much employed in supplying the demand for the ginghams, skirts, prints, cambrics, &c. GEORGE WOODS finds his department of white goods, knit worsteds, P. K's., muslins and curtain laces, a great attraction, as we noted many admiring the thousands of dollars worth of goods displayed. ISAAC B. AUTEN rules at the lace department. What lady does not love to linger over laces? Such laces as Auten shows in his fascinating manner. We were surprised to learn from Miss E. H. Ferre, pattern manager, that $4000 worth of patterns were kept. Think of the magnitude of a house that employs a skilled lady solely to sell patterns! MRS. M. BRYSON will show you her countless piles of under flannels, deftly woven fabrics, so warm for the winter. She finds an immense stock necessary to her trade. MR. HALL, a live Yankee as is proper, takes the lead in the notion department, and stands up amid a wilderness of buttons, ties, tidies, Jewelry, &c. JOSEPH REED, in his methodical manner, shows in good order stockings enough to clothe the feet of every one in your town. ANDREW BRYSON rises behind stacks of boxes of kid and other gloves, more numerous than the stockings, and he is a man who knows a good glove. W. P. NORTON, lucky man, at the ribbon counter, surrounds himself with pyramids of rainbow-hued ribbons, and, like the spider, waits, sure of the flocks of girls who will come and say, "How lovely!" and buy. H. S. HOUSE, solid himself, sells such solid things as gents' furnishing goods, and his piles of goods are only just enough to supply the husbands who tarry there, while the wives make the money fly at the other counters. MISS TILESTON, brisk and successful, has a very popular department, that of gimps, fringes, jet and colored passementeries for trimmings. Great as the demand is, she is equal to every call. In the rear of this immense store the book-keeper, C. W. Brown, and the cashier, James Ritchie, attend to the accounts and cash of this great store. Still more retired is the "Sanctum Sanctorum," especially devoted to the consultations of the two partners, FORBES & WALLACE, where "councils of war" are held and plans laid to capture goods, and carry out the policy that has made this the great success of Western Massachusetts. We must not omit to mention that Mr. Forbes, chief manager of the important department of store walking, finds in Joseph Campbell a man who can gracefully introduce customers to the clerks desired. We found Mr. Wallace in the basement, commanding the force of receiving clerks. Here are $100,000 worth of goods at wholesale, and country merchants were coming in to find better bargains than in the large cities. The store has grown to be a great bazar, where a lady can get almost everything. New attractions are added as the times demand. Large as the store is it does not seem large enough, and if their popularity and enterprise continues to increase as it has, we don't see where they can find a store large enough on Main street. This house carries a regular stock of $300,000.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth whe e it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it. Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

Farewell.

The boat went drifting, drifting, over the sleeping sea,
And the man that I loved the dearest sat in the boat with me.

The shadow of coming parting hung over the great grey swell,
And the winds that swept across it, sobbed on, farewell, farewell.

The boat went drifting, drifting, in the lingering northern night,
And the face that I loved the dearest, paled with the paling light.

We strove to join light laughter; we strove to wake a jest;
But the voice that I loved the dearest, rang sadly 'mid the rest.

The boat went drifting, drifting, while the dull skies lowered down,
And the "ragged rims of thunder" gave the rocky head a crown.

The boat went drifting, drifting, while to the darkening sky,
For the man that I loved the dearest, the prayer rose silently.

Oh, true, strong hand I touch no more; brave smile I may not see;
Will the God who governs time and tide bring him back to my life and me?

—All The Year Round.

WHAT AN ALBANY MAN SAID.

One of the lumber dealers in this State has for the past three years been supplying a dealer at Albany. For the first year everything went well, but at length the Albany man began to complain. He found shortage and culls in every car-load sent him, and demanded discounts therefor, and this spring it was impossible to please him. No matter how carefully lumber and shingles were culled and billed here, he was sure to write back that they were not up to the standard. Some time ago a load of "star" shingles were sent him. The "star" shingles beat anything made in the country, and they know it in Albany as well as Michigan, but as soon as the car arrived the dealer replied that he really must protest. The shingles were hardly "clear butts," and he could not unload the car until assured of a discount of twenty-five cents per thousand.

The Michigander had suffered long, but the end was nigh. He had inspected every bunch of shingles on that car, and he made up his mind to go to Albany and inspect them over again. The dealer there had never seen him, and the Wolverine walked into his office as a would-be purchaser of some extra fine shingles.

"I've got exactly what you want," promptly replied the Albanian. "I've got a car-load of Michigan "stars" out here which lay over any shingle you ever saw."

"Are they all perfect?"

"Every one of them."

"No culls in the center of the bunches?"

"I'll eat every cull you find. I got them from a Michigander, who is as straight as the Ten Commandments, and he has never yet sent me a stick of second-class stuff. Come and see 'em."

The Wolverine quietly pulled out his business card and laid it on the desk.

The dealer took it up, read the name, and sat down on a stool with a queer feeling in his knees.

There was an awful silence as they glared at each other, and it was a full minute before the victim slowly extended his hand and hoarsely whispered:

"Did you ever see a man make such an infernal ass of himself? Shake!"—Detroit Free Press.

Persons opposed to vaccination do not receive much encouragement from the record of small-pox cases in Chicago this year. Forty per cent of the 359 cases since January 1 have proved fatal, and a large proportion of the fatal cases have occurred among the degraded foreign population who resist vaccination with violence. Eighty-one out of the 108 deaths from small pox in September were in a ward where there are 40,000 persons who have not been vaccinated.

Strong efforts are being made, but without much success, to turn the stream of emigration aside from the United States. Canada, on the north, is paying a part of the steamship fares of persons who promise to settle on her lands, and Mexico, on the south, failing by other means, has just made a contract for the colonization of 200 Italian families, who will be provided with land, implements, and stock free.

It appears that large sums of money, in the aggregate, are lost under the postal money order system. Since the organization of the system in this country, over $1,750,000 has accumulated at the post office in New York for want of claimants. At this rate the government will make a pretty good thing from the orders, and can afford to reduce the charges for them considerably.

Farmers in Iowa and Minnesota have suffered a good deal by the recent rainy season, which was of unprecedented length. For four weeks they have been unable to do much fall work, and marketing grain in stacks is much damaged. Potatoes and roots in the fields are rotting in mud. Much corn in shocks has sprouted and is ruined, and the outlook is generally bad.

George W. Lendereg, of Bridgeport, Ct., offers to place his granite quarry at the disposal of the officers of the Garfield memorial hospital fund, and allow them to take out free of charge the granite necessary for the erection of the proposed hospital at Washington.

The death rate in Chicago from typhoid fever, small pox and kindred diseases is very high, and is attributed to unclean streets and a large influx of low class emigrants.

When a lecturer has worked the ladies of his audience so near to the weeping point that they have gotten out their handkerchiefs, and then suddenly changes his tone and speaks of the merits of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, he is bound to rouse a feeling of indignation.

Nearly all the ills that afflict mankind can be prevented and cured by keeping the stomach, liver and kidneys in perfect working order. There is no medicine known that will do this as quickly and surely, without interfering with duties, as Parker's Ginger Tonic. See advertisement. oc

An Interesting Account!

STONE IN THE BLADDER EXPELLED BY USING DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY."

Mr. S. W. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess Co., N. Y., the son of Mr. E. S. Hicks, whose name may have appeared in this journal in connection with an article similar to this, was, like his father, afflicted with Stone in the Bladder, only that his case was more serious than his father's. On the appearance of the disease the father advised the son to write to Dr. David Kennedy of Rondout, N. Y., who, he said, would tell him what to do. Dr. Kennedy replied, suggesting the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which had worked so successfully in the father's case. Mr. Hicks, who had been assured by the local physicians that they could do nothing more for him, tried "Favorite Remedy" at a venture. After two weeks' use of it he passed a stone ¾ of an inch long and of the thickness of a pipe-stem. Since then he has had no symptoms of the return of the trouble. Here is a sick man healed. What better results could have been expected? What greater benefit could medical science confer? The end was gained; that is surely enough. Dr. Kennedy assures the public, by a reputation which he cannot afford to forfeit or imperil, that the "Favorite Remedy" does invigorate the blood, cures liver, kidney and bladder complaints, as well as all those diseases and instances peculiar to females. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

PROTECTION

FROM

MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE,
INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE

PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use.

If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

POSITIVELY CURED BY

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.

Because the manufacturers haue receivcd the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."

BOSTON, October 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, ESQ.—Dear Sir: You procured for me, in 1840, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you. Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the town of Palmer, qualified to vote in elections and town affairs, to meet at the Town House in said Palmer, on Tuesday, the eighth day of November next, at ten o'clock a. m., and bring in their votes to the Selectmen for Governor, Lieutenant Governor, one Councilor Dist. No. 8, Secretary, Treasurer and Receiver General, Auditor, Attorney General, one Senator for First Hampden District, one County Commissioner for three years, Clerk of the Courts of Hampden County, one Representative to the General Court for the 2d Hampden District.

Also to vote by ballot upon the following article of amendment to the constitution:

"No person having served in the army or navy of the United States in time of war, and having been honorably discharged from such service, if otherwise qualified to vote, shall be disqualified therefor on account of being a pauper; or, if a pauper, because of the non-payment of a poll tax."

Said ballot shall be "Yes" or "No."

Votes for State, District, County Officers, and Representative to General Court, shall be upon one ballot; the vote on the article of amendment shall be on a separate ballot.

And you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof at the different public places designated by vote of the town, seven days at least before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer Journal at least two issues before the holding of said meeting.

Hereof fail not, and make due return of this warrant, with your doings thereon, to ourselves, on or before the time of said meeting.

Given under our hands this twenty-fourth day of October, A. D. 1881.

E. G. MURDOCK, H. G. LOOMIS, H. McMASTER, } Selectmen of Palmer.

Stone the Woman.

Yes, stone the woman—let the man go free!
Draw back your skirts lest they perchance
May touch her garments as she passes;
But to him put forth a willing hand
To clasp with his that led her to destruction
And disgrace. Shut up from her the sacred
Ways of toil, that she may no more win an Honest meal, but ope to him all honorable
Paths that he may win distinction.
Give him fair, pressed-down measures
Of life's sweetest joys. Pass her,
Oh, maiden, with a pure proud face,
If she puts out a poor, polluted palm.
But lay thy hand in his on bridal day,
And swear to cling to him
With wifely love and tender reverence.
Trust him who led a sister-woman
To a fearful fate.

Yes, stone the woman—let the man go free!
Let one soul suffer for the guilt of two—
Is the doctrine of a hurried world,
Too out of breath for holding balances
Where nice distinctions and injustices
Are calmly weighed. But ah! how will it be
On that strange day of final fire and flame,
When men shall stand before the one
True Judge? Shall sex make then
A difference in sin? Shall He,
The searcher of the hidden heart,
In His eternal and divine decree,
Condemn the woman and forgive the man?

—Every Saturday.

A CARELESS WORD.

"It's all that awkward creature's fault!" said Chrissy Vervain, impatiently.

Miss Vervain had been shopping all day, and was tired and petulant. At another time she would probably have been gracious and forbearing with the dressmaker's young woman. Now, the least omission and carelessness became magnified, in her eyes, into a serious misdemeanor.

She stood in front of the great, glistening cheval-glass, a slight, exquisitely proportioned figure, critically viewing the fit of the new satin dress, exactly the color of a heliotrope blossom, while the timid assistant stood anxiously by. It was her first appearance in the show-rooms, and she was painfully eager to please.

"Doesn't it fit you, miss?" she ventured to ask.

"Fit me!" echoed Chrissy, with a scornful toss of her pretty young head. "What a question! Why, the dress is ruined! Where is Mrs. Golden? Do send some one to me that understands her business!"

So when Mrs. Golden herself, at the head of the dressmaking establishment, hurried in, Chrissy declared the dress was a failure, that she couldn't, wouldn't, and shouldn't wear it!

"I do wish, Mrs. Golden," said Miss Vervain, impetuously, "you wouldn't give valuable material like this into the hands of such an awkward girl. Really, one would think, in an establishment like this, you would be a little more particular!"

"Indeed!" timidly spoke up the girl, "I cut it exactly according to the measurement; and—"

"You will favor me, young woman, by being silent," said Mrs. Golden, who was by far too well versed in the ways of the world to take the part of the weaker part. "Let me assure you I have no idea of losing all my customers through your awkwardness. Go to the work-rooms at once. I will see you later in the afternoon. Now, Miss Vervain," altering her voice to a soft and obsequious accent, "if you will allow me, I will try to ascertain whether we cannot alter the dress to suit you."

Half an hour later Miss Vervain's carriage, silken-cushioned, lined with downy rugs and fleecy foot-muffs, drove away through the orange glitter of the December sunset.

"Really," said Chrissy to herself, as she leaned back and thrust her pink-kidded hands into the little seal-skin muff, "the dress wasn't actually spoiled, after all. That Golden woman is quite a genius in her way; and I'm almost sorry I spoke so pettishly to the little apprentice girl. But when one is so tired one cannot always command one's tongue."

While the glistening carriage was rolling on noiseless springs, over the aristocratic pavement of Fifth Avenue, poor little Elsie Emmons was hurrying down the dimly-lighted purlieus of a narrow wilderness of lane-like streets, her veil drawn tightly over her face, her eyes obscured by tears, until she entered a little red brick house which stood in a yard, a few feet from the street, with a plumber's tin sign on one side of the door, and a printed advertisement, "rooms to let," on the other.

Although it was only dusk out doors, it was quite dark in the low-ceiled basement-room where Mrs. Emmons, a pale-faced woman dressed in rusty black, had just lighted a kerosene lamp.

The fire, economically kept down to the very least modicum of coals, smouldered in the cheap stove, the floor was covered with a rag carpet, darned and mended in many a spot, and a tall, lanky school-boy was studying his lesson, with both elbows on the table, while two little girls, thus early initiated into the mysteries of bread-winning, were threading black bugles on wire, to make cheap mourning ornaments for the millinery store.

Mrs. Emmons looked up in surprise.

"Why, Elsie, it can't be you?" said she. "Home already? And it is not six yet!"

Elsie Emmons flung herself, sobbing, into her mother's arms.

"Yes, I'm home, mother," she faltered, through her tears. "And what is more, I never shall go back to Mrs. Golden's again. I've lost my situation, mother!"

"Lost your situation, child!" Mrs. Emmons stood with a face of dismay; the schoolboy looked up from his books and uttered a long, low whistle; even the the two little girls stopped in their busy manipulations, and stared with round eyes. "And however did that happen?"

"I don't know, mother," sobbed Elsie; "it's like a bad dream. There was a grand young lady there—one of Mrs. Golden's best customers—and her dress didn't fit, and she found fault with me. And Mrs. Golden said I answered back insolently; but indeed—indeed, I did not mean it. So now I am discharged; and, oh, mother, what shall we do?"

"The Lord only knows!" said poor Mrs. Emmons, sinking down on a chair and dissolving into tears. "And the landlord was here about the rent not half an hour ago, and I told him he should have it when your quarter's wages were paid. And there's the coal merchant, and the grocer, and the suit that Billy ought to have—"

"Never mind," valiantly spoke up Billy. "I'll do well enough, with a patch or two extra. But that cross old landlord means business, and there isn't a peck of coal in the bin. And it's too bad about Elsie's situation, I declare! But don't fret, sis. Maybe you'll get another."

"It's not likely," said Mrs. Emmons, despairingly—"with no reference from the last employer, and winter setting in. I do think we are the unluckiest people in the world."

Miss Vervain was sitting in her gaily decorated little Japanese boudoir, where the anthracite fire sent up its shooting spires of flame, and the scarlet birds warbled fitfully in the sunshine—and Mr. Dent, the assistant rector of the parish, was with her.

"Visit a sick person? Of course I will!" said Chrissy, cheerily. "I'm always anxious to do all the good I can."

And the little girl really meant it. She was a good-hearted girl in the main, and her brief visitations of ill-temper were quickly over. Nor need we say that she had long since forgotten the little episode of the ill-fitting heliotrope satin dress.

So Chrissy Vervain wrote down the address on one of the perfumed cards, and that very afternoon set forth on her mission of mercy.

It was a tall, dismal-looking tenement house, and Chrissy had to inquire her way up staircase after staircase, until she reached a cramped and close-smelling little room, the door of which was opened by a pallid, elderly woman.

"Is this Mrs. Emmons?" said Chrissy, pleasantly. "I have called to ask what I can do for your sick daughter, madam. Mr. Dent sent me."

"It's not much any one can do for her in this world," said Mrs. Emmons, with a suppressed sob in her voice. "You'll please excuse the room, miss. It's a poor place, but we are poor people. My daughter lost her place three months ago, and we have been running down steadily ever since. She was in a dressmaker's place, miss, and one of the fine lady customers—God forgive her—complained and found fault, and the madam dismissed her just as the winter set in; and she lost her heart, miss—Elsie did—and we moved on a wet day, for the landlord wouldn't keep us, and she took cold and has never held up her head since."

Mrs. Emmons was talking mechanically on, and Chrissy Vervain stood silently looking down upon the pallid, wasted figure in the bed, worn away by a slow fever, and murmuring to herself. Elsie Emmons did not know the richly-dressed young lady—in fact, she knew no one now—but Miss Vervain had a good memory for faces, and she recognized the dressmaker's young assistant in a second.

"She—she surely is not going to die!" gasped Chrissy.

For at that instant she felt almost as if the red stain of murder was on her soul.

"I don't know, miss," said Mrs. Emmons, wiping the tears from her eyes. "She's very bad and the doctors don't give us much hope. It was her wages, miss, we mostly depended upon to live. I'm a feeble body myself, and the rest are young. Elsie was our main-stay—and now she is going from us!"

Chrissy was silent; her heart seemed to grow chill within her. Only a careless word—and how much harm it had done! How the circles in life's pools are widening, ever widening, from the pebbles flung in by unthinking hands!

"But she shall not go from you!" she said, in a choked voice. "I will wait here and see the doctor. Something must be done. Please, please Mrs. Emmons, do not despair."

And Elsie did not die. Miss Vervain was a constant watcher at her bedside. Every luxury that wealth could obtain was at her command; and fanned by this perpetual care, the faint spark of life blazed up once more, and Elsie did not die.

And when she was strong enough, Miss Vervain's own carriage carried her to Mrs. Golden's well-known door.

"See here, Mrs. Golden," said the heiress, authoritatively. "I want you to take Elsie Emmons back. It was my fault that she was discharged; now I want her engaged again."

And the smiling modiste was only too happy to accede to Miss Vervain's caprice.

"It is not very often," said Chrissy, with a smile, "that people can undo the mischief they have caused in this world. But I believe I am the exceptional case."

And her conscience was clear again from the cruel consequences of her careless words.

BOUND TO BE ON THE SAFE SIDE.—A Michigander, who was riding along the highway near Charlestown, Va., a few days ago, came across an old negro who was grubbing out a stump near the meadow fence, and after a few questions about farm products the Wolverine asked:

"What do you get for taking that stump out?"

"Just 50 cents," was the reply.

"How long have you been working at it?"

"Wall, nigh 'bout a week, I reckon."

"And how much longer will it take?"

"Wall, I'spects I could finish it tomorrer, but I reckon I won't do it afore Friday."

"Why?"

"Well, heah am de pint. If I finish it tomorrow an' git my money, I'll be bound to drap down to Haltown an' bet on a hoss race an' lose it all. Ef I wait till Friday I kin hab de means of gwine inter de circus at Charlestown. I know my weakness, boss, an' so I'ze gwine to sot heah an' dig a little an' sleep a little, an' chop off de las' root when I heah de circus ho'ns blowin' on top de red skulehouse hill."

The landlord himself had answered the guest's ring. "Eh?" he said, "you don't think the bed is clean enough? Well, now, you look here. Squire Jones slept in it Monday night; he didn't find any fault with it. A Chicago drummer slept in that bed Tuesday night; he didn't find any fault. Smith, the tin peddler, had it Wednesday night, and Gully, the butcher, occupied it last night, and none of them complained. If that bed was clean enough to satisfy those four men, who are all good judges of a bed, I say, sir, you are almighty fastidious if you set up your opinion against theirs and find fault."

When a man is riding a bicycle, he looks neither to the right nor to the left, but appears to be gazing about five hundred years into futurity, as if trying to solve the problem of the Hereafterness of the Unknowableness of the Unknowable Hereafter. He is not, however. He is simply wondering, in case of a sudden header, whether his skull would be split wide open, or if he would escape with his nose mashed all over his face. The chances are that he would.—Norristown Herald.

Experimental: "Whew!" said the minister, as the barber put the bay rum on a tender face. "Powerful ain't it?" "Well," says' Moses. "I just put it on for an experiment." "How so?" quoth the parson. "You see," said Mose, "I put some on a chap the other day, and he yelled out: 'Damnation! that would make a minister swear.' So I thought dI' try it."

Never say "thanks." It is vulgar. Say "bully for you."

October's Party.

October gave a party;
The leaves by hundreds came—
The Ashes, Oaks and Maples,
And leaves of every name.
And sunshine spread a carpet,
And everything was grand;
Miss Weather led the dancing;
Professor Wind, the band.

The Chestnuts came in yellow,
The Oaks in crimson dressed;
The lovely Misses Maple,
In purple looked their best.
All balanced to their partners,
And gaily fluttered by;
The sight was like a rainbow
New fallen from the sky.

Then in the rusty hollows,
At hide and seek they played;
The party closed at sundown;
And everybody stayed.
Professor Wind played louder;
They flew along the ground,
And then the party ended
In jolly "hands all round."

THE POWER OF THE PRESS.

One of the old-time editors of Michigan was boasting the other day that he had never been sued for libel, or attacked in his sanctum, but he could recall many narrow escapes. Twenty-five years ago he was running a red-hot paper on the line of the Michigan Central Railroad. A man named Carson, who was running for some county office, was given a bad racket, and the editor received a note saying that if he had anything more to say he might expect to receive a good pounding. He had a still more bitter attack the next week, and the paper was hardly mailed before in walked Carson, the candidate, accompanied by a brother and two cousins. The four were strapping big fellows, and each was armed with a horse whip. The two compositors and the "devil" got out with all speed, leaving the editor without support. He realized the situation at once, and said:

"Walk in, gentlemen; I presume you have come to horsewhip me?"

"We have," they answered.

"It doesn't need any consideration," replied Carson. "You have lied about me and I'm going to lick you within an inch of your life!"

"Just so, my friend, but first hear what I have to say. Did you ever hear of the press being stopped because the editor was cowhided?"

"I dunno."

"Well, you never did. Lick me all you choose and my paper comes out week after week just the same. The power of the press is next to the lever which moves the universe. It makes or breaks parties, builds up or tears down, plants or destroys. Aggravate the editor and the press becomes a sword to wound and kill. Wollop me if you will, but next week I'll come out more bitter than ever."

There was an embarrassing silence right here, and the face of each horsewhipper had an anxious look.

"It will go out to the world—to America, Canada, England, France—aye! clear to Jerusalem, that the Carson family of this county live on roots and johnny-cake; that they stole a dog from a blind man; that they murdered a peddler for a pair of two-shilling suspenders; that the women are club-footed, and the men work their ears when they sing; that the—"

"What is the regular subscription price for the Herald?" interrupted Carson.

"Only twelve shillings a year."

"Put us four down."

"Very well—six dollars—that's correct. Run in and see me—all of you, and if any of you want to see any of my exchanges I shall be only too glad to serve you."—Detroit Free Press.

IMPORTANT TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

To preserve peaches—Lock them up in a safe deposit vault, or send your children to live with their grandmother.

To put down green corn—When very unsophisticated use your teeth, but if the days of its useful innocence are past, cut from the cob and eat with a spoon.

To can sausage meat—Tie the can securely to the dog's tail.

To make a good blackberry jam—A strictly virtuous berry will yield to the pressure of a table fork, all others should be taken to Sunday school until a change of heart becomes apparent, then pound in a druggist's mortar.

To prepare gruel for nourishing the sick—Take the gruel apart and discourse on the uncertainty of mundane affairs, throwing in a little spiritual consolation if necessary, and in the course of an hour it ought to be wholly resigned to its fate.

To recognize a fresh fish—Recite the poem of the "Youth and the Empty Gun," and if the fish pricks up his ears and listens with amusement, you may be sure he is quite fresh.

To tell new laid eggs—This depends on what you wish to tell. In general, a narrative style with such modulations of the voice as you can command is well suited.

To prevent bread from drying up—A garden hose three times a day has been found efficacious.

To keep cake from moulding—When all other arguments fail, store in a hot oven until consumed either by the fire or the family. —Elevated Railway Journal.

A man out West was boasting of the wonderful scent of his dog, and how far he could trace his master. He concluded his yarn with the triumphant query, "What d'ye think about that?" "Do you know what I think about it?" said one of the bystanders. "Well, I think you'd better go and take a bath."

A lazy man spoils your work, disappoints your expectations, exhausts your patience eats up your substance, abuses your confidence, and hangs a dead weight upon all your plans; and the very best thing a man can do with a lazy man is to get rid of him.

When Fogarty got to the end of his journey, he folded his trunk in a compact parcel, remarking that the man who had printed the railroad flyers had made a slight mistake. The bill was evidently intended to read, "Baggage chucked through."

"Oh, you are too self-conscious," said Fogg to a young man. "I self-conscious!" exclaimed Adolescence. "I am conscious of nothing." "That's what I said," replied Fogg. —Boston Transcript.

"An' that's the pillar of Hercules?" she said, adjusting her silver spectacles. "Gracious! what's the rest of his bedclothes like, I wonder?"

THE PARLOR NUISANCE.

A widespread nuisance with which the people have been struggling ever since America cast loose from England and trimmed her own sails, is that unlit tomb commonly denominated a parlor. If a house has but three rooms in it one is set aside for a parlor, if the family has to dine out under a shed. Various guesses have been made as to the necessity of a parlor, but no one has ever solved the conundrum. As a matter of history it is the drawing-room on a small scale, and a poor imitation at that. It is a receptacle for gloomy pictures, a sombre array of furniture, a melancholy light, an expensive carpet and a lot of useless trinkets. We had forgotten to mention the album. No parlor is complete without an album in which to store away pictures of relatives in unbecoming and ancient costumes. As we remarked, no man has ever discovered the necessity for the parlor, or why it is that ninety people out of a hundred devote 20 per cent of their space to useless solitude and large sums of money to an investment that brings no return, unless the freezing out of guests in winter and sweating them out in summer just before dinner can be called a return. The real cause of the parlor, when the matter is thoroughly sifted, will be found to exist in laziness. It is because people will not keep their sitting-rooms tidied up and neat that parlors continue to exist. The very room that should be thrown open to the summer breezes, and lit by cheerful fires in winter—the room that should resound with the laughter of children and the evening chorus of voices in sweet accord—the room where flowers should shed their perfume and the family circle be completed, is made almost an unknown country. And the family roosts around in some ill-furnished and ill-kept room, to support the parlor, and wonder that the sons hunt up merrier places and more comfort. Of course, if a man can afford a sitting-room and a parlor also, he has as much right to do it as he has to run up an eight-foot square cupola and put $200 worth of windows in it, or put a looking-glass in a horse's stall. But if he can afford but one, let him cut the parlor's throat and throw the hide to the children to romp on. The only chill we ever had was in a parlor, and we never enter one of the gloomy caverns where at times you can't tell the chandelier from the time of day without feeling an echoing shudder start up from the past.—Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

BOSTON CULCHAW.

When the Culture girls of Boston came home not long ago in a vessel of the "Kunard" line, they were very talkative, inquisitive and curious, and pestered the captain almost to death. One day the eldest Culture sought the engineer and questioned him: "How many revolutions, Mr. Engineer," she began, "does the propeller achieve within the period of a minute?" "Oh," said he, "about a thousand." "Indeed," exclaimed Miss Sarah Annex Emerson Culture, "why, you fill me with astonishment!" "I thought I would," said the engineer. "Well, now tell me," she persisted, "what is the capacity—the legitimate, bona fide ability—of the boilers as compared dispassionately and shorn of prejudice with those which our American river and lake steamers are ordinarily provided?" "I give it up, Miss," he said. "What!" said the elder Culture girl, "is it possible you cannot tell what the boilers can do?" "Yes, I can;" he angrily answered while he walked away, "they can bust and blow us all to perdition!" That same night Miss Sarah Annex Emerson Culture wrote in her diary the following: "* * * Find the subordinate officials of the steamer averse to imparting truthful information associated with the mechanical department, which aversion is unquestionably due to ignorance."—New York Mail.

Large ears can hear things in general, and denote broad, comprehensive views and modes of thought, while small ears hear things in particular, showing a disposition to individualize, often accompanied by love of the minute. Large ears are usually satisfied with learning the facts of a case, with the general principles involved—too strict attention to the enumeration of details, especially all repetition of the more unimportant, is wearisome to them. People with such ears, like generally, and are usually well fitted to conduct large enterprises; to receive and pay out large sums; in buying or selling would prefer to leave a margin rather than reduce the quantity of any sort to the exact dimensions of the measures specified, and in giving would prefer to give with a free hand and without too strict a calculation as to the exact amount. Small ears, on the contrary, desire to know the particulars of a story, as well as the main facts; take delight often in examining, handling or constructing tiny specimens of workmanship; are disposed to be exact with respect to inches and ounces in buying or selling, to the extent, at least, of knowing the exact number over or under the stated measure given or received. People with such ears would, in most cases, prefer a retail to a wholesale business.

The "utterly utter" kind of talk has infected the street gamins, one of whom after picking up a more than usually fragant cigar-stump, exclaimed to his friend Jack: "Jack, this is quite too positively bully!"

Lady customer—"Will you please direct me to the dress department?" Obliging Floorwalker—"Certainly; walk this way." Lady customer—"My dear sir, I couldn't walk that way if I practiced for two years."

Time's changes: Old schoolfellow—"Dear me! why, when you and I were at Eton, you were a curly-haired boy with a slim figure; and now your hair's slim and your figure curly!"

"What is the moon good for?" asked Professor Miller; "what are its principal uses to us?" And the smart bad boy looked up from the class and said: "To rest the gas company."

A burglar entered a house the other night, and scared a lady so badly that her hair, which was lying in an exposed place on the bureau, turned white in a single night.

One of the most disagreeable things in the world is the comparison of the "I will" at the marriage ceremony, with the "I won't" after that event.

Show your colors, but don't show them on your nose.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1881.

THANKSGIVING will occur on Thursday, the 24th inst.

THE United States Senate adjourned last Saturday, after a lengthy contest over the postmastership at Lynchburg, Va., the Democrats being determined not to confirm a friend of Mahone, who had been nominated, and who has been appointed to the place by the President since the adjournment.

R. P. CRAFTS of Holyoke, the Democratic nominee for senator in the Western Hampden district, refuses to accept the proffered honor. What's the matter with our Democratic brethren? They all seem to be in a declining mood, which surely would not be the case if they saw any chance of being elected.

THE proposed Garfield memorial hospital at Washington will never be built, at the rate subscriptions are being made to the fund. Less than $1000 has been subscribed up to the present time, and the pertinent suggestion is made that if Washington cares for such a hospital a liberal subscription should be made there to give the enterprise a start.

GOV. LONG has issued a proclamation calling the Legislature together next Wednesday, in accordance with the request of that body at its last session, for the purpose of accepting the consolidated, revised and re-revised statutes. It ought not to take many days to do this, but after the members once get together we venture to say they will hardly miss the chance to spend a month or so at the Hub.

THE rain which began last Saturday and continued at intervals through Sunday and Monday has done a "power" of good in replenishing springs and other sources of water supply, and the danger of a water famine, which seemed so imminent in New York, and was also threatening Boston, is past for the present. The rain has continued at intervals through the week, and the springs now promise to be in pretty good condition for the Winter.

ELECTIONS will take place in several States next Tuesday, but only Massachusetts, Virginia, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Mississippi will elect a full list of State officers, the elections in other States being for various officers, and portions or the whole of their Legislatures. Constitutional amendments will be voted upon in several States, also, Massachusetts deciding whether to allow pauper veterans of the war to vote without paying a poll tax; Wisconsin whether to have biennial elections and sessions of the Legislature; and Nebraska whether to confer suffrage upon women or not. Minnesota will consider several amendments, and Colorado will fix the location of its capital.

THE Pennsylvania Railroad on Monday began running a limited express train of Pullman cars between Chicago and New York, making the run between the two cities, 912 miles, in 26 hours, connection also being made with Boston and other eastern cities. It costs $10 extra to go through on this train from Boston, and $8 from New York, this including sleeping berth, while meals are served on the train, no stops being made for refreshments. The New York Central road now proposes to go the Pennsylvania one better, and will on Sunday put on a train which will make the run from New York to Chicago in 25 hours. This is a new phase of the railroad war, which will be appreciated almost as much as the cheap fares, by travelers who are in a hurry to get along, as most Americans are.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM does not make much progress in New York political methods as yet. The Federal office holders in the city have all been "invited" by the Republican State Committee to send in "contributions" for the campaign expenses, a specified amount being named in each case, while the recipients well understand that if they do not pay, they will stand an excellent chance of losing their positions. Why don't the New York civil service reformers take this matter in hand, and back up these men in a refusal to pay such assessments? This would bring to a test the party declarations in favor of reform, and would be a real blessing to hundreds of government employes who can ill afford to lose the sums of which they are robbed under the guise of "contributions" for party needs.

EX-SECRETARY WINDOM had a plan of civil service reform nearly perfected at the time of President Garfield's assassination, by which he would allot appointments to the different States, and then appoint an examining committee in each State to whom applicants must apply, and be recommended according to abilities, preference being given to soldiers, their children, or their widows. He says the people who are competent to fill places cannot afford to go to Washington to obtain them, and that nearly all who have applied at the treasury department during the past eight months have been men who could not otherwise support themselves. Mr. Windom's plan has many good points about it, and he will have an opportunity to move and urge its adoption when he resumes his seat in the Senate next month.

Don't Be Too Certain.

It is admitted on every hand that the election this year is to be a quiet, one-sided affair, with an assurance of Republican success from the beginning. But the Republicans must not take too much for granted. Nothing but ballots count in an election, and if a number of Republicans in every town neglect to vote, because of the feeling that all is going right anyway, they may wake up next Wednesday morning to find their party defeated. This isn't probable, to be sure, but stranger things have happened, and every voter in the party should make it his duty to visit the polls and vote next Tuesday, so that there may be no doubt about the result.

NEWARK, N. J., furnishes the biggest bank defalcation that has yet come to light in this country. The doors of the Mechanics' National Bank of that city, supposed to be one of the strongest institutions in the State, were not opened on Monday, the cashier, O. L. Baldwin, having confessed that he was a defaulter to the extent of over $1,500,000. He says the money all went to C. Nugent & Co., morocco manufacturers, to whom he illegally loaned the bank's funds without security. The stealing has been going on for eight years, and it is evident that during that time no thorough examination of the bank's condition has been made. Baldwin covered up his transactions in his balances in New York, which nobody attempted to verify until last year, when the bank examiner would have discovered his dishonesty had Baldwin not been in New York and offered to carry to the examiner the letter giving his New York balance, and then substituted a forged letter for it. The bank books show that Nugent & Co. have this year drawn from the bank $506,000 more than they have deposited, but they deny Baldwin's story, and say the bank owes them. It is believed by many that Baldwin speculated and lost money, but this he denies, and still adheres to his original story. Baldwin is 45 years old, has been a prominent Episcopalian, and had a salary of $7500 on which to support himself, wife and two children.

William J. Sipple, a discharged Erie railroad telegraph operator, planned one of the boldest robberies on record last week. Getting possession of an instrument at Bergen tunnel, he began sending out messages signed with the initials of an officer of the road. He ordered all the operators between Paterson and Jersey City to ground all their wires but one, and abandon their instruments, which they did. Then, informing the paymaster of a pretended plot to rob his safe, he induced him to take out $60,000 from it and sent him on a wild goose chase to Passaic, while the superintendent obeyed orders to stop trains and clear the depot and yard of cars, and it was only by mere chance that his plan to get hold of the $60,000 was frustrated. The strangest part of the affair is that such extraordinary orders by telegrah should have been so unquestioningly obeyed.

Secretary of State Peirce has issued a circular to town and city officers calling attention to the numerous errors in the election returns last year, and the importance of greater care in making up returns. The errors consist mainly of omissions, such as omitting names of towns, christian names or initials of candidates, and number of votes, from the returns. These errors can be obviated by proper care in making up the returns, and the officers making them should carefully examine and compare them with the records before forwarding them. The secretary also suggests that when it is apparent that ballots are erroneously written or printed, a letter should accompany the return stating that fact.

J. H. Noyes, leader of the Oneida Community, having heard that he was to be called as a witness to prove Guiteau's insanity, wrote the latter's counsel that he did not believe him insane. "I think," he says "that he was born with a special genius for mischief, and has had a real inspiration for it all his days; but that is not saying he is insane, unless we also call natural genius and inspiration for good things, such as invention, music, etc., insanity. I understand insanity to be unsoundness—disease of the brain; and I do not think Guiteau has that, any more than bears and lions have it."

Small-pox is so prevalent in the densely-populated wards in the northwestern portions of Chicago, and the superstition against vaccination is so strong, that the health officers have had to resort to vigorous measures to stay the disease. Last Sunday detachments of police took possession of two large Catholic churches, and physicians vaccinated the entire congregations, nolens volens, the few non-attendants at church being visited later at their houses. Thirteen hundred vaccine points were used in this work.

President Arthur wants the star route prosecutions pushed to a trial at once, so that the charges may be proven or the suits abandoned. It is said Gen. Brady will endeavor to show that every extension of the postal service was made at the request of some prominent man; and if not convicted he will commence suit against Postmaster General James, Wayne MacVeagh and others for defamation of character.

The Britishers appreciate the salute with which their flag was honored at the recent Yorktown celebration, and at the lord mayor's reception in London next Wednesday the stars and stripes will be escorted by a guard of honor, and on the arrival of the procession at Westminister the flag will be borne to the palace yard and massed bands will play the American national anthem.

It is now Rhode Island's turn at the centennials, and it is proposed to celebrate ten years hence the introduction of cotton manufacturing into the United States. Pawtucket claims to be the birthplace of this great industry, and the celebration is to occur in that town, and to be a sort of world's fair.

A four-years-old son of Section Master Smith of the Boston and Albany Railroad swallowed a screw at Brookfield, the other day, and the two or three doctors who tried to get it out only forced it further into the windpipe, so that the boy died while they were working over him.

The precision of modern engineering is forcibly illustrated by the recently accomplished feat of picking up a long unused ocean cable from a depth of 5000 fathoms. To find such a thread two miles under the sea is a great achievement.

LOCAL NOTICES.

C. Hitchcock is all ready to do rubber repairing.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

A cold wave is coming.

Communion Sunday to-morrow.

Look out for shooting stars these nights.

Less than three weeks to Thanksgiving.

There was an attempt at a snow squall yesterday morning.

The Universalists had a social at their church Wednesday evening.

Housekeepers have had to dry their clothes between showers this week.

The Boston & Albany rate to Chicago has been advanced from $7 to $9.25.

No sunshine since last week Friday; but the rain has been quite as acceptable.

There has been considerable damp mildness about the atmosphere this week.

Rev. John Willard, of Newtonville, will preach at the Congregational church to-morrow.

President Willis, of the Palmer National Bank, left for Chicago last night, to be gone a few days.

Got in your winter coal yet? The price is advancing in many places, but Mr. Holbrook still sells at $7.

New pocket time tables, containing the latest changes in the running of trains, have been issued by the Boston & Albany road.

Mrs. Reuben Walls of this place has a chrysanthemum which now contains 1307 blossoms, while there are a good many buds yet to unfold.

The Boston & Albany Railroad library has been removed from Boston to Springfield. It numbers some 2500 volumes, and is free to the employes of the road.

The afternoon train for Amherst now leaves at 1.25, instead of 2.07. The corrected time table of the New London Northern road will be found in another column.

The new iron pipe, to carry water from the new reservoir to the State Primary School, is mostly laid, ready for use, but it will be several weeks, yet, before the reservoir will be completed.

The time of the evening modoc train from Boston for the West is soon to be quickened, in order that the San Francisco mail can "catch on" to the new fast train on the New York Central road.

Dr. A. B. Cowan has withdrawn from the grocery firm of W. P. French & Co., in order that he may give his whole time to the interests of his newly-established dental rooms, corner of Main and Thorndike streets.

Gov. Long visited the State Primary School on Monday, with Lieut. Gov. Weston and some of the members of his council, and on Tuesday several members of the board of health, lunacy and charity were at the institution.

It looked a little as though an attempt was being made to pack the Republican caucus Thursday evening in the interest of some candidate. A number of Democrats were present, and it is said that several voted. This is hardly the fair thing, brethren.

George A. Rice, formerly employed in the New London freight office in this place, has been appointed station agent at Barrett's Junction, to succeed A. D. Smith, who has resigned to become agent of the Boston, Barre & Gardner Railroad at Gardner.

C. M. Gale of Wales has left on our table some apple blossoms from his orchard, where he has several trees which are putting forth new leaves and blossoms, and bid fair to produce a good crop of apples if they only have time enough before winter sets in.

The New London Northern Railroad has put on an additional gang of men for the freight service between Palmer and Brattleboro, with George L. Spafford as conductor. This makes three gangs in all, who will each run four days in the week, instead of six as in the past.

The selectmen will be at the town house from 1 to 5 o'clock this afternoon, for the purpose of revising the voters' list. Persons whose names are not on the list should attend to the matter at this time if they wish to vote next Tuesday, as no names will be added to the list after to-day.

Mrs. Green, mother of Mrs. R. A. Moffatt of this place, broke her leg in a most singular manner Tuesday morning. She was lying in bed, and started to straighten out her right leg, when the bone snapped in two above the knee. This is believed to be the only case ever known of a bone breaking from so slight a cause.

J. A. Hall, a former resident of this town, but for many years past express agent at Amherst, has been obliged to resign his place on account of an apoplectic attack, and his position is filled temporarily by O. E. Crawford, while O. D. Taylor is attending to Mr. Crawford's work as messenger between Palmer and Brattleboro.

It is reported that the evening steamboat train from the north, which now comes in nearly an hour earlier than by the old time table, will soon be put back to its former time, so as to make connection with the train from Montreal, which it now misses. In this case, the special train down from Amherst, which has arrived here at 5.38 during the summer, will probably be restored.

Col. Geo. W. Palmer, father of Mrs. C. E. Dewey of this place, met with an accident Monday in Mr. Dewey's barn, where some changes were being made. The support where he was standing, over the horse stalls, gave way, precipitating him to the barn floor, and breaking his right hip bone. It is an unfortunate fracture for a man of his years, Mr. Palmer being over 70 years old, but he is getting along quite nicely.

The depot at Barrett's Junction was burned to the ground last Monday morning. Mrs. Smith, wife of the agent, who lived in the second story, heard a crackling as of fire in the garret, and called her husband, who found the garret all in flames, which spread so rapidly that he had time to save few of his household effects, though the freight and railroad papers were safely removed. The fire is supposed to have started from a defective chimney. The loss on the building, which was owned by the Boston & Albany and New London Northern railroads, is about $1800, while Agent Smith's loss amounts to $800 or $900, which is fully covered by insurance. The depot will be rebuilt at once.

A little boy at the State Primary School died yesterday morning of typhoid pneumonia, this being the first death that has occurred there since May 28. For the year ending Oct. 1 there were only 5 deaths in the institution. Considering the fact that there are from 400 to 600 children in the institution all the time, and that a large part of them, prior to going to the school, have lived in poverty and with surroundings poorly calculated to develop healthy constitutions, this must be regarded as a remarkably good record, reflecting credit alike upon the sanitary condition of the school, the care of the superintendent, and the skill of the physician. We doubt if any other institution with as many inmates can show as good a record.

The Republican caucus for the choice of delegates to the representative convention was held at the town house Thursday evening, and brought out a surprisingly large attendance. There was a general expectation that there would be some "fun" before the evening was over, but everything passed off almost as quietly as a church prayer meeting. C. L. Gardner was made chairman of the meeting, and J. B. Shaw secretary. It was voted to take an informal ballot to ascertain the choice of the caucus as to a candidate for representative, and the result was as follows: Whole number of votes cast 139, of which Dr. Wm. Holbrook had 47, H. P. Holden 42, D. B. Bishop 26, S. S. Taft 23, scattering 1. A committee of three, consisting of C. B. Fisk, Geo. Robinson and O. P. Allen, was then chosen to prepare a list of delegates to the convention, and their report was adopted, the delegates being as follows: C. L. Gardner, J. B. Shaw, S. H. Hellyar, John Clough, R. E. Knowlton, C. Wilson, H. E. W. Clark, O. B. Smith and A. R. Murdock.

THE REPRESENTATIVE CONVENTION.

The convention to nominate a representative from this district was held at North Wilbraham yesterday forenoon, with 17 delegates present, the delegation from Palmer being 2 short of its full number. The Palmer delegates were unable to unite on a candidate, and an informal ballot in the convention resulted as follows: Dr. Wm. Holbrook 3, S. S. Taft 3, D. B. Bishop 1, blank 10. Two more informal ballots followed, Dr. Holbrook's vote going up to 9, and a formal ballot was then taken, resulting in 12 votes for Dr. Holbrook and 5 for Mr. Taft. Dr. Holbrook's nomination was then made unanimous, and the convention adjourned, after voting that the district committee should be composed of the chairmen of the town committees, the member from this town to be chairman of the committee.

Dr. Holbrook needs no introduction to the voters of the district. He is an old and well-known citizen of the town, with excellent qualifications for the position to which he is nominated, and his election will give the district a competent and well-qualified representative in the Legislature.

LUDLOW.

Elexus Waid and William Severance have been awarded $250 and $165 respectively, by the superior court at Springfield this week, for damages received by being run into by a hand-car on the railroad crossing in Jenksville.

THORNDIKE.

F. S. Breard's grocery store has been closed by his creditors.

The C. A. F. O. Club of this place announce that their first annual ball will come off at the town hall on Friday, Nov. 18th, with music by Riley's orchestra.

BONDVILLE.

Joseph Hanson, the former baggage master at this station, has been appointed station agent at Enfield.

O. A. Parent invites attention, in another column, to a fine new stock of goods which he has just put in at bottom prices.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

Farmers are busy husking out their corn. They fear cold fingers.

The milk car commenced stopping here on Monday. They get about 300 quarts now, but expect more.

Two expert hunters recently bagged nearly thirty partridges in one day, and it wasn't much of a day for game, either. Squirrels are numerous, but shy.

WALES.

Smiling faces all around. "Aren't we having a nice rain?" is the universal talk, with the exception of an occasional grumbler.

A very pleasant surprise party was given Mrs. Newton Wallace on Wednesday evening, and valuable and useful presents were left with her as a slight token of the appreciation in which she is held for her services as organist at the Methodist church.

WARREN.

Report says Warren is to have a new landlord.

G. S. Green has purchased the milk route of Messrs. Warriner and Hill.

A number of our people attended the missionary meetings held in Worcester this week.

The next lecture of the course will be given by Capt. J. G. B. Adams. Subject: "Rambling Recollections of Rebeldom."

The foundation to the addition of the Methodist church has sunk seven inches, and it will be found necessary to drive spiles for it to rest on.

Town meeting next Tuesday to vote for State officers; also to see if the town will accept and build the extension laid out on Moore avenue and Prospect street, connecting the two.

WILBRAHAM.

The students of the second year held their reception in Club Hall Saturday evening.

Rev. F. G. Wagner lectured at Fisk Hall Tuesday evening, under the auspices of Philo. Subject, "A Trip to Katahdin."

The Young Women's Missionary Society of the Congregational church met with Miss Rosa Warner last Saturday afternoon.

Newton Lodge, F. and A. M., on Wednesday evening elected the following officers for the ensuing year: W. M., Henry Clark; S. W., J. A. Parker; J. W., W. H. Brown; Sec'y, F. E. Clark; treas., Dr. Stebbins Foskit.

The young people of the First Congregational church gave an entertainment last Tuesday evening that was well patronized, although the weather was unfavorable. The first part consisted of scenes in pantomime from Longfellow's "Hanging of the Crane," the scenes being presented as the poem was read. The second part consisted of an old folk's concert, led by Principal Chas. H. Cooper of the high school. The sacred songs were interspersed with worldly,—"The Sorrows of a Spinster," by Miss Leonard; "Two Men of the Olden Time," by Messrs. Cooper and Perry; and "Cousin Jedediah." A prominent feature of the evening was the excellent orchestral music furnished by the following gentlemen from Palmer and Monson: F. W. Perry leader, Frank Eager, W. D. Fenton, John L. Stanyan and D. W. Northrop.

The life-saving service of this country is acknowledged to be the best in the world, and its inestimable value to seamen, as well as its efficiency, is shown very clearly by the report of its work for the year ending June 30. There were, in the 12 months, within the field covered by the service, 300 vessels wrecked, having on board 1989 persons. Of these 390 were landed by surf boats, 109 by the breeches buoy and 65 by life-car, while others were dragged out of the surf by swimmers, and in all no less than 1980 were saved; only nine lives lost, where, but for this help, there must have been hundreds. The value of the vessels and cargoes was estimated at $3,811,708, of which over two-thirds was saved, largely through the work of the service. The entire cost of the service for the year was $436,962.

Those desiring entertainment for children cannot do better than to subscribe for "Our Little Ones," a monthly magazine of about thirty-two pages every way calculated to interest, amuse and instruct. It is made up of short stories and sketches prepared by the best writers for children, both of prose and poetry, which are plentifully interspersed with fine illustrations prepared expressly for this work, nothing cheap or second-hand being used. The publishers have purchased "The Nursery," which has been such a treasure in the family for fifteen years, and will continue it until the close of its present volume, when it will be merged in "Our Little Ones," which will be issued next year under both titles. CATARRH is a poisonous infection of the mucous membrane, just as small-pox is a virus of the blood. Catarrhal virus can only be reached and exterminated by antidotal, inoculative elements, that are obsorbed by the purulent mucous. DR. WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE is unquestionably the most important medical discovery since vaccination. It never fails. Supplied by druggists, or delivered by D. B. Dewey & Co., 46 Dey St., New York, at $1 a package. Pamphlets, with full instructions, mailed free. n

Over-indulgence in eating and drinking, whereby the liver is disorganized, and the system deranged. The suffering resulting from dyspepsia is very terrible, and the sooner the patient can get relief the better. There is no remedy so effectual for the cure of this disease as Simmons Liver Regulator.

D. E. Dobson, M. D., of Deer Park, Ala, says: "I have used the Regulator for eight months, and find it has cured me entirely of dyspepsia. It is the best medicine I ever used for that disease, or, rather, it is the only one that has proved satisfactory."

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.—It seems strange that any one will suffer from derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the BEST BLOOD PURIFIER ever discovered, effectually curing scrofula, syphylitic disorders, weakness of the kidneys, erysipelas, malaria; all nervous disorders and debility, bilious complaints and all diseases indicating an impure condition of the blood, liver, kidneys, stomach, skin, etc. It corrects digestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it ACTS LIKE A CHARM, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

BAKER'S PAIN PANACEA cures pain in man and beast. For use externally and internally.

DR. ROGER'S VEGETABLE WORM SYRUP instantly destroys worms and removes the secretions which cause them.

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. in ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts, (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

The CENTURY MAGAZINE,

(SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY,)

FOR THE COMING YEAR.

With the November number began the new series under the title of THE CENTURY MAGAZINE, which will be, in fact, a new, enlarged, and improved "Scribner." The page is somewhat longer and wider, admitting pictures of a larger size, and increasing the reading matter about FOURTEEN ADDITIONAL PAGES.

The following is a summary of the leading features of the new series for the year:

A NEW NOVEL by MRS. BURNETT (author of "That Lass o' Lowrie's," etc.,) entitled "Through One Administration," a story of Washington Life.

STUDIES OF THE LOUISIANA CREOLE, by Geo. W. Cable, author of "The Grandissimes," etc. A series of illustrated papers, on the traditions and romance of Creole life in Louisiana.

A NOVEL BY W. D. HOWELLS (author of "A Chance Acquaintance," etc.,) dealing with characteristic features of American life.

ANCIENT AND MODERN SCULPTURE. A "History of Ancient Sculpture," by Mrs. Lucy M. Mitchell, to contain the finest series of engravings yet published of the masterpieces of sculpture. There will also be pieces on "Living English Sculptors," and on the "Younger Sculptors of America," fully illustrated.

THE OPERA IN NEW YORK, by Richard Grant White. A popular and valuable series, to be illustrated with wonderful completeness and beauty.

ARCHITECTURE AND DECORATION IN AMERICA will be treated in a way to interest both householder and housewife; with many practical as well as beautiful illustration from recent designs.

REPRESENTATIVE MEN AND WOMEN OF THE 19TH CENTURY. Biographical sketches, accompanied by portraits, of George Eliot, Robert Browning, Rev. Frederick W. Robertson (by the late Dean Stanley), Matthew Arnold, Christina Rossetti, and Cardinal Newman, and of the younger American authors, Wm. D. Howells, Henry James, Jr., and George W. Cable.

SCENES OF THACKERAY'S, HAWTHORNE'S AND GEORGE ELIOT'S NOVELS. Succeeding the illustrated series on the scenes of Dickens' novels.

THE REFORM OF THE CIVIL SERVICE: Arrangements have been made for a series of able papers on this pressing political question.

POETRY AND POETS IN AMERICA. There will be studies of Longfellow, Whittier, Emerson, Lowell, and others, by E. C. Stedman.

STORIES, SKETCHES AND ESSAYS may be expected from Charles Dudley Warner, W. D. Howells, "Mark Twain," Edward Eggleston, Henry James, Jr., John Muir, Miss Gordon Cumming, "H. H.," Geo. W. Cable, Joel Chandler Harris, A. C. Redwood, F. D. Millett, Noah Brooks, Frank R. Stockton, Constance F. Woolson, H. H. Boyesen, Albert Stickney, Washington Gladden, John Burroughs, Parke Godwin, Tommaso Salvini, Henry King, Ernest Ingersoll, E. L. Godkin, E. B. Washburne, and many others.

One or two papers on "The adventures of the Tile Club," and an original Life of Bewick, the engraver, by Austin Dobson, are among other features to be later announced.

THE EDITORIAL DEPARTMENTS throughout will be unusually complete, and "The World's Work" will be considerably enlarged.

The price of THE CENTURY MAGAZINE will remain at $4.00 per year (35 cents a number). The portrait (size 21x27) of the late Dr. Holland, issued just before his death, photographed from a life-size drawing by Wyatt Eaton, will possess a new interest to the readers of this magazine. It is offered at $5.00 retail, or together with THE CENTURY MAGAZINE for $6.50. Subscriptions are taken by the publishers, and by book-sellers and newsdealers everywhere.

GARFIELD AND HIS WIFE.

The sweetheart of his boyhood—the girl pupil whom her tutor loved—was for Garfield the star of his heart's horizon till the last moment of his life. In a passage leading from the parlor to the dining-room in his house at Mentor, hangs a picture of a nun about to enter a confessional in a cathedral. The resemblance of this sweet face to that of Mrs. Garfield is very striking, one of those accidental likenesses one sometimes observes in a picture, and which seems all the more strange and interesting because it was evolved from the painter's fancy without any knowledge of the dear model it so greatly resembles. So marked was the likeness between the angelic upturned face of the heaven-communing nun and that of Mrs. Garfield, that I stopped before it as Gen. Garfield was taking me into dinner. "How like Mrs. Garfield!" I exclaimed. She was directly behind me, walking with Gen. Swaim. The married lovers exchanged a fond glance, and Mrs. Garfield said with a joyous smile, "The general calls that his pretty girl." This was his pet name for herself, by which he always spoke of the accidental portrait. I never saw two people talk so much with their eyes as those two did. It was evident that they consulted each other upon every circumstance of life as it arose, and that the action he took thereon was the one which the mutual judgment settled upon as the best. I saw him in the Senate chamber go through the imposing ceremonial by which he was transformed from a private citizen, one of the mass, to a ruler whose powers, while they last, are more autocratic than any king's. The agitation of the selemn moment had blanched the glowing cheek, stilled the smile on the now pale lips; but ever and anon he lifted his eyes to her, as she sat in the gallery above and in front of him, and her calm, unruffled face seemed to give him the response he needed—the only one he listened to, or sought. Any observer versed in physiognomy could see that her eyes spoke aloud to him across the space which separated them, saying, "All is well. You are doing nobly. I am proud of you!" Behind the unimpassioned mask of her delicate features, held in bondage by the power of her will and fortitude, there glowed the fire of an enthusiastic love of him, joy in him, support from her for him, to which no cold description in written words can do justice.

No one who saw President Garfield after his installation in the White House can fail to have observed the great change which his accession to power had occasioned in him. Only at intervals did his bright joyousness shine out again, as at the pleasant home at Mentor. The very day after he became President the struggle for the spoils of office began with a fierceness hitherto unparalleled in all the strife of that kind which has been seen at Washington. He was half maddened by his desire to do justice to all contending factions. It was this feeling which made him slow to give irrevocable decisions. I was at the White House one morning, and he referred to his anxiety not to take a step in haste which he might repent at leisure. The humor of his own cautious slowness brought back the twinkle in his eye, the smile on the rosy lip. "I don't know when I shall get round to that," he said. "You know there's no telling when the Mississippi river will reach a given point." The sluggish movement of the great Father of Waters was hit off to the life by this impromptu epigram. The day I called at the White House to say good-by—I did not think it would be forever—I was shown into the family drawing-room upstairs—an apartment to which the public are not allowed to penetrate.

Mrs. Garfield came in with her daughter Mollie, a splendid, large-limbed maiden of fourteen, her father's self in feature and in form. A noble girl! Beside this heiress of her father's grand proportions, Mrs. Garfield looks almost smaller than her daughter; yet she cannot be called a little woman. Sweet voiced, ladylike; her apparel again most fitting, most simple, most becoming.

The President enters, clad in a gray morning suit, his hands in the jacket's side pockets. Only a moment! Such a rush of people clamoring to see him! But during this moment husband and wife continually glance affectionately—their old glance—their glance of Mentor, of the Senate hall, at each other. Eyes constantly "look love to eyes that speak again." He complains of the loss of sleep which the pressure of presidential duties entails. "I only slept four hours last night," he says. But he hopes everything is doing well now. Life is to be joyous in the future. There is always some trouble getting to rights when we move into a house, is there not? So good-by, and God bless you! And he is gone.—Whitehall Review.

An Interesting Account!

STONE IN THE BLADDER EXPELLED BY USING DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY."

Mr. S. W. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess Co., N. Y., the son of Mr. E. S. Hicks, whose name may have appeared in this journal in connection with an article similar to this, was, like his father, afflicted with Stone in the Bladder, only that his case was more serious than his father's. On the appearance of the disease the father advised the son to write to Dr. David Kennedy of Rondout, N. Y., who, he said, would tell him what to do. Dr. Kennedy replied, suggesting the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which had worked so successfully in the father's case. Mr. Hicks, who had been assured by the local physicians that they could do nothing more for him, tried "Favorite Remedy" at a venture. After two weeks' use of it he passed a stone ¾ of an inch long and of the thickness of a pipe-stem. Since then he has had no symptoms of the return of the trouble. Here is a sick man healed. What better results could have been expected? What greater benefit could medical science confer? The end was gained; that is surely enough. Dr. Kennedy assures the public, by a reputation which he cannot afford to forfeit or imperil, that the "Favorite Remedy" does invigorate the blood, cures liver, kidney and bladder complaints, as well as all those diseases and instances peculiar to females. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

PROTECTION FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE,
INTERMITTENT FEVER,
GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER,
LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER,
NAUSEA, ARE THE
PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR
(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use.

If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria
IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.

"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

AN ONLY DAUGHTER CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two three-cent stamps to pay expenses. This herb also cures night sweats, Nausea at the Stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race Street, Philadelphia, naming this paper. 4w33

The Jolly Country Squashes.

We are a happy lot of folks,—
We spend our time in pleasure;
And we enjoy our fleeting life
Unto its fullest measure;
We have a party every night,
When dull mankind is dreaming,
Which never ends until appears
The daylight's rosy gleaming.

The cornstalk boys, our sturdy friends,
Bear jack 'o lanterns o'er us;
The fire-flies hang their glowing lamps
Within the heavens o'er us;
The tree-toad sounds the deep trombone,
When everything is ready,
And Katy-did, perched on a bush,
Calls off in accents steady.

Old Mother Hubbard leads the dance,
Her face o'erspread with laughter,
And all we merry wights, in time,
With tripping feet come after;
Then up we go, and down we go,
Through all the mystic mazes,
And stately sunflowers nod in tune,
And gaily smile the daisies.

Dear Mrs. Crookneck in her dress
Of rare and radiant yellow,
Cuts quite a grand and dazzling swell,
While waltzing with her fellow.
Miss Marrow, just from Boston town,
Our new and charming neighbor,
For grace and beauty takes the palm,
Without a bit of labor.

And all night long we laugh and dance,
We have a jolly party;
And laughing makes us grow quite fat,
And dancing makes us hearty;
And when the noble chanticleer
Of breaking day gives warning,
Our entertainment we suspend,
And bid the world "good morning!"

FINDING THE BABY.

It happened years ago. Strange how time does fly!

"Time and tide wait for no man;" and soon change comes, fleet-footed and insidious. Gradually the gray hairs begin to show themselves; your sight is not as good as it used to be; and some day standing before your mirror and viewing all these ravages, you are forced to admit (alas! that it must be admitted!) that you are growing old.

But at the time my story opens, I was a young man of five-and-twenty, a lawyer by profession, and with quite a lucrative practice.

One day I was called to a neighboring town to attend court. It was in the train while on my journey home that I met my fate. Opposite me in the carriage were two ladies and a child.

Both were young and one was beautiful; she held the child in her arms during the entire distance; a bright, pretty little thing, about two years of age. The dress and general appearance of the ladies indicated wealth; and from the time that my eyes first rested on the lovely face of the lady with the child, I felt that my heart—by no means easily impressed—had gone out of my keeping, and that I, alas! was "deeply, desperately madly in love."

Looking back upon that time I feel a glow of pity for my benighted condition.

As the train dashed on I found myself observing the lady with a close scrutiny, which bade fair to become a decided stare.

Once I caught the beautiful eyes fixed upon my face, and I felt myself start and color like an awkward school girl.

The end of the trip was reached at last. I never have been so sorry to reach home before or since. The train steamed into the station and the passengers slowly alighted.

A tall, graceful man, with piercing dark eyes and flowing beard, advanced toward the party in whom I had become so unwarrantably interested, and joyous greetings followed.

"Kiss papa, Pansy," cried the lovely lady, holding up the baby for the caress.

My heart sank like lead in my breast. I had fallen in love with a married woman—another man's wife. But I deserved to suffer for my own foolishness; and so, stifling as best I might the wild feelings which had sprung up unbidden in my heart, I hastened homeward.

The very next day I strolled into the park. I had a serious case on my hands and was preoccupied and somewhat moody, brooding over its intricacies.

Carelessly my eyes fell upon a nursemaid near—a simpering girl of about fifteen—carrying a remarkably pretty child.

Suddenly a piercing shriek fell on my ears—a child's wild, frightened scream—a cry of terror and alarm.

Turning in its direction I saw an old woman—a wretched, degraded-looking creature, bent, wizened, horrible—her appearance somehow suggesting to my mind Dickens's "Good Mrs. Brown."

I saw her snatch the child from the girl's arms and dart off with wonderful dexterity and swiftness, the nursemaid shrieking in terror, and wildly vociferating that the mistress would certainly kill her.

It all flashed into my mind in an instant. Such cases in great cities were by no means rare or uncommon.

The old hag, attracted by the jewelry which the child wore—and with which fond and foolish mothers will persist in decking their little ones—had stolen the child for the sake of the gain and the reward which would undoubtedly be offered for its return.

Without a moment's reflection I darted after the old woman.

She was remarkably fleet-footed and had somewhat the advantage of me in regard to time; but I followed her, and soon had the satisfaction of overtaking her. I brought my hand down upon her shoulder with a force which made her cry out.

"See here, my good woman," I panted excitedly, "just hand that child over here, will you?"

She began to whine and whimper and reiterate that she was an honest woman and meant no harm—that 'twas all done for a joke on the nursemaid. But I repeated my demand for the custody of the child and hinted that such a joke might turn out seriously for her.

In the meantime the little one turned its pretty face toward me, and clapping its little, dimpled hands, lisped in the sweetest of voices:—

"Papa! Papa!"

The inevitable crowd had gathered; the dim perception of the true state of affairs must have entered their minds, for a loud laugh followed the baby-speech. I stifled my inclination to sail in and deal summary vengeance; and taking the child in my arms, with a severe rebuke to the old woman, I started off through the park to return my charge to the care of the weeping nursemaid.

With winged feet, I retraced my steps, and returned to the exact spot where I had left the girl. Oh, horror! she was gone. She had doubtless given up all hope of recovering the lost child, and had hastened homeward with her doleful news—perhaps to break the poor mother's heart.

What should I do? I was in an awkward scrape, surely. Here was I, an unmarried man—with a baby on my hands, a pretty, cooing, engaging little creature. What would Mrs. Larkins say if I brought the baby home to my lodgings? What would my friends—everybody—say? I trembled with vague horror and alarm. It might even get into the newspapers; and I should be pointed out as the victim of cruel circumstances—a man upon whom fate and misfortune had played a practical joke.

What should I—could I do? A loud squall from the enfant terrible decided me. I must carry it home and leave the result to Providence, and Mrs. Larkins. I would go at once and advertise the baby, and leave information at the police station; but for the present, at least, baby must be taken care of. Never, as long as I live, shall I forget that walk home—stared at by everybody—smiled at deridingly by the few acquaintances whom I chanced to meet; and at length, oh, cruel fate! I encountered Miss Simpson, one of the belles of the season, to whom I had lately been paying assiduous court, and was forced to endure the ignominy of the cut direct; saw her walk by me, with head erect and flashing eyes directed full upon my blushing countenance, with that prolonged, icy stare which the belle knows so well how to employ, and direct upon the unfortunate masculine whose acquaintance in future she intends to ignore. I felt tempted to drop the little charge, and go and fling myself into the river; but again, I desisted.

I pass over my meeting with Mrs. Larkins. I threw myself upon her mercy. After all she was kind-hearted; and I was prompt in paying the bills, so she consented to take charge of my baby until its proper parents should be found.

The next morning the newspaper contained an account of the abduction of the child, a large reward being offered for its safe return, and giving the address as L. A. Howard, No. —, Park Terrace.

Calling a carriage, I took the baby, and was driven rapidly to the address indicated, a spacious and elegant mansion. With my charge in my arms, I was ushered into a handsome drawing-room, and sat down to await the coming of the lady of the house.

Presently the door opened, and my heart beat like a sledge-hammer as I beheld the lady with whom I had fallen in love in the train that never-to-be-forgotten day. She rushed forward and caught the child to her heart with fond caresses.

"Oh, Pansy, Pansy!" she sobbed, "we thought you were gone forever."

I loved her, strange and incomprehensible as it may seem; this sudden, wild tempest which had swept through my heart, transformed me into a new being. Yes, I loved her, and she was the wife of another.

Such thoughts flitted through my mind, and I stood before her—silent and sad.

At that moment the door opened, and the lady who had been her companion on that memorable day, entered the room, accompanied by the same gentleman.

"Oh, Jennie!" she cried, rushing forward excitedly, "it is Pansy, sure enough! Thank God!"

I introduced myself then; entered a brief explanation and was overwhelmed with gratitude.

"My sister will never forget you!" said Jennie, turning her beautiful eyes upon my face. "Pansy is her only child, and she just worships her!"

"Her child?" I gasped. "I—I—beg pardon, madam, but I thought the child was yours!"

She laughed aloud, a musical, ringing laugh.

"We must introduce ourselves!" she cried, merrily. "This lady is my sister, Mrs. Howard, the mother of Pansy. This gentleman," turning toward him with a bewitching smile, "is her husband, Leonard Howard. I am Miss Jennie Denham."

And so the truth was revealed, and I was wonderfully relieved, to find that I was not in love with a married woman after all.

* * * * * *

A slender form bends over me, as I write these last words, and a little hand is laid upon my shoulder, while Jennie, my wife, we have been married for years now, cries sweetly:—

"Come, Charlie; supper is ready!"

I lay my pen down and arise to obey the summons.

An Eastern man, stranger to the habits of the West, who had put up for the night at a hotel in a Western border town, on entering the bar-room next morning, found the landlord sweeping up what he supposed to be grapes. He said to him: "You have plenty of large grapes out here." "Grapes?" said the landlord. "Them's eyes that were gouged out here last night!"

We can't help entertaining a severe respect for that science which can instantaneously photograph a flying horse, but forces a man to sit for four eternal minutes in front of a camera, his head braced into a pitchfork, and his nerveless eyes staring relentlessly out into the fathomless realms of the undefinable. —Rockland Courier.

A spread-eagle orator at a political meeting the other night, said: "If I had the wings of a bird I would fly to every village and hamlet in the broad land, and carry the glad tidings of victory of which I am assured." A naughty boy in the crowd sang out: "You'd be shot for a goose before you had flewed a mile."

She went into a store to buy some toilet soap, and while the clerk was eloquently expatiating on its merits, about made up her mind to purchase; but when he said "it will keep off chaps," she remarked that she didn't want that kind.

Mabel (aged twenty) to Edith (aged five): "There, Edith, do stop hugging me; you'll drag me to death." Edith: "You didn't talk that way to Charlie Brown t'other evening, and he weighs ever so much more as I."

The time for reasoning is before we have approached near enough to the forbidden fruit to look at it and admire.

In the Conservatory.

"But we must return! What will they say?
Yes, I know it's awful nice
In the window here, from the others away,
With a taste, now and then, of the ice,
And now and then of—Oh, you wretch!
It wasn't at all required
That you should illustrate thus with a sketch
The speech that of course you admired.

"No matter how naughty. There! you have spoiled
The 'classic Grecian knot'
In which you like my hair to be coiled,
And I really don't know what
Other mischief you haven't done. How you've mussed
My gown! You squeeze like a vise!
Why can't you men take something on trust,
And be more dainty and nice?

"There! I'm ready now. What! Just one more?
Oh, ain't you a darling tease?
And love me so?—One, two, three, four!
There! come, now, darling, please!
I'm almost afraid of the parlor glare;
When they look at my lips, they'll see
The kisses upon them."—"No, not there;
But, sweet, in your eyes, may be."

—Earle Marble in Appleton's Journal.

A WEDDING IN WYOMING.

Camping near the town, we secured our stock and then went in. Entering the leading store, I introduced myself to Mr. Stiles, who was one of the proprietors, and the postmaster.

"It is now half past 2, and at 3 there's to be a wedding down the street at Jonas Barton's. Old Jonas is a rough old coon that we elected justice of the peace about a month ago, and as this will be his first attempt at a marriage, I think we will see some fine fun. Come and go down with me."

We went to the old 'Squire's cabin. We found him poring over a large volume of the statutes of Wyoming, sweating like a horse and looking terribly anxious. After greeting us he said:

"Stiles, the durned galoots that got up these 'yer laws hadn't gumption enough to last them over night. I've run through the blamed book a dozen times, an' can't find a dod blasted word about matermony, or how the hitching process is proceeded with. I've just got ter put the clamps on this couple hit or miss, an' ef I don't yoke 'em up legal I can't help it."

"Oh!" said Stiles, "just do the best you can. Any kind of a ceremony will do in this country, for the people'll never question the legality of the thing; I'll post you as well as I can."

Stiles then explained to him about how he should act, and the old man finally thought he could worry through in tolerable shape. Ere long the couple appeared, followed by a crowd of the citizens of the camp. The candidates stood up before the 'Squire, who began:

"Feller citizens, this 'yar man an' this 'yar woman have appeared before the court to be hitched in the legal bands of wedlock. If any galoot in the mob knows of anything that might block the game ef tuk to a higher court, let him now toot his bazoo, or else keep his jaw to himself now and forevermore. All them who is in favor of me perceedin' as orthorized by the law will say 'I.'"

Everybody said "I."

"Contrary, 'no.'"

Nobody said "no."

"The motion's carried unan'mously an' the Court rules that thar hain't nuthin' to prevent the tryin' of this 'yar case. Grip yer fins."

The candidates joined hands.

"Amos Peabody, do you solemnly swa'ar thet ye'll love 'er, an' pervide fur 'er, an' treat 'er squar an' white, accordin' to the rules and regulations sot down to govern such cases in the laws o'the United States, so help yer God?"

"Yaas, sir; I do, sir."

"That fixes your end o' the bargain; 'Mandy Thomas, do you solemnly swa'ar that ye'll hang on to Amos for all comin' time, that ye'll always be to him a good, true, honest, up-an'-up wife under the penalties prescribed by the law for the punishment of sich offences; do you swa'ar this, so help yer God?"

"I swa'ar I will."

"Then by the power in me vested as justice o' peace, in an' fur this precinct, I pronounce you, Amos Peabody, husband, an' you, 'Mandy Thomas, wife, and legalize ye to remain as such, now an' forevermore, an' ye'll stand committed till the fees and costs in the case be paid in full, an' may God hev mercy on your souls, an' bless this union with his heftiest blessin's."

The fees and costs were adjusted, and after receiving the congratulations of the assembly, the newly-made husband and wife immediately departed for their cabin up the creek.—Oil City Derrick.

POTTED EARTH.—The best kind of earth to use is the surface soil, containing the spongy mass of surface roots, from a wood, the first two inches of an old pasture field, the turfy, spongy mass called peat, from sandy bogs or swamps, a little well-decayed hot-bed manure, and some sharp sand. These are now about the only "elements" that the most skilful gardener cares to have beside him, and many a good gardener has to find himself minus some of these and be satisfied. The soil for potting should be used rather dry; that is, be in such a condition that it will rather crumble when pressed than adhere closer together. Large pots—those over four inches—should have drainage. This is made by breaking up broken pots to the size of beans, putting them in the bottom a quarter or half an inch deep, and putting about an eighth of an inch of old moss or other similar rough material over the mass of "crocks" to keep out the earth from among it.

THE LEFT HAND.—Beyond being taught to keep the left hand clean in common with the right, and for boys not to thrust it into the pocket, children receive little instruction as to using this member of the body. Yet it can, and ought to be made as skillful as the right hand. We have seen a surgeon transfer an instrument from one hand to another during an operation with perfect ease, and Nast is said to draw equally well with both hands. Occasionally there is an "even-handed" carpenter, who can use two different tools at the same time. Children should practice doing things with both hands. They might as well hop about on the right foot only, or close the left ear with cotton, as to make the left hand almost useless by lack of training.

Mrs. Spriggins was boasting of her new house. The windows, she said, were all stained. "That's too bad! But won't turpentine or benzine wash it off?" asked the good Mrs. Oldbody.

It is best not to dispute where there is no probability of convincing.

THAT "PRINCE OF WHALES."

The editor of the Lyndon (Vt.) Union has been taking a run out West, and in a letter to his paper under date of Oct. 10th he says: Geo. H. Newton, of Monson, Mass., was on the train from Chicago to Davenport, and inasmuch as you do not know George, dear reader, I will give you a brief sketch as he gave it to me. George is an insurance agent, but, not accumulating scrip as fast as he wanted to, he conceived the idea a year ago last winter of catching a whale and outdoing Barnum in the show business. But how to do it was a conundrum. He consulted sea captains at various points, but got the uniform answer, "Impossible." They could not see how a great whale could be caught several hundred miles out in the sea, towed to the shore, raised out of the water and placed upon cars for transportation. But George had got crazy on the subject, and wouldn't let up. After spending several hundred dollars in running about and getting refused, he at last, by giving bonds to indemnify against loss, found a captain willing to undertake the job for a good consideration. The result was that last November the monster was towed in to Provincetown, thence to Boston, where Newton hired four derricks and a gang of men, and, after days of uproar and confusion got the leviathan out of the sea upon two large flat cars, where he was frozen up, when George started with his pickerel for the Chicago exposition. But his calculations were hardly sufficient for the immense weight. The car wheels burned off and broke down, and other calculations were short of meeting the emergency. It was a whaling big fish—bigger than George had any idea of. But his courage was equal to the task. He got more wheels made, had a car constructed for the purpose and, at last, that old sucker, as large and as natural as life, was on exhibition at the Chicago exhibition. At that time that perch had cost Newton $12,000, and he hadn't much more money to spend. As a financial venture it was sink or swim. But the leviathan drew a crowd. Everybody wanted to see a whale for a quarter of a dollar. From that day to this, except when the old pumpkin seed was hauled up for repairs, such as punching arsenic into him to keep his blubber from spoiling, Newton has been making change as fast as he could do it in all the large cities visited, never stopping at a town of less than 20,000 people. He has taken as high as $1500 in a single day. Well, his net profit from that enterprise since last November has been over $40,000. Now, reader, if you are impatient and can't wait for wealth as a result of industry and moderate accumulations, why, go down to the sea, catch a whale and start with him. "There's millions in it," and no mistake. Newton's shiner is 60 feet long and weighs 80,000 pounds—forty tons.

ANYTHING RIGHT IN POLITICS.

Public men, to a large extent, are injured in their consciences because they hold anything is right in politics—that is to say, that anything is right in patriotism; for what are politics but the question of magistracy, of public policy or of administration? What is there on earth, this side of heaven, that ought to be more honorable and sacred than the service of the commonwealth? What is there on earth that ought to inspire young men more with a sense of sanctity, of fidelity and purity than the service of their fellow-men in such a land as this? And yet, when you look at the politics which prevail, at the conscience which exists in the administration of the government, at the amount of falsehood and chicanery which is mixed up with public affairs, and at the corruption which is to be found among our statesmen, it seems as if the foundations of morality were shaken that these gamblers in politics might be able to carry their measures. With them it is disgraceful to fail. Failure is their sin and success is their virtue, to a very large extent. When men go into politics it does not make very much difference whether they have been hardened or not; they are in great danger of losing their personal consciences, and of being impressed with the notion that that is fair and right in politics which contravenes the law of private morality. So we see men that in politics are jugglers, connivers, deceivers and bribers, corrupt and corrupting, but that at home live estimable and pure lives.

You say, "Can these two things exist in the same person?" Yes, they can in a degree. A man cannot be corrupt at the foundation of morals in public life and be virtuous in private life, but a man may have two or three consciences; he may have one for public life, another for business life, and another for private life. Thousands of men have no consciences at all on the subject of society life. They are amiable people, they are expert in the use of flattery, they indulge in sweet lies, all sorts of slanders, and whatever will make them popular. —Beecher.

Frank and Willie were discussing which were the most economical, men or women, and Frank seemed to be getting the best of the argument, when Willie suddenly brought the debate to a close by saying: "One thing I know; my father can make a piece of butter go over more'n twice as large a piece of bread for me as mother can."

A bore once said to Jerrold, in a company which was discussing the merits of a certain piece of music, "That song, sir, always carries me away." The wit quietly turned to his friends, and asked, "Will some one kindly sing it?"

What men want is not talent, it is purpose; in other words, not the power to achieve, but will to labor. I believe that labor, judiciously and continuously applied, becomes genius. —Lytton.

"If you don't stop your coughing, sir," said a testy judge, "I'll fine you £100." "I'll give you £200 if you can stop it for me," replied the witty counsel.

The American Cultivator says the farmer that "ran rapidly through his property" wore a red shirt and had a brindled bull behind him.

It's a good proverb, God keep me from him whom I trust, for from him that I trust not I shall keep myself.

Poverty often deprives a man of all spirit and virtue. It is hard for an empty bag to stand upright.

Some niggers' honesty is reggerlated mos'ly by de spunk of de yard dorg.—Uncle Mose.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1881.

THURSDAY, the 24th inst, is made a day of national thanksgiving, by the appointment of President Arthur.

DAKOTA will shortly be knocking for admission into the sisterhood of States. The census gave her a population of 130,000, and she claims about 170,000 now, and thinks herself about big enough to assume Stately honors.

GOV. LONG drops into poetry and Scripture in an entirely original and unusual manner, in his thanksgiving proclamation. It reads well, and some other Governors would get up more readable State papers if they would use Gov. Long's scissors. As for our Governor, he is quite capable of saying a thing in good shape in his own words, when he chooses.

THE government has been defeated in its first attack on the star route ring, Judge Cox deciding at Washington, Thursday, that the attempt to try them by information, instead of bringing them before the grand jury, is unconstitutional. This is an unfortunate beginning, but it is said that the prosecution will not stop, but will now seek indictments.

THE Legislature met in extra session at Boston on Wednesday, and received a broad hint from Gov. Long that they ought to get through and go home in a few days. They won't, though, having adopted the recommendation of the revision committee, that each branch shall act upon each chapter of the revised statutes separately. This will probably keep them in session for two or three weeks, at least.

GEN. SHERMAN wants the regular army increased one-fifth, and thinks this could be done without adding anything to the annual cost of the army, as the increase would save the present frequent necessity of transporting reinforcements long distances, at a heavy cost for transportation. Congress will very likely act favorably upon his request, if the Democrats have sufficiently recovered from their old-time fear of the army.

THE Massachusetts Democrats had some hopes of catching the Republican weasel asleep on Tuesday, and a confidential circular was sent to some of the faithful from their headquarters, urging them to get out every voter, and carry off the prize. The contents of the circular leaked out, however, and the Republicans were not caught, though they might have been had Butler's 110,000 come to time. But there was apathy in the Democratic camp, as well as in the Republican. Next year promises to tell a different story in this respect, and the Democrats are already planning for an aggressive campaign.

ATTORNEY GENERAL MACVEAGH'S reputation is suffering considerably from recent developments in regard to his connection, or lack of connection, with the star route cases, as well as with Guiteau's trial. It is stated that MacVeagh said at a cabinet meeting that he did not consider that he had anything to do with Guiteau's case, but President Arthur was pretty emphatic in telling him that it was his highest duty to look after the case, as really a State trial. Hence MacVeagh's sudden retirement from the cabinet. It also appears that the necessity of proceeding against the star route conspirators by information instead of by indictment is due to his neglect. MacVeagh has been sharply criticized for leaving the cabinet with these cases pending, and the more that is learned of their history the worse it looks for him. There is a plain call for him to make an explanation, if he would save his reputation.

A fire at Hoboken, N. J., Sunday afternoon, destroyed a dock which cost $200,000, besides two cargoes of merchandise and several barges and lighters. The fire department would not turn out, on account of some trouble with the city authorities, only one of seven engines responding to the alarm. That department ought to be fed on bread and water for some time to come.

Charles Madden, a divinity student, shot and killed Miss Phœbe Bernard at Tiffin, O., last week Thursday night, because she refused to marry him. A mob attempted to take him from jail early Monday morning, but for once Judge Lynch was thwarted, the officers repelling the mob after a lively riot. Madden's friends say he is insane.

Commissioner Dudley wants an appropriation of $100,000,000 from Congress for disbursement by the pension office during the next fiscal year, as well as a deficiency appropriation of $20,000,000 for arrears of pensions. After all the arrearages are paid up, he estimates that the annual pension roll will not exceed $40,000,000.

The whaling schooner Delia Hodgkins, of New London, was capsized in a squall last week Friday night off Nantucket Shoals, and sunk. The crew escaped in a boat, but five of them perished from exhaustion, the others being picked up on Saturday.

Mrs. Garfield has written a letter to Cyrus W. Field, Esq., gratefully acknowledging the generous contributions of the people to the fund for the support of herself and children.

Baldwin, the defaulting cashier of the Mechanics' National Bank of Newark, N. J., has been released on $100,000 bail. Murchbank, the defaulting clerk, is out on $10,000 bail.

Westfield has a case of small-pox, Fred H. Gillett, late assistant attorney general of this State, returning from Boston last Saturday night suffering from the disease.

The Texas State House at Austin was destroyed by fire Wednesday; loss about $220,000.

THE ELECTION.

A VERY SMALL VOTE, BUT THE RESULT ALL RIGHT.

Massachusetts Republican as Usual.

The prevailing political apathy and the unfavorable weather combined to bring out a remarkably small vote in Tuesday's election in this State, but Democrats as well as Republicans seem to have staid away from the polls, and the Republican ticket was elected by a handsome majority. The total vote this year was only 156,696, against 282,346 in 1880, 243,642 in 1879, 256,332 in 1878, 184,454 in 1877, and 256,904 in 1876.

The main interest of the day centered in the election of senators and representatives, and the contest was pretty close in many districts. In Springfield the people evidently considered the Democratic candidates for the House better fitted for legislative duties than the Republican nominees, and four of the five representatives from that city are Democrats. Franklin county, a Republican stronghold, also sends a Democrat to the Senate. The Senate will stand, 37 Republicans and 3 Democrats; the House, 176 Republicans, 56 Democrats, 5 Independents, 3 unknown.

The amendment to the constitution allowing war veterans to vote, even if paupers, was adopted by a light vote.

IN OTHER STATES.

Connecticut elected 14 senators, 10 of them Republican, and a full House, which will have a Republican majority of 50, a reduction of 34 from the present majority.

New York was carried by the Republicans on the State ticket. Astor, the rich young Republican candidate for Congress in New York city, where he used money lavishly, was defeated by Flower, making a Democratic gain of a Congressman. The Democrats will also have a small majority in both branches of the Legislature.

Pennsylvania elected a Republican State treasurer by a small majority. In Virginia the Readjusters were victorious. Maryland and Mississippi were carried by the Democrats, and New Jersey, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Nebraska by the Republicans.

LOCAL NOTICES.

J. F. Holbrook will pay $50, and no questions asked, for the return of his pocket book, with contents, lost on Main street Friday evening, Nov. 4.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Charming Autumn weather, this.

Rev. E. N. Hood of Hingham preaches at the Congregational church to-morrow.

Rev. Mr. Nash, of Maine, will occupy the pulpit at the Universalist church to-morrow.

Some more heavy rains, this week. The springs are now in pretty good shape for the winter.

H. A. Northrop will sell 59 barrels of apples at auction next Wednesday afternoon, at the B. & A. freight house.

The ladies' society of the Congregational church met Thursday afternoon and evening with Dea. Freeman Foster.

There is to be a band concert and ball at the town house Wednesday evening, Nov. 23, under the auspices of the Three Rivers Cornet Band.

A. A. Barker, formerly superintendent of the mills at Three Rivers, has gone to Corinth, Miss., to set up the machinery in a new cotton mill there.

Rev. O. R. Hunt of Springfield will preach to-morrow in the Baptist churches in this place and Three Rivers. The preacher last Sunday was Mr. Smith of Vermont.

Miss J. M. McDonnell has opened millinery rooms at Bondville, in addition to her rooms in this village, and she will be there on Tuesday and Wednesday of each week.

Isn't it about time for the Palmer Republicans to settle down and support their own nominees, when fairly made? This constant bolting will begin to react in an uncomfortable manner by and by.

The Boston & Albany Railroad, with its connecting lines, has contracted to take some 500 soldiers from various points in New England to San Francisco, and bring back about 400 others to fill their places.

The schools in town will close next week Friday for the Thanksgiving vacation, with the exception of those in this village, which will only have a rest of two or three days, on account of the delay in beginning their fall term.

A little fellow in this village was taken to task the other day by his mother for having a big hole in the knee of his stocking, and upon being asked how it came there he promptly answered, "Why, mamma, I did that saying 'Now I lay me.'" He was forgiven.

Rev. S. G. Smith, of Providence, R. I., a former pastor of the Baptist church in this place, from whence he went to Lockport, N. Y., and later to Port Richmond, Staten Island, has received a unanimous call to the pastorate of the Baptist church at Passaic, N. J.

Commander Sloane of Spencer inspected Merrick Post No 107, G. A. R., Wednesday night, at Masonic Hall, and mustered in the officers who had not previously been mustered. The annual election of officers of the Post will occur at the regular meeting in December.

The evening modoc for the west now leaves Palmer at 8.48, instead of 8.58, and arrives at Albany ten minutes earlier than heretofore. The train leaves Boston at 6 o'clock, as before, but makes the run between Worcester and this place in ten minutes less time. The change went into effect Monday.

Our representative, Mr. Peck of Wilbraham, who was elected last year on the regular Republican ticket, has caused a good deal of comment by his course this week, in peddling votes for the bolting candidate for his office. Mr. Peck's views on the question of bolting must have undergone quite a change since his own election.

Hubbard Lawrence is the happy possessor of an apple measuring 14½ inches in circumference, and weighing 1¼ pounds—a pretty fair specimen of fruit for an "off" year. The apple came from Western New York, and Mr. Lawrence—and several other people, too, for that matter—would like to find a few barrels of pie timber just like it.

There is now a mail car on the evening modoc train, and letters for the west may be sent three hours later than heretofore, by mailing on the car. The western mail at the post office is still sent on the 5.52 p. m. train, but orders are expected every day to hold it for the modoc. The mail car on the 5.52 train now goes no further west than Springfield.

Thomas Lodge of Masons re-elected the following officers last Monday evening: George Robinson, W. M; J. B. Shaw, S. W.; H. H. Paine, J.W.; A. H. Willis, Treasurer; C. W. Cross, Secy. The officers will be installed next Monday evening by District Deputy Grand Master A. A. Gage of Monson, who will then make his official visit to the lodge.

J. F. Holbrook had the misfortune last week Friday evening to lose his pocket book, between the express office and post office, containing about $125 in bills, besides other papers. The loss was soon discovered, and diligent search was made for it, but without avail, and it was doubtless picked up by somebody who has forgotten (?) to return it to the owner as yet.

The friends of Mrs. Daniel Frost of Springfield, formerly Miss Esther Merriam of this place, will deeply sympathize with her in the sorrow which has recently come to her. Her husband has had trouble with his head for some time, which has now culminated in insanity, and it has been found necessary to remove him to the asylum at Northampton, it being feared that he would commit suicide.

The house on the Monson road owned and occupied by Misses Eliza and Mary Ward, was burned to the ground, with its contents, Tuesday morning, in the absence of the family. A coal fire was left in the stove over night, with some green wood in the oven to dry, which probably accounts for the fire, though it is also ascribed to incendiaries, and it is said that none of the silver can be found, except the plated ware. There was no insurance.

"Why, there were lots of men there who never go to a caucus," was the indignant comment of a disappointed politician on the result of the Republican caucus last week. The remark was quite true, too. But what is a caucus for, anyway? If it is designed only for the purposes of a chosen few, invitations should be sent around privately, without any public notice of the gathering. A largely attended caucus is quite apt to upset any nicely-laid plans which have been made for its management.

At a session of the probate court held in Springfield Monday, administration was granted on the estate of Fanny Hancock of Wilbraham, A. J. Blanchard administrator. The will of Alvin Hastings of Palmer was approved, Mary A. Hastings executrix. Accounts were filed on the estates of Emma G. Stebbins of Ludlow, and Lydia E. and Mary F. Wyles of Brimfield. Daniel W. Palmer and wife, of Palmer, were authorized to adopt Georgia Fuller, late of West Springfield, and change her name to Lena Grace Palmer. An adjourned session of the court will be held today.

Palmer could not get along without its customary bolt, this year, and the friends of Lawyer Taft, who thought the representative nomination belonged to him as a matter of courtesy, he having been defeated two years ago as the regular Republican candidate, by a bolt, induced him to run this time as an independent candidate, with the support of the Democrats, who refrained from nominating any candidate, with the tacit understanding that they would vote for Mr. Taft. Bolts are not always successful, however, even in Palmer, and although Mr. Taft received quite a number of Republican votes, he did not get enough to elect him.

There were 416 votes cast in Palmer Tuesday, against 701 polled last year. The rain kept many voters away from the polls, and those who did go did not tarry long, so that the town house presented rather a deserted appearance most of the time. But little interest was manifested in the constitutional amendment, and only 47 votes were cast upon the question of its adoption, all but 2 of them being in the affirmative. The new law against smoking at the polls was enforced, somewhat to the discomfort of those who have been in the habit of smoking steadily on such occasions, but the air in the room was decidedly the better for it, and it is generally agreed that the law is an excellent one.

Daniel Griffin of Norwich tried to get through on the cars to this place last Saturday evening on two tickets, with his wife and six children, refusing to pay any extra fare. He was accordingly turned over to Sheriff Palmer when the train reached here, but his wife then relented and proposed to pay. While getting out her money Griffin drew off and struck the officer a sharp blow, with the result of getting himself into the lock-up. His wife set up a terrible howling at this turn of affairs, and was only quieted by a threat to put her behind the bars. She went on to Springfield with her children, and came back Monday morning for her husband, paying $13.30 for his little frolic.

Wm. Royce of West Brookfield came down to Palmer the other day to go to work on the water works, but he ran afoul of the wrong kind of water in one of our fire-water establishments, and brought up in the lock-up. On Wednesday he paid the court $5.65 and then returned home, a wiser man, it is hoped. Hiram Rider and the wife of Wm. H. H. Rider were before the court the same day for adultery, being found in Somers, Ct., where they had been living together for some time, and they were sent up in default of $500 bonds each, to await trial at the December term of court. Henry Sparrow was sent to jail yesterday morning by the court, for want of the $8.65 charged him for drunkenness.

Spaulding's well-known and always popular troupe of Swiss Bell Ringers will appear at Wales Hall next Monday evening in one of their charming musical entertainments. The Spauldings always draw full houses, delighting all who hear them, and lovers of good music and first-class entertainments will make it a point to be present at their performance. The troupe now consists of Georgie Dean Spaulding, the accomplished harp and cornet soloist; Maud Stanley, the excellent songstress; Rosalie M. Lucier, ocarina and cornet soloist; Esther R. Stratton, elocutionist and staff bell player; The Werners, Maud and Edward, who will appear in their new society domestic and flirtation sketches; W. P. Spaulding, harpist and expert Swiss bell player; J. F. Holmes violinist; Frank Johnson, pianist and organist. For further particulars see their advertisement.

BRIMFIELD.

N. S. Hubbard and wife have returned from their European trip.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

A. B. Hill, brakeman on the Springfield local freight, had his hand badly smashed at this station the other day.

LUDLOW.

Rev. Mr. Coyle of New York has been engaged to preach at the Union church at Jenksville through the Winter.

The school in district No. 8 closed last week Friday. The following scholars were not absent nor tardy, and were perfect in deportment: Dora Stewart, Jennie King, Lillie Graves, Edith Alden, Jessie King, Walter Alden and Frank Stewart. Perfect in deportment, Ada Alden and Charlie Allen.

WALES.

Hunters report squirrels very plenty, and one man tells a large squirrel story.

Wells and cisterns are greatly benefited by the recent rain.

F. E. Sibley has recovered somewhat from a very severe attack of ulcerated sore throat.

The high prices of grain and hay have compelled milk peddlers to advance the price of milk to 6 cents.

Samson Hulett, while at work on telegraph poles Wednesday, cut his knee very badly, which will probably induce him to remain quiet for a few days.

W. Royce, proprietor of Wales hotel, is building a large hall building adjoining his hotel, and it is supposed he will dedicate it with a ball at Thanksgiving.

Some painters working on F. C. Smith's barn were assaulted with clubs by six roughs, supposed to be intoxicated, last Saturday. While warrants were being made they left town, but the warrants await their return.

Less than one-half of the voters turned out on Tuesday, but enough Republicans were out to give their representative a good majority. Whale oil did not seem to be sufficiently waterproof to warrant the attendance of many Democrats in the rain.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

There have been several changes among the help at the paper mill, under the new administration, and more may be expected.

Miss M. Adell Pease, who has been in charge of the primary school here for the past two years, has sent in her resignation to the committee. She greatly needs rest, and will not teach this winter.

E. B. Gates & Co. have telephonic connections with Springfield, Holyoke, Palmer, Warren, West Brookfield and Worcester, and any one desiring to avail themselves of the privilege can use the wire for a small consideration.

A number of the employes of the paper mill surprised Ex-Supt. Wilson at his house a week ago, and presented him with an elegant gold chain. After exchanging words of good cheer and enjoying some music the company dispersed.

Messrs. Houghton and Spencer, with their families, from Mittineague, were in town last Sunday. Their presence at Grace chapel was greatly enjoyed, as they always showed the strongest interest in the welfare of the society while residing here, and Mr. Spencer was one of the active members in organizing and sustaining it through its infancy.

WARREN.

The town voted on Tuesday to open two new streets.

The skating rink is soon to have a new hard pine floor.

The schools have but two days' vacation at Thanksgiving time.

Spaulding's Bell Ringers exhibit at the town hall this evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Moss celebrated their tin wedding Tuesday evening.

The Glee Club had a meeting with Charles Converse Wednesday evening.

Rev. Mr. Davies preached for Rev. Mr. Forbes, morning and evening, last Sabbath.

Mr. and Mrs. Whitney had a pleasant surprise from their friends Wednesday evening.

Rev. Mr. Sanderson will preach the Thanksgiving sermon at the Congregational church.

The teachers held their monthly meeting Tuesday evening, the subject of arithmetic being discussed.

Representative Gilbert returned from his western trip Monday night, and left for Boston Wednesday morning.

Three men were nearly buried alive near the new shoddy mill Monday, by the caving of the bank where they were at work.

The new school house on Maple street will be completed in time for the Winter school. Miss Carrie Green is engaged as teacher.

Presiding Elder D. H. Ela will preach at Brigham's Hall Sunday. At the close the regular quarterly conference will be held.

Capt. John G. B. D. Adams gave the fourth lecture Monday evening, and at the close a camp fire was held at the headquarters of the post. The next lecture will be Monday evening, by A. A. Wright. Subject, "Wise and Otherwise."

THORNDIKE.

Harry Bishop has been enlarging his house by the addition of an L.

D. B. Bishop is putting up coal sheds and otherwise improving the most unsightly spot in the village.

A gang of workmen are laying a very solid foundation for the new cotton house, which is to be speedily erected.

A large two-tenement house has been commenced at the west end of Church street. It is designed for overseers.

A Sunday school temperance concert will be held at the Congregational church Sunday evening, at seven o'clock.

The ladies of the Methodist church invite all to come to Murdock's Hall on Wednesday evening next, and partake of an oyster supper.

The different departments of the village school were photographed by Ruggles Brothers of Three Rivers the other day, with very good results.

The preaching service at the Congregational church will begin to-morrow at 1 p. m., for the coming season. The hour is changed from 10.45 a. m.

The new building recently erected near the "half-way house" will be used as a boarding house, and will be ready for occupancy as soon as the new mill is started.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Smith celebrated the tenth anniversary of their wedding Wednesday, Nov. 2d, by a large gathering of friends and relatives. Supper was served at 7 p. m. The whole entertainment deserves the name of reception, and is the first of the season.

Miss Alice E. Carter of Nashville, Tenn., is expected to address the ladies of the Congregational society at the vestry next Monday evening, at 7 o'clock. Miss Carter is an interesting speaker, and comes under the auspices of the Woman's H. M. A. of Boston. The ladies of the town are cordially invited.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. Charles H. Ricketts of Thorndike will preach in the Union church to-morrow.

The ladies of this village have shipped five barrels and one case of clothing, bedding, etc., and about $10 in money, to the Michigan sufferers during the present week.

The Three Rivers Cornet Band gave a pleasant out-door concert on the common last Saturday evening, appearing in their new uniforms for the first time, and making a fine appearance.

Efforts are being made to arrange a course of six lectures to be given in this village during the winter, with Wendell Philips and Gen. John L. Swift among the lecturers. Quite a number of tickets have already been sold.

The Young Men's Christian Association have just opened a pleasant reading room adjoining their other rooms. Agent Baker of the Otis Co. generously offered to give a dollar for every dollar contributed for this purpose, and the result was a purse of $200, which has been used in carpeting the room and furnishing it with a good supply of newspapers, magazines, etc. The room is well patronized, and promises to be a great benefit as well as a convenience to the citizens.

Rev. Charles R. Dudley, having accepted a call to become pastor of the Free Baptist church in Great Falls, N. H., closed his labors with the Union Evangelical church in this village last Sunday. Mr. Dudley came here last January, and was installed pastor of the church in April, and his pastorate, though brief, has been very successful, twenty-three persons having united with the church since May 1st, while the congregation and Sunday school were never larger than at present. Mr. Dudley does not go away on account of any lack of unanimity in the church or congregation, but because he believes that in the field now opened to him there is greater opportunity for doing good. His decision to go is regretted very much, not only by the church, but by the people of the village generally.

MONSON.

Cold day for Monson's candidates last Tuesday.

Some of our sidewalks have lately received needed repairs.

First ball of the season last night (Friday) at Central Hall.

Three new street lamps—and yet there is more light needed.

Spaulding's popular Bell Ringers at Central Hall next Tuesday evening.

The straw works are calling in their hands, with prospects of a vigorous season's work.

The full returns from this representative district were bulletined at the post office at 4.30 p. m. Tuesday.

Rev. Mr. Byington's address at the Garfield memorial service has been printed in pamphlet form, and may be procured at the drug stores.

A. D. Norcross receives subscriptions for all the popular magazines and newspapers, including our JOURNAL. Subscriptions received at any time.

James Wilie, the champion checker player of the world, now on his second visit to this country, would like to meet the Monson players, if proper arrangements can be made. What say you, gentlemen?

There lives in Monson a man who has attended the Congregational church every Sabbath but two during the past 21 years. Upon one occasion he was sick and unable to attend, and on the other was absent from town.

The voters of Monson considerately elected Geo. H. Newton, the Independent candidate, to stay at home. He has been absent from town nearly a year, and the idea of his again leaving our midst didn't take favorably, especially with the straight Republicans.

The matter of the new roads was presented to the town meeting Tuesday, and the report of the selectmen on both accepted. The selectmen were authorized to build the roads, and soon new building lots will be offered for sale on the new streets. The matter of abatement of taxes was left with the assessors.

WARE AND VICINITY.

There were 14 additions to the Methodist church last Sunday, 8 by profession and 6 by letter. There were also several who joined on probation.

Samuel Morse has sold the land between the Warren and Brookfield roads, some 27 acres, to Wm. C. Marsh.

The smallest vote was polled in Ware on Tuesday that has been for many years, only 407 votes being cast, against 623 last year. The vote for Governor stood: Long, 240; Thompson, 165. The vote for representative was: J. M. Crosby of Enfield, 204; C. E. Stevens, 193; Goodale, 5; Ramsdell, 4.

Our former townsman, H. M. Coney, was defeated in the election at Springfield, but as he has spent most of the present year at Boston, first in the regular session of the Legislature, then in the "Little Legislature" to revise the statutes, and now in the extra session, perhaps he will feel satisfied for the present.

Silas Sherman and John Brunnell were arrested on Friday morning of last week on the charge of larceny from the store of John Harvey of Gilbertville. Being in Worcester county, the case was carried to Brookfield on Saturday by State Detective Kellogg, where they were bound over in $3000 bonds each to appear this week Saturday, and in default of bail were taken to Worcester jail.

Washington Council of Masons have elected the following officers for the ensuing year: C. F. Merrill, T. I. M.; E. R. Foster, D. M.; E. H. Vaughan, P. C. of W.; Joseph A. Naylor, Treasurer; A. Warburton, Recorder; W. H. Morgan, C. of G.; T. J. Rennison, C. of C.; John W. Robinson, M. of C.; John H. Chaffee, S.; William Kennedy, Chaplain; Lyman Taylor, Sentinel.

The first of the course of entertainments to be given under the auspices of the Young Men's Library Association will be an illustrated lecture next week Friday evening, by Rev. Henry G. Spaulding. Subject, "Rome: its Catacombs and Churches." It is the aim of the managers to have a first-class course at the low price of 25 cents for admission, including reserved seats. As it would be impossible to do this without loss, they have placed the price of 80 seats at 50 cents each, expecting that those who are able and willing to aid, will take these seats, not that they are better than any others, but to make the course a self-supporting one.

Books added to the library during the past month: "Civil War in America," Lossing; "Cassell's Illustrated History of India;" "Seven Years in South Africa," by Emil Holub; "Muspratt's Chemistry;" Lives of Lafayette, Marco Polo, Walter Savage Landor, Governor Andrew, Madame De Sevigne; "Great Explorers of the 19th Century," Jules Verne; "Three Years in Arizona and New Mexico," Cozzens; "Yorktown Campaign," H. P. Johnston; "History of Switzerland," by Mackenzie; "History of Boston," by Butterworth; "History of America," by Butterworth; Dictionaries of the French, German, Latin and Greek Languages; "Smith's Classical Dictionary." Among the recent fiction: "Cape Cod Folks;" "Without a Home;" "That Beautiful Wretch;" "Warlock O' Glenwarlock;" "Gentleman of Leisure;" "Letter of Credit;" "Somebody's Neighbors;" "Toby Tyler."

Remember that you can get black walnut chamber sets at Metcalf & Luther's, Springfield, as low as anywhere.

The patrons of the Opera House Clothing Co. will be pleased to know that Mr. S. C. Downs has taken the management of the Opera House Clothing Co., Springfield, again.

"The Three Clothiers," of Springfield, Foster, Babbitt & Chapin, offer in another column some very great bargains in clothing. Our readers will wish to see their fine overcoats and children's clothing.

Morse, of the "Central Shoe Store," Springfield, has made another "ten strike." This time a carload of Arctics, with a lot of men's first quality Woonsocket pure gum boots at $2.75, and the genuine "Wales" buckle Arctics at $1.50. Morse is "scooping in" the country trade "like sixty."

It does not make any difference how severe the case of bilious derangement is, Simmons Liver Regulator will cure it speedily and effectually without salivation, or that prostration of the system ensuing from the use of drastic purgatives.

As there are many spurious imitations of this valuable medicine, take care you get the genuine.

"We have been selling your medicine for some time, and we find it better adapted to the cure of bilious attacks than any other medicine we have ever used or sold. J. M. BEASLEY & Co., Magnolia, Ark."

Faded or gray hair gradually recovers its youthful color and luster by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume. n

CATARRH is a poisonous infection of the mucous membrane, just as small-pox is a virus of the blood. Catarrhal virus can only be reached and exterminated by antidotal, inoculative elements, that are obsorbed by the purulent mucous. DR. WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE is unquestionably the most important medical discovery since vaccination. It never fails. Supplied by druggists, or delivered by D. B. Dewey & Co., 46 Dey St., New York, at $1 a package. Pamphlets, with full instructions, mailed free. n

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. In ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

Life.

We are born; we laugh; we weep;
We love; we droop; we die!
Ah, wherefore do we laugh or weep?
Why do we live or die?
Who knows that secret deep?
Alas, not I!

Why doth the violet spring
Unseen by human eye?
Why do the radiant seasons bring
Sweet thoughts that quickly fly?
Why do our fond hearts cling
To things that die?

We toil—through pain and wrong;
We fight—and fly;
We love; we lose; and then, ere long,
Stone-dead we lie.
O Life! is all thy song
"Endure and—die?"

LIFE MISTAKES.

In our large cities there are thousands of unmarried men who have no home-life, and who think it beyond their reach. Their evenings are long, tedious and dull, and they go to much expense to get relief. They buy tobacco; they pay for stimulants; they patronize places of amusement; they keep up forms of society that cost them something; in their own way, they entertain; and they would confess, in moments of frankness, that they are not happy, after all. After a little, the commoner forms of enjoyment become insipid, and they have to go farther; and, in a certain proportion of cases, before they think they can afford home-life they are unfitted for its enjoyment. They are prematurely old, dilapidated in feeling, bankrupt in affection, incapable of adaptation to new and gentler ways, "rakes"—more or less penitent, but condemned to miss the sweetness and aroma of life, however favorable their circumstances may become. They did not know that with right ideas of life it would have been easier and cheaper for them to have married fitting wives; that they wasted on dissipation as much as would have kept up a neat little home. Nor is the stronger sex the only blunderer on this side of life. There are thousands of women who have no idea that life may be worth living even if divested of the luxuries and pleasures which they have either enjoyed or dreamed of. Honest affection, unless backed by wealth, is spurned, and too often wealth, where the affection is little rated, and indeed, sometimes of little worth, is reason enough for a woman to promise love, honor and obedience for life. Poor thing! She makes a great mistake; and soon the disenchantment is complete. She finds that marriage without love is a mockery, and that her life would have been glorified by the affection of a good man who, if poor, had won her heart.

SELF-CONTROL.—In some people passion and emotion are never checked, but are allowed to burst out in a blaze whenever they come. Others suppress them by main force, and preserve a callous exterior when there are raging fires within. Others are never excited over anything. Some govern themselves on some subjects, but not on others. Very much can be done by culture to give the will entire control over the feelings. One of the best means of culture is the persistent withdrawing of the mind from the subject which produces the emotion, and in concentrating it elsewhere. The man or woman who persistently permits their mind to dwell on disagreeable themes only spites himself or herself. Children, of course, have less control, and parents and teachers must help them to turn their attention from that which excites them to something else; but adults, when they act like children, ought to be ashamed of themselves. The value of self-control as a hygienic agent is very great. It helps to give one a mastery over pain and distress, rather than it a mastery over us.

"Say, I'll tell you something if you won't blow it," was the way one man saluted another the other day. "All right—go ahead." "You won't give it away until I say so?" "Not a word." "Well, my wife has got to be an æsthetic." "No?" "Sure's you're born. I have suspected she was working that way for some time past, but it's only within a day or two that I became positive." "Well, that's wonderful. Say, how does she act?" "Languid—very languid. She lops around, drawls her words, writes sad poetry, and the sight of an old pie tin or a banged-up chromo entrances her. Congratulate me on my luck." "I do—I do. That is—" "What?" "Don't build hopes too fast. Be sure you're right, then go ahead. I labored a whole year under the delusion that my wife was developing as an æsthetic, and when I came to talk with her father, he said she was always more than half-idiot by nature. Go slow—go slow. The difference between an æsthetic and a fool is so mighty small that you can't afford to make a mistake and be placed in a box."

GAVE HIMSELF AWAY.—A Maine paper tells how an Augusta man "gave himself away" the worst kind in Boston the other day. He went to that city on business, and put up at one of the first-class hotels. The clerk gave his baggage and the key of his room to a porter, who conducted the Augusta gentleman to the elevator. Closing the door they began to ascend, unperceived by the traveler. He eyed the four walls of the elevator a moment and exclaimed: "Take my baggage back to the office; you can't put me off in a little room like this!"

"Indian Department," Washington, D. C.
I am anxious to introduce Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup among my Indians, having used it myself for several months, and think it one of the fines, remedies I ever found. I assure you, it is the only thing that ever relieved me of a protracted cough brought on by exposure while on the Sioux Commission last year. A. G. BOONE,
Agent for Poncas and U. S. Commissioner.

There is more strength-restoring power in a fifty-cent bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column. n

An Interesting Account!

STONE IN THE BLADDER EXPELLED BY USING DR. KENNEDY'S "FAVORITE REMEDY."

Mr. S. W. Hicks, of Pleasant Valley, Dutchess Co., N. Y., the son of Mr. E. S. Hicks, whose name may have appeared in this journal in connection with an article similar to this, was, like his father, afflicted with Stone in the Bladder, only that his case was more serious than his father's. On the appearance of the disease the father advised the son to write to Dr. David Kennedy of Rondout, N. Y., who, he said, would tell him what to do. Dr. Kennedy replied, suggesting the use of "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy," which had worked so successfully in the father's case. Mr. Hicks, who had been assured by the local physicians that they could do nothing more for him, tried "Favorite Remedy" at a venture. After two weeks' use of it he passed a stone ¾ of an inch long and of the thickness of a pipe-stem. Since then he has had no symptoms of the return of the trouble. Here is a sick man healed. What better results could have been expected? What greater benefit could medical science confer? The end was gained; that is surely enough. Dr. Kennedy assures the public, by a reputation which he cannot afford to forfeit or imperil, that the "Favorite Remedy" does invigorate the blood, cures liver, kidney and bladder complaints, as well as all those diseases and instances peculiar to females. "Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy" for sale by all druggists.

CARTER'S
IRON PILLS
—FOR THE—
BLOOD, NERVES AND COMPLEXION.

We recommend CARTER'S IRON PILLS to every woman who is weak, nervous and discouraged; particularly those who have thin, pale lips, cold hands and feet, and who are without strength or ambition. These Pills quiet the nerves, give strength to the body, induce refreshing sleep, enrich and improve the quality of the blood, and purify and brighten the complexion. They cure palpitation of the heart, nervousness, tremblings, nervous headache, leucorrhœa, pains in the back, and other forms of female weakness. Remember that Iron is one of the constituents of the blood, and is the great tonic. CARTER'S IRON PILLS are also valuable for men who are troubled with nervous weakness, night sweats, &c. In metal boxes, at 50 CENTS. Sold by all druggists, or sent by mail. Address

PROTECTION FROM MALARIA.

So numerous are the developments of Malaria that people continually suffer from this noxious poison when they least imagine it is lurking in their system.

CHILLS AND FEVER, HEADACHE, INTERMITTENT FEVER, GENERAL DEBILITY, BILIOUS FEVER, LASSITUDE, TYPHOID FEVER, NAUSEA, ARE THE

PAINFUL OFFSPRINGS OF MALARIA,

and have their origin in a disordered Liver, which, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and death will ensue.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR
(PURELY VEGETABLE,)

is absolutely certain in its remedial effects and acts more promptly in curing all forms of Malarial diseases than calomel or quinine, without any of the injurious consequences which follow their use. If taken occasionally by persons exposed to Malaria

IT WILL EXPEL THE POISON AND PROTECT THEM FROM ATTACK!

As evidence see extract from W. B. Yates' letter, where the Regulator afforded protection from the worst and most deadly type of Malaria, to wit: Yellow Fever.

"SIRS: I have stood the storm of four epidemics of the Yellow Fever. I had it the first visitation, but during the other three I used your medicine. I was continually in the rooms of the sick and dying, but I escaped. I have had several to ask me how I escaped; I told them it was all owing to the virtue of your Simmons Liver Regulator. If the Fever was to break out again and I had a bottle of your Regulator I would feel as safe as if I was 1000 miles away.
"Memphis, Tenn., April 17, 1879."

Having neutralized the poison of Malaria in such extreme cases, it can be relied on as a sovereign SPECIFIC and ANTIDOTE in milder forms.

Prepared only by J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

GRAEFENBERG

AN ONLY DAUGHTER CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two three-cent stamps to pay expenses. This herb also cures night sweats, Nausea at the Stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race Street, Philadelphia, naming this paper. 4w33

Going Home to Thanksgiving.

THE "INVITATION" ACCEPTED.

"Wife, have you read the paper, the poetry, I mean?
I think that 'invitation' is the best thing I have seen;
Somehow it set me thinking, it seemed like mother's voice,
Bidding us come home, and telling how 'twould make her heart rejoice.

"All day that dear old kitchen has been right before my eyes;
I could see the roasting turkey and the yellow pumpkin pies—
I could hear the children laughing, as they scampered to and fro,
And my mother singing softly, as she used to long ago.

"It must seem lonely there, now all the children are away,
There isn't one that can go home to spend Thanksgiving Day,
Unless—say, wife, don't you suppose we could contrive to go?
I am sure we should enjoy it, and 'twould please the old folks so.

"They're growing old, they've almost reached the foot of life's long hill,
Not many more Thanksgiving days will find them living still—
My business cares have kept me in the city, every year,
But that 'general invitation' seems to make my duty clear.

"We will take the children with us, they have never seen them all,
Why, we've not been home to father's since Jamie was quite small.
Dear, dear! and now there's Benny, and Frank and little Sue—
Grandma will bid them welcome, yes, and baby Katy, too."

* * * * * * *

Around the gray old homestead roars the wild November storm,
But the crops are safely harvested, the house is snug and warm,
The fire burns brightly on the hearth, with drowsy, cheerful tone,
But the old folks' hearts are sad to-night, for they are all alone.

Thankful to God, who blesses them in basket, and in store,
Yet father-heart and mother-love still crave for something more.
The mother's tears are falling fast, for busy thoughts will come—
Thoughts of glad Thanksgivings, when "the children" were at home.

"I think there's some one at the door; who can it be so late?
A dispatch from Cincinnati! something's wrong with Sam, or Kate;
My eyes are dim, you read it—what is that? 'No time to write,
We are coming to Thanksgiving, will be with you Wednesday night.'

"Thanks be to God; our earnest prayers have not been all in vain,
Our eldest, our long-absent son, is coming home again;
Twelve years since we've looked on his face, oh, I shall weep for joy,
This will be indeed 'Thanksgiving,' since it brings us home our boy!"

Monson, Mass. H. F. BLISS.

MY RICH UNCLE FROM CHINA.

A THANKSGIVING STORY.

"My dears," cried Mrs. Chidleigh, hurrying into the morning parlor, where Berenice and I sat, busy over blue and pink tarletan candy-bags, for the charity fair, "I've news for you, the very best of news."

It was the day before Thanksgiving, and the fair was to be held that evening at my aunt's house.

"What is it?" demanded Berenice, scattering her candies. "Has Mr. Everleigh spoken at last?"

My aunt flushed and bit her lip.

"My dear Berenice," she said, "you should not be so outspoken! To hear you, one would fancy you were exceedingly anxious about Mr. Everleigh."

"Well, aren't we?" interrupted Berry, saucily, tossing her blonde hair. "I'm sure we've been expecting him to speak for the last month, and hoping for it, too. Where's the harm in saying what we feel?"

Aunt was silent. I laughed, as I filled a blue bag with pink bon-bons.

"You seem to take it for granted, Berry," I said, "that when Mr. Everleigh does speak, it will be to propose for you. Now, you forget me. Who can tell, which he may choose?"

Berenice curled her red lip.

"He'll not be likely to choose you, Meg, at any rate," she said, with a sneer.

Now, I knew this to be quite true. I was a poor orphan; my father died, penniless, a few years before. We lived in a small cottage, with only four rooms, that had once been the gardener's cottage and which had been granted to us rent free, by Aunt Mary. In fact, we were, more or less, dependents on her bounty. Mother eked out our scanty living by taking in plain sewing, and I earned a little by fine embroidery; but I had not much time of my own for this kind of work, for my aunt was sending for me, continually, to do this and that; and I did not dare to refuse. I was, in short, a kind of maid-of-all-work, up at the "great house," as we called Aunt Mary's residence. Sometimes I thought, with a sigh, of the difference between mamma's lot and Aunt Mary's. Then I remembered that the latter had sold herself for money, marrying an old man, who was twice her age, and both jealous and exacting. Fortunately, he had died, at last. But Aunt Mary had, long since, paid the penalty, by growing harder-hearted and more selfish daily, when my own dear parents, who had married for love, had been supremely happy; at least, while father lived. I was not sure, recalling all this, that, in spite of our privations, we ought to complain. Yet Berenice was correct, of course. What right had I, a dependent, even to think of Mr. Everleigh, who was rich, fashionable, and a favorite everywhere?

But I was human, after all, and this taunt roused me.

"I can't see why he shouldn't marry even me, if he loved me," I retorted. "He's a free agent, at any rate."

Berenice tossed her head, till her ringlets were in a shimmer.

"What a little fool you are," she said, "for goodness' sake hold your tongue. Mamma, love," and she turned her back on me, "don't you mean to tell us your good news?"

"Assuredly, when you are polite enough to hear it. I've been waiting now, some ten minutes. Are you and Meg quite done with your absurd discussion?"

"Quite, mamma! It was Meg who started it; she's always chattering nonsense. But let us hear the news."

Aunt drew a letter from her pocket.

"A letter," cried Berenice; "then it does not concern Mr. Everleigh, after all."

"My dear, no. No one mentioned Mr. Everleigh's name but yourself. I really wish you would try and be a little more guarded. The letter is from your uncle in Shanghai. He is coming home."

Berenice and I gave a simultaneous exclamation. Since the earliest years of our childhood, "our uncle in China" had been the center about which all our romance had revolved.

He was mamma's brother, and Aunt Mary's also. Years before, when I was a mere baby, he had gone abroad, become soldier and sailor by turns, and finally had amassed, we had heard, a great fortune. Once in a long while a battered box that smelled of camphor and foreign spices came over the seas, a reminder that Uncle Hal had not quite forgotten either mamma or Aunt Mary. But generally the gifts were to my aunt. "Those on whom success shines," says the old homily, "are successful in all things."

"When your uncle comes home from China, Berenice dear, we will do thus and so," was always on my aunt's tongue; for rich as she was, at least comparatively, she was always wanting more.

And now he was coming! Berry screamed with delight.

"I shall tell Everleigh," she said, almost instantly, and a little spitefully. "I dare say he'll speak now."

"It doesn't at all matter whether he speaks or not, my daughter," said my aunt, loftily; "when your uncle arrives—and we may look for him any day next week—you will feel, my dear, that your position in life is doubly secured. Even Mr. Everleigh would hardly be a match for you! So now you and Maggie go on with your work. I'm glad our charity fair comes off to-night; we shall be busy hereafter preparing for your uncle. What a pity he couldn't be here for Thanksgiving."

Having said this, my aunt sat down to write out invitations and directions for the charity fair. A devout church member, and something of a philanthropist, was aunt.

"Mamma, mamma, I say," called Jack, Berenice's hopeful brother, a lad some dozen summers old, thrusting his curly head in at the door, "Have you got any stale victuals, or old clothes, or anything to give away?"

My aunt put down her gold pen, and threw back the point-lace lappets of her breakfast-cap, with an air of annoyance. Jack was such a torment!

"Why, Jack!" demanded Berenice.

"'Cause there's a begger out here. He looks awful hungry, and ain't got no overcoat. I say, mamma, can I give him that cold turkey in the larder?"

Mamma leaped to her feet.

"No, I want that turkey to make sandwiches for the fair; don't dare to touch it. Send the beggar away; you know I won't have tramps about the place. Send him away, this minute; and go straight up to the library, and write out your Latin exercises."

Jack turned from the door, a cloud on his sunny face. Looking out of the window, I saw an old man, insufficiently clad. Our big dog Carlo was snarling at his heels. The beggar was so close to the window that he must have heard every word my aunt said, and he looked crestfallen enough in consequence.

"It doesn't seem quite consistent," I remarked, for once letting my indignation get the better of my love of peace, "to have the house about one's ears, getting ready for a charity fair, and a starving beggar walking from the door unfed."

"A thieving tramp," cried my aunt, hotly. "Keep silent, Meg, and don't interfere. It's none of your business, anyhow."

I was prudent enough to make no reply, but my blood boiled, nevertheless. Had I remained much longer, I should have lost my self-control, I fear; so I got up directly, and saying that I had promised to go home soon, left my aunt's.

Our cottage was at the edge of the wood, just outside of the great gates; but the avenue was half a mile long, and before I had reached the gates I had almost overtaken the beggar. He seemed not only old, but feeble, and walked with difficulty; he was probably deaf also, as he did not seem to hear my footsteps. Just outside the gates he met my little sister Kitty, who was returning from the woods, where she had been to pick up sticks for our fire.

"My dear," said the old man, addressing her, "can you tell me where I can get a bit of supper and a night's lodging? I am old and poor, and haven't the money to go to a tavern. You look as if you had a kind heart, God bless it! I've just been turned away from the big house here; but perhaps you are not so hard-hearted as the mistress there."

Kitty's honest little face showed the pity she felt. But she was only a child, and shrank from responsibility.

"I don't know, sir," she said, diffidently. "I think mamma will give you something to eat; and maybe we can find a bed for you; that is, if sister Margaret and I sleep on the settee; for you see our house is small. But, oh, here comes sister herself," she cried, as she discovered me, "and she'll tell you all about it."

My heart was still hot with indignation at the brutality with which my aunt and Berenice had treated the old man, and I hastened to reply, warmly:

"Yes, I will undertake that you shall have supper and a bed, although neither may be as good as what they could have given you up at the great house. But what little we have, you shall share. Stay, let me carry your pack for you." He had a small one strapped on his back. "Indeed, indeed, I am fitter to do it than you."

"Thank you," he said, slowly, taking a long look at my face, and then scrutinizing that of Kitty's. "You seem, both of you, as if you were good children; and your offer to take my pack proves as much. But I'll carry it myself, still. Little one," and he turned to Kitty, "what have you got those sticks for?"

"For mother's fire, please," she said, dropping a little courtesy. "I have just been getting them in the woods."

"My aunt," I interposed, "who lives in the great house there, kindly allows us to pick up loose bits from under the trees. We are poor, as sister says, and so every little helps."

"And you are duly thankful, I suppose?" said the old man, sarcastically. "Beggars must not be choosers, you know, as I heard just now, myself."

I blushed scarlet with shame for my aunt. "Indeed, indeed," I cried, "you must not judge Aunt Mary too harshly, for I see, from what you say, that you overheard her. She must have been out of sorts this morning—"

"And I suppose that a voice which answered her, and which I think I recognize," he interrupted, looking at me keenly again, "belonged to some one who was not out of sorts, eh?"

Before I could answer I heard the quick gallop of a horse, and my poor weak heart gave a great bound, for I recognized in that elastic footfall the step of the thoroughbred that Mr. Everleigh rode. In my embarrassment I stepped quickly aside, though of course there was no danger, and in stepping aside my foot slipped on a stone, my ankle turned, and with an unconscious cry of pain I sank to the earth.

The rider was off his horse and at my side, and had lifted me in his arms, even before the old beggar who stood so close to me could stoop to assist me.

"It is only a sprain," I stammered, trying to free myself, yet feeling, oh! so happy in those strong arms. "I am sure I can walk."

"But I know you can't," said Mr. Everleigh, impetuously. "How shall I ever forgive myself? It was my rapid gallop that made you start."

"No, no," I cried. "I was talking to this poor old man, and it came on me so suddenly—you are not a bit to blame—only I have been foolish. But do let me try to walk."

My earnestness, joined to my struggles, induced him to yield. He released me from his arms. But the instant I put my foot to the ground the agony was such that I almost shrieked. I bit my lip till the blood came, however, and kept silence.

Mr. Everleigh snatched me again into his arms. "I knew it would be so," he cried, "and now you must let me carry you. John," and he called to a groom who had been following him, "ride at once to Dr. Landor's. We must, my dear Miss Chidleigh, have the foot bandaged without delay."

"And I will lead your horse to the cottage," interposed the old beggar, "and tie him there. Come on, little Kittie, you and I will follow."

When we got home the house was filled with the smell of crullers, which mamma was making for the feast that was to be given, up at Aunt Mary's, after the fair. Poor mamma, she looked tired to death; and when she saw me, she fairly gave up for a moment; but Mr. Everleigh, in a few kind words, put her fears to rest; and long before the physician came, my injured foot was swathed and bandaged, so that Dr. Landor declared he had been "regularly taken in,"

When evening came my foot was ever so much better; so much so, that, when Mr. Everleigh returned with a carriage, and insisted that we should all go up to my aunt's to the fair, as we had promised, I was only too willing to consent. For the first time in our acquaintance, there was something in Mr. Everleigh's manner that made even me, humble as I was, think that I was not without a charm for him.

The beggar had crept, unobtrusively, into a corner while my foot was being bandaged, but Kitty, remembering him, left me when she found the hurt was not serious. "Poor old man," she said, "we had nearly forgotten you. You must be hungry. Here, eat some of these crullers, and when mamma has finished with Maggie she will make you a cup of tea."

The tea was made in due time, and a substantial supper set before the mendicant; in fact, all the cold meat we had in the house. When Mr. Everleigh returned, and we proposed to go, the old beggar rose to his feet, saying:

"I am a stranger to you, ma'am," addressing mamma, "and naturally you will not wish to leave me here in your house. I will wait outside till you come back."

"Wait outside?" cried mamma, "and in the cold? No, your face is an honest face, if there ever was one. Sit down again, here by the fire, and stay, and sleep here to-night and take dinner with us to-morrow. It will be a homely meal for a Thanksgiving one, but such as it is you will be welcome to it."

"God bless you, ma'am," said the old man, with a shaky voice, and I thought I saw tears in his eyes. I am sure I heard him murmur, as he turned away to hide his emotion: "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

The charity fair, as the reader has by this time understood, was to be held in my aunt's spacious apartments. Everybody was to be there. The governor even, who was on a visit to his brother, a near neighbor, was expected to attend. One of the senators for our State was also to be present. It was to be a most brilliant affair.

So, when the dining-room was all a-glitter with lights, and echoed with gay voices, and shone with handsome dresses, and beheld the presence of the most distinguished society of the county; and was filled with stalls of pretty things, the big, chintz-covered chair was wheeled into the hall, and I, my sprained foot resting upon a cushion, sat in it, with a table of pretty knick-knacks before me, and Mr. Everleigh beside me.

My aunt did not look in a good humor, however, though her fair could not have been more of a success, and though everybody praised her philanthropy. Berenice, too, wore a scowl, that spoiled all her blonde beauty.

Somewhere about ten o'clock, when business was at its briskest, there came a roll of wheels on the drive and a bustle at the door. Presently, Jack, who had gone to see what was the matter, rushed back, his gray eyes dancing.

"Oh! Berry, I say," he cried out, stifling a burst of laughter, "you know the beggar? The old man we turned off this morning? Well, he's back again; here at the door, and, oh! my buttons, but he's our uncle from China."

My aunt, in her black silk and point lace, stood behind a stall of cakes and ices. She turned sharply at Jack's words. He saw her look of consternation, and screamed with laughter again.

"I say, now, mamma, it is true. Don't you wish you'd let me give him the cold turkey, instead of making it into sandwiches?"

My aunt did not utter a word. But she hurried to the door, and Berenice followed.

There he stood, our long-expected uncle from China, a little, weather-beaten old man, with a pinched, pale face. A wicked twinkle lit his eyes. My aunt rushed up to him at once, and would have smothered him with kisses. But he merely gave her the tips of his yellow fingers.

"I made acquaintance with your niece this morning," he said, with a dry, chuckling laugh, turning to me as he came in, "and the little girl there, too," indicating Kitty. "She is poor Marion's child, eh? She's got her mother's fair face, and a good heart. She gave the beggar a welcome, which some others I know of didn't. Ah, well, I suppose it is human nature. But I'll make it up to her, all the same. Never turn a needy man from your door, Mrs. Chidleigh. You know what the good book says about entertaining angels unawares?"

Poor aunt! The look on her face was too ludicrous. In spite of our relationship I laughed till my sides ached. But Berenice went to her room and cried herself to sleep.

Well, there is little more to tell. It really was our uncle from China, who had chosen to come to us, wearing the guise of a beggar; and if only my aunt had been consistent in her charity, her long-cherished expectations might have been realized.

As it was, the great China fortune went to me and Kitty and Jack; and Berenice never got a penny. And, morever, when Horace Everleigh did speak (he had spoken that evening before our uncle declared himself), it was me he asked to be his wife.

Berenice takes it all bitterly to heart, and my aunt is inconsolable; but I, believing that in this life and in the life which is to come we get only our just deserts, have nothing to say.

"Yes," remarks my uncle, "Maggie and Kitty and Jack shall inherit all I have. They were kind to me when they did not know who I was; that's the sort of people I believe in."

CAUSE OF WINTER HEADACHES.

The approach of the winter season, says the Medical Press and Circular, will, with a great number of people, be inaugural of a recurrent headache, for which they are unable to account at all satisfactorily, but which experience has taught them to expect as surely as fires and "snugness" are necessary to personal comfort. It would be well if all such sufferers were to understand the rationale of the complaint that periodically attacks them, and be wise in time to ward off the return of their old malady. In every case where the headache is not dependent on some organic disturbance, and when it is felt only during the colder months of the year, especially in large towns, it is undoubtedly due to the vitiated atmosphere of rooms lighted by gas, and rendered "snug" by close-drawn curtains and draught-excluding doors, while a brilliant fire is maintained for heating purposes. This latter is, indeed, the only preventive under the circumstances of an absolutely poisonous condition of the air, which is very seriously contaminated wherever a gas-light is employed for illumination. Careful observation of the effects gradually produced by prolonged continuance in such an apartment will reveal the fact that a feeling of oppression, which becomes gradually more intense, steals over one, and in an increased degree accordingly as the number of occupants in the room is added to. The atmosphere thus becomes heavily laden with carbonic acid, the product of the combustion of gas and of the human tissues; failing any free ventilation, this rapidly accumulates, an insignificant amount alone finding exit by the chimney, and, acting on the nervous system of those using the room, induces cerebral congestion that results in serious disturbances, which are relieved only after a more or less painful period of indisposition. The remedy for the evil is in efficient and constant ventilation.

FRETTING.—As for the comfort we lose through unbelief, that is simply beyond our power of calculation. Who has not made herself miserable in thinking of the things the future hides? The burdens of to-morrow crush many a sensitive soul, although the Master's words stand firm, that "the morrow shall take care of the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."—Strangely enough, the habit of fretting, like other morbid habits, after a while begets a certain appetite for fretting, and we take comfort in repining and find pleasure in woe. None the less do we suffer spiritual loss by this custom, and constantly, in our homes and personal experience, furnish illustrations of the sin of unbelief.

Wisconsin has been trying to destroy its wolves, wild cats, and foxes by offering a reward for every one killed, and within six months has expended nearly $8,000 in this way. But those who seem to know, say that the only result has been to increase the number of these animals, the reward offered for their destruction being an incentive to breed and raise them.

A grandfather, coming to read his paper, found that he had mislaid his spectacles, and thereupon declared, "I have lost my glasses somewhere, and can't read the paper." A little three-and-a-half-years-old girl, desiring to assist him, answered, "G'an'pa, you go outside and look froo ze window, and I'll hold ze paper up so you can read it."

He was a veteran toper with a fiery red proboscis, but a most kind-hearted and amiable man, and when the flies used to gather upon his nose he used to say: "O don't drive 'em away; they're having a good time, and if they can get their liquor without paying for it, I don't mind."

"It is a disgraceful shame!" exclaimed Mrs. Smith, as her lord and master came in in a demoralized condition. "You've been drinking again, and, it was only last week that you took the pledge." "Just my luck," said Smith: "break everything I get hold of."—Boston Transcript.

"The corpse was elegantly clad by directions of his devoted wife, and his casket was made to conform as far as possible with the comforts he was wont to surround himself with in the home he has left." In the way of an obituary this, from a Western paper, takes the palm.

Do not wade far out into the dangerous sea of this world's comfort. Take the good that God provides you, but say of it, "it passeth away, for indeed it is but a temporary supply for a temporary need." Never suffer your goods to become your God.—Spurgeon.

The will of a man who died in Berks county, Pennsylvania, the other day, contained this clause: "And I further disinherit and prohibit from participation in the distribution of my estate such of my male descendants as persist in wearing moustaches."

An English servant-girl who had returned from the United States to visit her friends at home was told that she looked really aristocratic. To which she responded, "Yes, in America all of us domestics belongs to the hire class."

The Journal.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 1881.

JUDGE FOLGER was sworn in as secretary of the treasury on Monday, and at once entered upon the duties of his office.

GUITEAU was brought into court on Monday, and behaved very much as a crazy man might be expected to, interrupting his counsel frequently, and attempting to take matters into his own hands generally. It took three days to impanel a jury, but the work was accomplished on Wednesday, and his trial has now fairly begun. Secretary Blaine was on the witness stand Thursday.

MR. MACVEIGH takes the strictures upon his course in the star route cases, and in leaving the cabinet, very complacently, and says he did what he believed was right. He took formal leave of the attorney general's office on Monday, though it is reported that his resignation has not yet been accepted. There seems to be a mystery at the bottom of this whole business, which people would very much like to see explained.

THE selectmen of Franconia, N. H., seem to have a fever upon them for re-naming the White Mountain peaks within their jurisdiction. They changed the name of Haystack Mountain to Mount Garfield in the summer, and everybody commended their patriotic deed, but when they dub another peak Mount Elizabeth Thompson, in honor of a well-known philanthropist, it is evident that they are becoming altogether too previous, and should be bottled up, to prevent any further demonstrations in this line.

CANNON, the Mormon delegate in Congress from Utah, is likely to be the subject of a lively discussion soon after the House meets next month. Cannon received the most votes at the last election, but Gov. Murray gave the certificate of election to Campbell, his Gentile competitor, on the ground that he received "more votes than any other citizen of Utah." Cannon admits that his pretended certificate of naturalization is fraudulent, and it is hard to see how Congress can stultify itself by permitting not only a polygamist, but a man who is not a citizen of the United States, to longer occupy a seat in the House.

CABINETS are being made and unmade almost daily now for President Arthur, and a communication in the New York Tribune last week, which read very much as if inspired by Blaine, claimed that the President had made up his mind to form his cabinet exclusively of Grant men, and that Grant himself is running the administration to a great extent. This may be taken with several grains of salt, however. President Arthur has conducted himself so discreetly, thus far, the country can afford to trust him to choose his own advisers, with a well-grounded hopefulness that he will not go much out of the way in his selections.

THE commission sent to Richmond by Gov. Long to investigate the charges against the 9th regiment has made its report, and in the main the charges are sustained. Many of them were shown to be groundless, but it was plainly proved that at Richmond a number of the men behaved in an extremely disgraceful manner. Upon reading the report Gov. Long promptly issued an order giving Col. Strachan thirty days in which to report the names of the offenders, failing in which the whole regiment will be held accountable. It is a great pity that so well-drilled a regiment as the 9th should have been brought into such an unenviable notoriety by the conduct of a few drunken rowdies, and the members will hardly fail to vindicate their reputation by promptly furnishing the names of the guilty ones for punishment.

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, the noted free thinker who has for many years been pastor of an independent church in New York, has decided to stop preaching for a time. He admits that revealed religion is much stronger to-day than twenty years ago, while its opponents have made no progress whatever. He does not believe any more than he did, but doubts more. There is a power in religion which he does not comprehend, and he sums up his present attitude in these words: "The work which I have been doing appears to lead to nothing, and may have been grounded upon mistaken premises. Therefore it is better to stop. But I do not want to give the impression that I recant anything. I simply stop denying and wait." Mr. Frothingham's position illustrates the unsatisfactory results upon the mind of a life of genuine unbelief and doubt in all forms of revealed religion. It gives no comfort or joy in the present, and makes a future of darkness and dread uncertainty from which the stoutest heart may well shrink.

The Bourbon citizens of Shaklesfords, Va., have bitten off their own noses by their treatment of an objectionable postmaster appointed last August upon the recommendation of Senator Mahone. The citizens combined to prevent his renting a suitable room, or buying a lot, and he accordingly resigned, and the post office has been discontinued.

The railroads do not come together worth a cent, and another and sharper war is said to be imminent. Eastern freight rates from Chicago are being cut again. The Pennsylvania road will soon, it is said, start its limited express two hours after the departure of the one on the New York Central road, and then get through first.

Jesse Baldwin, an eccentric and wealthy man living near Youngstown, O., recently took $17,000 in bonds to Washington, got the gold for them, and put it in his safe at home, with other large sums. On Tuesday morning five burglars blew his safe open and got away with from $30,000 to $40,000 in gold.

LOCAL NOTICES.

We would recommend all buyers of boots and shoes to visit Milligan's, where low prices reign.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

New moon next Monday.

Jupiter is now evening star.

Going home to Thanksgiving?

Don't eat too much next Thursday.

Rather warm weather for November.

War is about to commence on Turkey.

How easily it rains, now it's got started!

Mercury will be at its brightest next week, in the west.

In this season of plenty and rejoicing, do not forget the poor and needy.

Elder A. Morse of Union, Ct., will preach at the Park street chapel Sunday.

Rev. O. R. Hunt of Springfield will preach again, to-morrow, in the Baptist church.

Rev. Edward N. Pomeroy, of Marion, is to preach at the Congregational church to-morrow.

The Western Union Telegraph Co. is replacing its old poles with new and larger ones.

There will be a session of the probate court in Palmer next Tuesday at the district court room.

The pulpit of St. Paul's church will be occupied on Sunday by Rev. J. H. Amies of New Haven, Conn.

The ladies of the Baptist society socialized Wednesday afternoon and evening in the vestry of their church.

Children have been canvassing the village this week for Thanksgiving contributions to the Boston Home for Little Wanderers.

There will be an eclipse of the sun next Monday, but those who would see it will have to go the Southern Ocean, or they will miss it.

J. & W. Evans have become agents of the Singer sewing machine, H. B. Leete having taken a position in the company's office in Springfield.

Merrick Post, No. 107, G. A R., has a special meeting at Masonic Hall next Wednesday evening. The post meets once in two weeks for the present.

The State Primary School received an addition of 17 children on Thursday from Tewksbury. There are now about 450 children in the institution.

F. F. Marcy is putting in a cellar on the corner of Highland Avenue and King street, and another one on King street, and will erect a couple of good houses thereon.

As far as we can learn, there will be no public religious services in this village Thanksgiving day. That is where we are unfortunate in having three of our churches without pastors.

A new wire has been strung from New London to Brattleboro for the exclusive use of the New London Northern Railroad, and connections are now being made with the offices along the line.

Editor McLaughlin of Stafford Springs, who was renominated for another term in the Connecticut Legislature, was defeated last week by a bolt in his own party, on account of a locality jealousy.

Elder H. C. Smith of West Norwalk, Ct., has accepted an invitation of the Advent church of this place to become their pastor, and will commence his labors with the church on Sunday, the 27th inst.

Dr. A. B. Cowan & Son have opened branch dental rooms in West Brookfield, having bought out Dr. Spooner of that place, and will hereafter devote two or three days a week to their work in that locality.

Deputy Sheriff Northrop sold 50 barrels of Baldwin apples at auction, Wednesday afternoon, at the B. & A. freight house, some of them of second quality, for $3.05 per barrel, Otis Griffin bidding off the lot at that figure.

The Springfield Republican says: "It is understood that Palmer voters threw separate ballots for representative." It isn't so understood by anybody who knows anything about the matter. The ballots were all on one ticket.

A. E. Park's horse was frightened by a falling telegraph wire, while standing in front of a house at Blanchardville Thursday, and ran some distance, overturning the delivery wagon, wrecking the top, and cutting his hind legs somewhat.

Our correspondents are requested to send in their items next week on Wednesday morning, so far as possible, in order that the "devil" and his co-workers may have time and opportunity to eat their Thanksgiving turkey in peace and quiet.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Davis celebrated the 10th anniversary of their wedding on the 4th inst. by a gathering of friends and relatives, who presented them with an elegant carpet and numerous other presents, after which they partook of a bountiful collation.

The Bijou Comic Opera Co. appeared at Wales Hall last (Friday) evening in the operettas "The Spectre Knight" and "Charity Begins at Home," two lively musical plays which have been brought out with great success in the larger cities, and are said to be "chock full" of fun.

We are warned of the approach of another year, by the receipt of the "Old Farmer's Almanac" for 1882. Of course no farmer would think of keeping house without this necessary little work, which can be obtained at any bookstore, or of the publishers, Wm. Ware & Co., Boston.

Wm. Andrews and Thomas Keating of Wales were before the district court Monday for drunkenness, and paid $8.25 each for their indulgence. On Tuesday Michael Donahue of Palmer paid $5.65, and on Wednesday John Dorin, employed on the State water works in Monson, paid the same sum, for similar offenses.

The New London Northern Railroad has a new "mogul" engine from the shops at St. Albans, which made its first trip down the road on Thursday. It is named the "D. D. Ranlett," has cylinders measuring 18½ x 26, and is expected to draw a train of 28 loaded cars over the heaviest grades on the road without any difficulty.

The following officers of Thomas Lodge were installed Monday evening, in addition to those named last week: Frank Sedgwick, S. D.; S. H. Hellyar, J. D.; E. C. Sexton, Marshal: H. Lawrence, Chaplain; E. Potter, S. S.; F. Ruggles, J. S.; S. W. Shumway, Tyler. After the installation a collation was served in the ante-rooms.

There is considerable interest in music among the carpet mill employes, who have organized a string band of five pieces, under the leadership of W. H. Higgins, while one or two more members are expected before long. They meet for rehearsal Wednesday evenings, when passers over the hill may be entertained by the "music in the air."

The annual report of the New London Northern Railroad shows a total income for the past year of $611,043, and expenses of $413,326, leaving a net income of $224,983, out of which interest to the amount of $93,531, and dividends of 6 per cent were paid, leaving a surplus for the year of $41,351. The surplus for the previous year was $41,649.

The inhabitants of South Belchertown have decided to make another effort for annexation to this town, as will be seen from their petition in another column, and they are quite hopeful that the next Legislature will act favorably upon the subject. The town, however, at a special meeting, has voted 134 to 23 against the division, and has placed $600 at the disposal of the selectmen, who are authorized to act for the town in opposition to the proposition.

Nuel Perry, an engineer employed by W. N. Flynt & Co., died suddenly of apoplexy Thursday morning at his residence on Church street in this village, where he had been confined to his bed a couple of weeks with typhoid fever. Mr. Perry had for some time had charge of a stationary engine at Bondville, and was formerly a fireman on the New London Northern road, also working at one time for the Boston & Albany Railroad in the same capacity.

A business meeting of the Congregational church was held on Tuesday evening, to consider the question of calling a pastor, and an informal ballot was taken to ascertain the preferences of the members, the result showing 37 votes for Rev. A. F. Newton of Townsend, and 10 each for Rev. J. L. Scudder of Shrewsbury, and Rev. John Willard of Newtonville. Formal action was postponed for a week, but the indications are that the church will vote strongly in favor of calling Mr. Newton to its pastorate.

The Palmer Dramatic Club will present "Blow for Blow" at Wales Hall, Thanksgiving evening. This is one of Henry J. Byron's most interesting pieces, and cannot fail to please all who may hear it. The proceeds will be given to the Improvement Association, and the club is doing all it can to merit a very liberal patronage for so worthy an object. There is no pleasanter way of spending Thanksgiving evening, and at the same time assisting in improving and beautifying our village, which can be made one of the prettiest in New England.

The entertainment at Wales Hall Monday evening by Spaulding's Bell Ringers was attended by the usual large audience, and the sweet music of the bells, as well as the other attractions of the evening, were heartily enjoyed by all present. Georgie Dean Spaulding is a true artiste, and displays remarkable skill in handling whatever instrument she takes hold of, while W. P. Spaulding is equally dexterous in his management of the bass bells. One of the gems of the evening was "The Old Wooden Rocker," as sung by Maud Stanley, who has an excellent and well-cultivated voice of great compass.

C. W. Eddy of Ware gave one of his instructive "evenings with the microscope" at the State Primary School Tuesday evening, by invitation of Superintendent Tufts, pleasantly entertaining the teachers and others with the mysterious wonders of nature which are invisible to the natural eye, but which, under the powerful lenses of the microscope, are shown to possess a marvelous beauty and perfection. Mr. Eddy has a fine assortment of choice objects, and an evening can hardly be spent more pleasantly and profitably than in viewing them through his excellent instrument. Next Tuesday evening Mr. Eddy is coming down again with his stereopticon, to give the children at the school an evening's enjoyment.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

The evening school now has over 100 pupils.

Hose Co. No. 5 held their annual ball in Wight's Hall last evening, with music by Gardner & Field's orchestra of Springfield.

LUDLOW.

The village is to have a library by and by, the corporation having contributed a generous sum for this purpose, while over $100 has been raised by entertainments. The company will provide a room for it in some convenient locality.

BRIMFIELD.

The wire gang of the Mutual Union Telegraph Co. are putting the wires through town from Monson eastward.

The Fall term of the Hitchcock Free High School closed yesterday. The Winter term will commence on Thursday, Nov. 29th.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The members of St. Thomas' Catholic church living in this part of the parish will hold a coffee party in Liberty Hall next Wednesday evening. Besides having a plenty to eat and drink for all, an opportunity will be had for those who desire to dance to good music and good prompting.

WEST WARREN.

The glee club will give a ball in Crossman's Hall next Wednesday evening, with music by the North Brookfield orchestra, and supper at Fireman's Hall.

C. T. Olmstead, manager of the corset shop at West Brookfield, was driving his pair of horses in this village Wednesday, when they were run into by another team, a shaft penetrating one of the horses. Mr. Olmstead drove on about half a mile, not knowing the animal was injured, when it dropped dead. The horse was valued at $500.

BONDVILLE.

T. D. Potter and family are here on a visit from Michigan.

The village schools closed Friday. There will be only one week's vacation.

Main street is being widened and improved. Some have already moved their fences.

Work in the dye house is getting dull. Eleven hands have been discharged the past week.

The ladies' social met this week at Mrs. Fuller's, on South Main street, and passed a pleasant afternoon and evening.

Mr. Girard has moved his blacksmith shop back from the street, making room for a house, the foundation for which is being put in.

THREE RIVERS.

Schools closed yesterday for a week's vacation.

Rev. O. R. Hunt will supply the Baptist pulpit again next Sunday.

John Nebusta, a carpenter at work on the Otis Co.'s new cotton house, fell over backwards from the roof of the upper floor, a distance of about 15 feet, last Saturday, but fortunately escaped with but slight injuries.

The addition to the Otis Co.'s cloth room building is about completed, and the company have already put in a new five-roll calender and other new finishing machinery, and 72 new looms, which they hope to have running soon.

The new reading room of the Y. M. C. A., opened a short time since, is well filled by the young men of the village every evening, and is considered a success. There is talk of its being opened Sunday afternoons for two or three hours.

WARREN.

A portrait of I. F. Hitchcock has been presented to the library.

The public schools have a vacation of one day Thanksgiving week.

Barker Ramsdell's boot shop is doing a large business, having many new orders to fill.

The Sons of Temperance met at Brigham's Hall Thursday evening and organized their society.

The workmen are engaged in putting spiles under the Methodist church, which continues to settle.

A. A. Warriner sells his cows and hay at auction next Tuesday, having sold out his milk route.

Mrs. E. Carpenter sells to-day her three-story tenement house on Liberty street, and two building lots on Crescent.

The children are busy with their bags, collecting money for the "Home for Little Wanderers," Mr. Toles as usual sending them to be filled for Thanksgiving.

Rev. Mr. Eggleston, of Williamstown, gave a lecture on village improvement in the town hall Thursday evening, and it is hoped an effort will be made to start an improvement society.

The following officers of Quaboag lodge were installed Wednesday evening, the exercises being followed by a collation and speeches: W. M., John Thayer; S. W., H. W. Ward; J. W., Charles Heritage; Treasurer, B. A. Tripp; Secretary, G. O. Dow; Chaplain, George S. Jennings; M. S., W. L. Tripp; S. E., N. Cutler; J. E., C. E. Tripp; S. S., B. J. Taylor; J. S., S. H. Milnes; T., S. Bridges.

WILBRAHAM.

Philo and Club held a union society last week Friday evening.

Atchinson & Cooley have recently built a new slaughter house on Maple street.

A plan for publishing a monthly paper at the academy is being talked up by the students.

There will be a concert at Fisk Hall Monday evening under the direction of Miss Carrie Stevens.

The Fall term of Wesleyan Academy closes next Tuesday evening with a social interview in Fisk Hall.

Dr. Steele, principal of the academy, lectured at Florence Tuesday evening on American Civilization.

The class in gymnastics, under Prof. Raymond, will give an exhibition in the gymnasium this evening.

Mrs. Henry Cadwell is the fortunate possessor of a lobster cactus which has 180 buds and blossoms on one plant.

The Young Women's Missionary Society of the Congregational church met with Miss Louisa Richards last Saturday afternoon and evening, and notwithstanding the rain there was a full attendance. The society is in a very prosperous condition, and is preparing for a fair some time this winter. The next meeting will be with Miss Jessie Lilley.

The installation of the officers of Newton Lodge, F. and A. M., for the ensuing year took place on Wednesday evening, after which an oyster supper was served. The officers, who were installed by Judge Robinson of Palmer, are as follows: W. M., Henry Clarke; S. W., J. A. Parker; J. W., W. H. Brown; secretary, F. E. Clarke; treasurer, Dr. S. Foskit; chaplain, Dea. W. Hitchcock; marshal, C. G. Robbins; S. D., Fred. Pease; J. D., Arthur Kilgore; S. S., Edward Schofield; J. S., James Richards; tyler, J. W. King.

WALES.

Butter sells readily at 35 cents by the tub.

A skating rink has been opened in Shaw's Hall.

Willie White is getting in a large stock of poultry and other good things for Thanksgiving.

Ernest Needham is building a cistern for his new house, sufficiently large to hold 75 barrels of water.

Wm. Lewis has put in an engine, and is now ready to grind all kinds of grain. He also keeps grain on hand for sale.

H. A. McFarland now has authority to issue warrants in criminal cases and take bail; also in all civil cases he can give writs.

Mr. Royce will have his new hall ready next week, and proposes to dedicate it Wednesday evening with a grand ball, with music by Bacon & Kenfield's orchestra.

Mrs. Lucinda Towne has put up a nice stone wall and terraced the large bank in front of her house. It is a great improvement, and we hope her neighbors will take pattern.

Constable Farrington arrested Wm. Andrews and Thomas Keating Sunday night for being drunk. He has his eye on others that often indulge in drinking and carousing in the streets, and some of them may pay him for carrying them over to see Judge Robinson.

Anthony Needham, born in Salem in 1696, with his brother Humphrey, were the first white settlers in Wales, coming here in 1726. They have descendants living in town of the seventh generation. They were the grandsons of Anthony Needham, who with his father, Lord Needham, had espoused the cause of Cromwell in England, and escaped with other Puritans and settled in Salem in 1654; and was married to Ann Potter in that town January 10th, 1655. The records show that Ann could not have been as good a Puritan as her husband, for she "was often fined for being absent from pulpit worship," and in June 1660 she was "publicly whipped with twelve stripes for absence from church." The history of the family has been clearly traced back to the eighth century.

MONSON.

St. Patrick's church choir give an entertainment at Central Hall, Thanksgiving eve.

M. F. Bacon has bought a building lot on Pleasant street, just south of his present residence.

The public schools closed last week, and the academy closes next week Tuesday for the usual Fall vacation.

Thanksgiving services will be held at the Methodist church next Thursday forenoon, Rev. Mr. Merrill officiating.

Postmaster Norcross, who has been a member of the Union church choir at Worcester for some time, has accepted an engagement with a Boston choir.

Arrangements are being made to secure Mr. Willie, the champion checker player of the world, for a series of exhibition games with our local amateurs.

The selectmen offer a reward of $200 for the arrest and conviction of the persons who robbed and burned the Ward house. Some clues are being worked up.

The trustees of the academy feel well pleased with the results of the present term's work at that institution, and hope for continued success in the Winter term.

Messrs. Hopson & Hall opened a roller skating rink at Central Hall last (Friday) night, and will continue to-night and next week Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Spaulding's Bell Ringers had a fine house at Central Hall Tuesday evening, and the Bijou Opera Co. a rather small one Wednesday evening. The former gave a good entertainment—the latter a very poor one.

Names of scholars in district No. 1, who have been neither absent nor tardy during the past term: Grammar — Georgia Whiting, Minnie Whiting, Lena Merrick, Clara Meacham, Morton Miller, Bertie Thresher, John Parker, John Marriott, Henry Miller. Intermediate—Katie Coughlin, Hannah Donahue, Sarah Keefe, Sarah Parker, Lillian Burdick, Mary Foley, Helen Tucker, Alice Underwood, Alice Park, John Lynch, James Ryan, George Marriott, Harrie Miller, Willie Meacham. Primary — Blanche Anderson, Hattie Gough, Mabel Flynt, Julia Keefe, Addie Peck, Nora Maney, Susie Mixter, Mary Ryan, Harry Chapin, James Gough, Daniel Gallivan, John Keefe, Charlie Marriott, Arthur Walker, Walter King, Harry King.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The high school grounds are being nicely graded, and it is expected there will be concrete walks and an appropriate fence.

Those who love to trip the "light fantastic" will not forget the ball to be given by the Oregon Engine Co. next Wednesday evening.

Miss Viola Barton, late assistant in the Chicopee high school, has opened a kindergarten school at the house of Israel Putnam, near the depot.

Mrs. John Lashua met with a severe accident the other day by stepping upon a nail, which pierced her foot in such a manner as to cause a painful abscess.

Elegant baskets of flowers were presented to the teachers of the high school by the pupils on Friday, as a token of their appreciation of the faithful work done for them.

The new store that J. H. Storrs is putting up for Bonin & Deslauriers on North street is rapidly approaching completion, the walls having been put up and the roof on inside of eight days.

Henry G. Hutchinson has sold his father's farm, which has been in the family for one hundred years, to Francis Blair. The personal property at the farm will be sold at auction next Tuesday.

Chas. E. Ballard, who has been for 22 years employed by the Geo. H. Gilbert Mfg. Co. as yard superintendent, lost about half of the thumb of his right hand on a circular saw Thursday morning.

The officers of Eden Lodge F. & A. M., elected last Monday evening, were: Geo. S. Marsh, W. M.; Aram Warburton, S. W.; Geo. E. Ballard, J. W.; L. W. Robinson, Treas.; E. H. Vaughan, Sec.

Eugene Reed, a workman at the gun shop, met with a severe accident a few days since, which it was thought for a time would result in the loss of his right eye. He was unlacing a belt, when the awl slipped, and pierced the eyelid.

The Ware high school closed its Fall term on Friday afternoon, the exercises consisting of compositions, declamations, etc. The grade of the school has been considerably raised the past term. There has been a two-years' course of French added to the curriculum of studies. Miss Florence Fisherdick takes the highest rank of any one in the school, with Miss Annie Hills only 5-100 of one per cent behind.

The reading room in the basement of the new library building, which has been nicely finished and furnished, will be opened to the public about the 21st inst., with a selection of the best leading papers and magazines of the day. The design is to make it a place where any who wish may resort for an evening and be benefited thereby. The sum necessary to provide the reading matter has been furnished by generous contributions of our citizens.

The last Sunday evening service to be held in the old chapel by the Congregational society was held there last Sunday evening. It is expected that work will commence the last of this week on the alterations necessary for its use by the engine company. The building is to be raised 7 feet, the main room, as it now is, being used for a hall, while the basement will give an engine room 54 by 32 feet. There will be a slight down grade to Water street, so that two men can easily take the engine out.

Father Sheehan, determined that the right, as he understood it, should prevail, invited the Gilbert Hose Company to his residence on Saturday evening of last week and presented them a new silver trumpet, paid for from his own private funds. It was elegantly chased, gold lined, and valued at over $50. The following inscription was engraved upon it: "Presented to the Geo. H. Gilbert Hose Company, who received the most votes at the French fair, 1881." Foreman Fairbank accepted the same, which we understand is to be placed in the counting room of the Geo. H. Gilbert Mfg. Co.

The work on the Mass. Central Railroad is being pushed with vigor all along the line, and is expected to be completed to the town of Jefferson in a few days. The equipment of the road now comprises 8 locomotives, 10 passenger, 70 freight, 200 coal, 2 express and 2 milk cars. The section now in operation between Hudson and Boston is said to afford an excellent business, much better in fact than was expected when opened. The road completed to Jefferson will bring it within 27 miles of Ware, and it is thought we may look for the opening of it as far as this place by the first of July next, and perhaps before that time.

Old Winter is taking hold of things with a vigorous grip out West. The overland train due at Omaha, Neb., last week Friday night had to be abandoned in heavy drifts at Sherman, Wy.; and on Saturday two men were lost and frozen to death in a severe snow storm between Pitkin and Gunnison, Col.

The two big fairs at Boston closed last Saturday evening after a very successful run of three months. The Institute fair has been attended by over 500,000 people, and the Mechanics' fair by about 375,000, while the financial result is said to be very satisfactory in both cases.

John P. Howard, of Burlington, Vt., has given to the Home for Destitute Children in that place the opera house which he built a couple of years ago, at a cost of $125,000. This is the largest gift ever made to an institution of the kind in Vermont.

Fred Markham of Springfield, 16 years old, shot and killed James Morrissey, also 16, with a pistol which he pointed at him in fun on Tuesday. He didn't know it was loaded. Will boys never learn?

Philadelphia has already prepared a programme for the celebration, a year hence, of the 200th anniversary of the landing of William Penn. There will be three days of processions, displays, etc.

A schooner and a steam barge collided on Lake Erie, off Port Colborne, last Saturday morning; both vessels sank and four men were drowned.

A skiff ferry boat containing 19 persons was swamped at Troy, N. Y., last Saturday by a heavy swell, and six men were drowned.

Dr. Henry A. Reynolds is coming to Massachusetts to engage in temperance work, in response to an invitation extended by the Red Ribbon Reform Clubs assembled at a reunion held at Holliston, Sept. 28. Dr. Reynolds will devote three or four months to the work, and the plan is to first visit the towns and cities represented by delegates in the reunion, and then extend his labors in different parts of the State as calls are received. Dr. Reynolds will open his campaign at Wakefield next Friday, and organizations desiring his services should address Charles S. Parker, Arlington, the secretary of the committee having the work in charge.

It is reported that the Sultan has ordered the ruins of Solomon's Temple to be preserved and the surrounding place cleared of rubbish. Near the place stands the Mosque of Omar, the revenue of which is said to be £150,000 a year. Hitherto this sum has been sent to Constantinople, but it is now to be appropriated to clearing the site of the Temple. This act of the Sultan is believed to be a result of the visit of the Crown Prince of Austria to Jerusalem.

An attempt was made to blackmail Jay Gould last week, but it didn't work very well. One hundred postmen and detectives were set to watch the letter boxes in a district where all the letters had been mailed, and the offender was captured, and turned out to be J. H. Welles, an impecunious speculator, who cheated the government out of between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 during the war.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it. Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. TO THE HONORABLE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS IN GENERAL COURT ASSEMBLED:

The undersigned petitioners, citizens of Belchertown, in said Commonwealth, respectfully represent that the convenience of the inhabitants of that part of said town which lies southerly of a line beginning about 231 rods southerly of the northeasterly corner of the town of Ludlow, and running thence easterly in a straight line to the west line of the town of Ware, at a point about 60 rods northeasterly from the southwest corner of said last named town, would be greatly promoted by having that part of said town of Belchertown set off and annexed to the town of Palmer. We therefore pray that so much of said town of Belchertown as lies southerly of the line above described may be set off from said town of Belchertown and annexed to said town of Palmer.

Dated Oct. 24th, 1881.

"THE CHILDREN'S MAGAZINE OF AMERICA."

ST. NICHOLAS.

This illustrated magazine for young folks has now attained a circulation larger, probably, than that of any other monthly magazine of its class. It has been called "a marvel of perfection, both as regards its literary excellence and its artistic merits." It was the first to give to boys and girls the very best illustrations that could be had, and has earned the name of

"THE CHILDREN'S ART MAGAZINE."

The greatest living writers of Europe and America are among its distinguished contributors: Charles Dudley Warner, Henry W. Longfellow, John G. Whitter, H. H. Boyesen, Saxe Holm, Bret Harte, Gail Hamilton, Thomas Hughes, Louisa M. Alcott, Donald G. Mitchell, Harriet Prescott Spofford, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, George MacDonald, Washington Gladden, The Goodale Sisters, Alfred Tennyson, John Hay, Clarence Cook, Rossiter Johnson, Susan Coolidge, Edward Eggleston, Prof. R. A. Proctor, Christina G. Rossetti, Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney, Frances Hodgson Burnett, Celia Thaxter, Marion Harland, T. W. Higginson, Lucy Larcom, Noah Brooks, Author of "Alice in Wonderland," Mrs. Oliphant, T. B. Aldrich, and hundreds of others.

WHAT ENGLAND SAYS OF IT.

London Daily News: "We wish we could point out its equal in our own literature."
The Spectator: "It is the best of all children's magazines."
Literary World: "There is no magazine for the young that can be said to equal it," etc., etc.

BRILLIANT FEATURES of the COMING YEAR.

The ninth volume, which begins with the November, 1881, number, will contain a new serial story, by Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, editor of St. Nicholas, author of "Hans Brinker, or the Silver Skates," etc., etc. A second serial story, full of lively interest,

"THE HOOSIER SCHOOL-BOY,"

By Edward Eggleston, author of "The Hoosier School-master," etc. A single article of universal interest: "HOW CHILDREN SHOULD LEARN MUSIC," by Richard Wagner, the eminent composer. Two other serials, one dealing with campaign life in the late war, and the other Girl and Boy Life in the 13th Century. Plays for Home and School, Embroidery for Girls, Amateur Newspapers, Illustrated Practical and Descriptive Papers, Articles on Sports, and The Treasure-Box of Literature will be among the great features of this great volume. An immense edition will be printed in the CHRISTMAS NUMBER, which will be ready about December 1st.

Price $3 a year; 25 cents a number. Subscriptions taken and magazines sold by booksellers and newsdealers everywhere, or the publishers.

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1882.

THE SUN for 1882 will make its fifteenth annual revolution under the present management, shining, as always, for all, big and little, mean and gracious, contented and unhappy, Republican and Democratic, depraved and virtuous, intelligent and obuse. The SUN'S light is for mankind and womankind of every sort; but it's genial warmth is for the good, while it pours hot discomfort on the blistering backs of the persistently wicked.

The SUN of 1868 was a newspaper of a new kind. It discarded many of the forms, and a multitude of superfluous words and phrases of ancient journalism. It undertook to report in a fresh, succinct, unconventional way all the news of the world, omitting no event of human interest, and commenting upon affairs with the fearlessness of absolute independence. The success of this experiment was the success of the SUN. It effected a permanent change in the style of American newspapers. Every important journal established in this country in the dozen years past has been modeled after the SUN. Every important journal already existing has been modified and bettered by the force of the SUN'S example.

The SUN of 1882 will be the same outspoken, truth-telling, and interesting newspaper.

We shall print all the news, putting it into readable shape, and measuring its importance, not by the traditional yardstick, but by its real interest to the people. Whenever anything happens worth reporting we get the particulars, whether it happens in Brooklyn or Bokhara.

In politics we have decided opinions; and are accustomed to express them in language that can be understood. We say what we think about men and events. That habit is the only secret of the SUN'S political course.

The WEEKLY SUN gathers into eight pages the best matter of the seven daily issues. An agricultural department of unequaled merit, full market reports, and a liberal proportion of literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence complete the WEEKLY SUN, and make it the best newspaper for the farmer's household that was ever printed.

Who does not know and read and like the SUNDAY SUN, each number of which is a Golconda of interesting literature, with the best poetry of the day, prose every line worth reading, news, humor—matter enough to fill a good sized book, and infinitely more varied and entertaining than any book, big or little?

If our idea of what a newspaper should be pleases you, send for the SUN.

Our terms are as follows: For the daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post-paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cts. per month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of the SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 per year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

The Old Story in a New Shape.

A modest drooping of the eyes,
A timid flutter of surpreyes,
A half a score or more of seyes;
Some tender words not over weyes
Call forth appropriate repleyes,
While countless kisses emphaseyes.

Then to a dollar store he heyes,
A ring that looks like gold he beyes,
Back to his charmer quickly fleyes,
Upon her digit puts the preyes,
With rapture he cannot disgeyse,
And—thinks he's happy, we surmeyes.

DON'T.

Don't sleep in a draught.

Don't go to bed with cold feet.

Don't stand over hot-air registers.

Don't eat what you do not need just to save it.

Don't try to get cool too quickly after exercising.

Don't sleep with insecure false teeth in your mouth.

Don't start the day's work without a good breakfast.

Don't sleep in a room without ventilation of some kind.

Don't stuff a cold, lest you be next obliged to starve a fever.

Don't try to get along without flannel underclothing in winter.

Don't try your voice for loud speaking or singing when hoarse.

Don't try to get along with less than eight or nine hours' sleep.

Don't sleep in the same undergarment you wear during the day.

Don't toast your feet by the fire, but try sunlight or friction instead.

Don't neglect to have at least one movement of the bowels each day.

Don't drink ice water by the glass; take it in sips, a swallow at a time.

Don't try to keep up on coffee and alcoholics when you ought to go to bed.

Don't eat snow to quench thirst; it brings on inflammation of the throat.

Don't strain your eyes by reading or working with an insufficient or a flickering light.

Don't be too modest to ask the way to the water closet when you have a call that way.

Don't use the eyes for reading or fine work in the twilight of an evening or early morn.

Don't try to lengthen your days by cutting short your nights' rest; it is poor economy.

Don't wear close, heavy fur or rubber caps or hats if your hair is thin or falls out easily.

Don't eat anything between meals excepting fruit, or a glass of hot milk if you feel faint.

Don't take some other person's medicine because you are troubled somewhat as they were.

Don't blow out a gaslight as you would a lamp; many lives are lost every year by this mistake.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

HASTY EATING.

Mastication performed in haste must be imperfect even with the best of teeth, and due admixture of the saliva secretion with the food cannot take place. When a crude mass of inadequately crushed muscular fiber, or individual solid material of any description, is thrown into the stomach, it acts as a mechanical irritant, and sets up a condition in the mucous membrane lining that organ which greatly impedes, if it does not altogether prevent the process of digestion. When the practice of eating quickly and filling the stomach with unprepared food is habitual, the digestive organ is rendered incapable of performing its proper functions. Either a much larger quantity of food than would be necessary under natural conditions is required, or the system suffers from lack of nourishment. Those animals which were intended to feed hurriedly were either gifted with the power of rumination or provided with gizzards. Man is not so furnished, and it is fair to assume that he was intended to eat slowly.

We must apologize for reminding our readers of facts so familiar; but we do this in the hope that any who may chance to have influence with the managers of large hotels where dinners a la table d'hote are invogue will take measures to bring about a much-needed reform in the manner in which these entertainments are conducted. At the best and most frequented establishments in places of fashionable resort, where at this season multitudes of health-seekers are wont to congregate, the hurried dinners are not only causes of annoyance, but actually go far to prevent the benefit which should be derived from a change. No sooner is one course served than another is introduced, without giving the guest time to digest or even to swallow the first. The eagerness to secure good dividends takes a particularly mischievous form when it piles food on the plate of a customer, and compels him to consume it breathlessly. The matter may seem a small one, but it is not so. Just as man may go on for years with defective teeth, imperfectly masticating his food, and wondering why he suffers from indigestion, so a man may habitually live under an infliction of hurried dinners and endure the consequent loss of health, without knowing why he is not well, or how easily the cause of his illness might be remedied.—London Lancet.

This instant is thine, the next is in the womb of futurity, and thou knowest not what it may bring forth.—Brahminic.

It is a fact worth remembering that it does not take half so long to make a wound as to heal one.

There is food for much reflection in the Arab proverb, "All sunshine makes the desert."

The fellow who, by mistake, sent his auburn-haired sweetheart instead of a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup a bottle of hair dye, wants to know the best way to commit suicide.

There is more strength-restoring power in a fifty-cent bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column. n

AMPUTATION OF THE LEG.

THE OLD FAMILY PHYSICIAN AT FAULT—DR. DAVID KENNEDY THE SUCCESSFUL SURGEON.

Money is the universal necessity, and none but a cynic or a fool will affect to despise it. Mr. Abram Ellsworth, of Port Ewen, Ulster county, N. Y., had realized this truth. His disease involved the whole of his thigh-bone, and the suffering man looked forward, not without apparent reason, to death as his only deliverer. His family physician refused to amputate the limb—asserting that the operation would kill the patient on the spot. Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who was consulted, held a different opinion, and amputated the limb. The doctor then administered freely his great Blood Specific FAVORITE REMEDY to afford tone and strength to the system, prevent the return of the disease, and Mr. Ellsworth remains to this day in the bloom of health. This gentleman's disease was the offspring of foul blood, and Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY purified the blood and restored to him the power once more to enjoy his life. Are you suffering from any disease traceable to the same cause? Try Favorite Remedy. Your druggist has it. ONE DOLLAR a bottle. Bear in mind the proprietor's name and address: Dr. David KENNEDY, Rondout, New York. 4w35

SICK HEADACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

WE MEAN CURED, NOT MERELY RELIEVED,

AND CAN PROVE WHAT WE CLAIM!

There are no failures and no disappointments. If you are troubled with SICK HEADACHE you can be easily and quickly cured, as hundreds have been already. We shall be pleased to mail a sheet of testimonials to any interested.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS

Also cure all forms of Biliousness, prevent Constipation and Dyspepsia, promote Digestion, relieve distress from too heavy eating, correct Disorders of the Stomach, Stimulate the Liver, and Regulate the Bowels. They do all this by taking just one little pill at a dose. They are purely vegetable, do not gripe or purge, and are as nearly perfect as it is possible for a pill to be. Price 25 cents, 5 for $1. Sold by druggists everywhere or sent by mail.

TAKE

Simmons Liver Regulator!

THE GREAT UNFAILING

SPECIFIC FOR LIVER COMPLAINT.

THE SYMPTOMS OF LIVER COMPLAINT

Are uneasiness and pain in the side, sometimes pain in the shoulder, and is mistaken for rheumatism; the stomach is also affected with loss of appetite and sickness; bowels, in general costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, and dull, heavy sensation; considerable loss of memory, with painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done; often complaining of weakness, debility and low spirits. Sometimes many of the above symptoms attend the disease, and at other times very few of them; but the Liver is generally the organ most involved.

REGULATE THE LIVER, AND PREVENT

Dyspepsia, Constipation, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Chills and Fever, Headache, Colic, Depression of Spirits, Sour Stomach, Heartburns, Piles, etc.

TONIC ALTERATIVE AND CATHARTIC!

Simmons Liver Regulator, purely vegetable, is the medicine generally used in the South to arouse the torpid liver to healthy action.

It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy on the Liver and Kidneys!

The action of the Regulator is free from nausea or griping. It is more effective in starting the secretions of the liver, causing the bile to act as a cathartic. When there is an excess of bile in the stomach, the Regulator is an active purge; after the removal of the bile it will regulate the bowels and impart vigor and health to the whole system.

See that you get the genuine in White Wrapper, with red Z, prepared only by J. H. Zeilin & Co. Sold by all druggists.

GRAEFENBERG

VEGETABLE

PILLS

AN ONLY DAUGHTER CURED OF CONSUMPTION.

When death was hourly expected, all remedies having failed, and Dr. H. James was experimenting with the many herbs of Calcutta, he accidentally made a preparation which cured his only child of Consumption. His child is now in this country, and enjoying the best of health. He has proved to the world that Consumption can be positively and permanently cured. The Doctor now gives this recipe free, only asking two three-cent stamps to pay expenses. This herb also cures night sweats, Nausea at the Stomach, and will break up a fresh cold in twenty-four hours. Address Craddock & Co., 1032 Race Street, Philadelphia, naming this paper. 4w33

A Thanksgiving.

For the wealth of pathless forests,
Whereon no axe may fall;
For the winds that haunt the branches;
The young bird's timid call;
For the red leaves dropped like rubies
Upon the dark green sod;
For the waving of the forests,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the sound of waters gushing
In bubbling beads of light;
For the fleets of snow-white lilies
Firm-anchored out of sight;
For the reeds among the eddies;
The crystal on the clod;
For the flowing of the rivers,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the rosebud's break of beauty
Along the toiler's way;
For the violet's eye that opens
To bless the new-born day;
For the bare twigs that in summer
Bloom like the prophet's rod;
For the blossoming of flowers,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the lifting up of mountains,
In brightness and in dread;
For the peaks where snow and sunshine
Alone have dared to tread;
For the dark of silent gorges,
Whence mighty cedars nod;
For the majesty of mountains,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the splendor of the sunsets,
Vast mirrored on the sea;
For the gold-fringed clouds, that curtain
Heaven's inner mystery;
For the molten bars of twilight,
Where thought leans, glad, yet awed;
For the glory of the sunsets,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the earth, and all its beauty;
The sky and all its light;
For the dim and soothing shadows,
That rest the dazzled sight;
For unfading fields and prairies,
Where sense in vain has trod;
For the world's exhaustless beauty,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For an eye of inward seeing;
A soul to know and love;
For these common aspirations,
That our high heirship prove;
For the hearts that bless each other
Beneath Thy smile, Thy rod;
For the amaranth saved from Eden,
I thank Thee, O my God!

For the hidden scroll, o'erwritten
With one dear Name adored;
For the Heavenly in the human;
The Spirit in the Word;
For the tokens of Thy presence
Within, above, abroad;
For Thine own great gift of Being,
I thank Thee, O my God!

MY LITTLE SWEETHEART.

"Uncle Harry, may I be your sweetheart?" asked Marian Sterling, lifting her big brown eyes to mine, with all the innocent frankness of her eight years of maidenhood.

"Indeed you may," I cried, stooping to lift her to my knee.

"No," she said, drawing back; "if I am your sweetheart I musn't sit on your lap, but beside you. You may kiss me, though, all the same, and call me May, but I will call you Harry. Mamma says you are not really our uncle, but we call you so because we love you."

"Quite true," I answered; "but if you are not to love me when you are my sweetheart, I shall retire."

"Oh, but I will! You see, Agnes has Tom Irving to love her and Janet has Tracy Hill. I tried very hard, but failed to get Tracy Hill to love me; then I thought of you, and perhaps you would bring me flowers and tell me I added to their beauty by wearing them, and sugar-plums, and say my lips were sweeter than sugar almonds, and take me to walk and to ride, and always, always be lovely to me!"

"But," I asked gravely, "what are you to give me?"

"Oh, I will work you a pair of slippers when I am big enough, and I'll kiss some of the sugar-plums and let you eat them, and I'll wear the flowers, and if there is any song you like very much I will practise it and learn it, if the accompaniment is not too hard."

"All right. It's a bargain. You are my little sweetheart and I your devoted adorer from this day," I cried. "But it seems to me, May, that for a lady of your age you know a good deal about the sweetheart question."

"Well, you see, uncle—no; you're not my uncle any more."

"Dear Harry," I suggested.

"Dear Harry, you see there is the drawing-room and there is the parlor, and if Tom Irving comes while Agnes is in the parlor, she says, 'Run up stairs, May, that's a good girl;' and when I get to the drawing-room I see Tracy Hill kissing Janet, and he mutters, 'There's that child again;' and I run into the kitchen, and Molly has John McCoy there; and I can't help seeing them all," she added, piteously.

"Exactly. And I think you are a very sensible child to start a courtship of your own. Will you allow me to drive you to the Grove this afternoon, Miss Marian?" I added with my very best society bow.

"Thank you, dear Harry," she said, with demure gravity. "I will go with pleasure."

So we commenced our flirtation, and never had any man a more piquant, lovely little sweetheart than I, Harry Montgomery, had for the three years I remained at Maxwellbrig, the village in which the Sterlings were leading people.

Mr. Sterling and my father had been friends for many years, and when I finished my medical studies, Mr. Sterling let me know there was a good opening for me at Maxwellbrig, and a warm welcome at his house, where Mrs. Sterling and the three girls made me at once "like one of the family."

My calf-love in its entirety and devotion was given to Janet, until I found she had a previous attachment, and I was dolorously weeping over the fact when Marian generously came to the rescue.

"What pleasant days we do have, dear Harry!" she said to me, when we were picnicking in the woods; "all the girls think I have the nicest beau in the world. And nobody has any idea who it is who helps me with my French and German, and shows me all about my Latin, and I go up over their heads because you make all my lessons so easy. It's not cheating if I really study all the same and do all my sums and exercises myself, is it?"

"No," I said, truthfully, for the child's own eager thirst for knowledge and hard work gave me only the pleasure of simplifying some of her lessons and defining some of the "hard words."

But when I had been nearly four years at Maxwellbrig my father obtained for me a diplomatic appointment in Germany, and there was a heart-breaking parting.

"It is not the drives and rides, and rowing and flowers and candies I'm crying for," sobbed my little sweetheart, "though Agnes pretends it is. It is because I'm going to lose you. You don't believe I love you just for those things, do you, dear Harry?"

"No, my little love," I said; "I believe you love me with all your pure young heart!"

"I do! I do! You will come back?"

"Yes, but I shall find you a grown-up lady with dozens of lovers."

"No; I'll have no other lover. If you marry I shall die! And here is my ivory-type and a curl of my hair, and I want yours."

I readily promised the exchange, and went to Germany, the ivory-type and curl set in a locket—the face promising rare beauty of the golden hair, brown-eyed type.

We corresponded, of course. At first the correspondence flourished, then it grew languid, finally died. I was engrossed with business and society; May was working through school, through society, and as a belle. Agnes and Janet, middle-aged matrons, left Marian the only daughter at home, and society was exacting. I heard of her a brilliant beauty, a musician of great talent, and a bright, sparkling conversationalist. I tried to fit this to my little sweetheart, and failed. I had lost my childish adorer.

But I was not fond of society, nor devoted to the duties of a cavalier. Perhaps Janet had left too deep a wound to heal, though I did not think so, when, ten years after our first meeting, I found her with a party of tourists, "doing the Continent," a loud-voiced, red-faced woman of fashion, who had left three little children at home while she displayed costly dresses and horrible French and German abroad. Tracy evidently preferred the society of the babies, as he was not one of the traveling party.

"Marian!" she said, when I inquired for all the home circle. "Why, Marian is in London. Didn't you know about Marian? Ah! Mrs. Agnew—good evening."

"Tell me," I entreated. "What about Marian? Is she married?"

"Bless me, no! Hasn't even a beau, as far as I know. May is so prim—cut out for an old maid. And she'll be worse than ever now. Excuse me. Mrs. Maitland is moving to the dressing-room, and I go in her carriage. Good night. Do come and see us." And her escort came up, and she sailed away. And it was not until ten minutes later I remembered that I had not asked for her address or Marian's.

I tried to repair this omission the next morning by visiting all the hotels and examining their registers. The only result was the assurance that the whole party had left Berlin that morning.

But the fates favored me. I dropped into a nice legacy, quite sufficient for the wants of a family of modest tastes, and I determined to go to England, home! It was a year since I had met Mrs. Hill in Germany. Was Marian still in London? My little sweetheart! Strange she had lingered always in my memory as the ideal woman of my bachelor fancy!

I determined to return at once and accept a long-standing invitation to visit my friend, Lord Loringer, at his place, Loringer Hall. I met with a most cordial welcome, and arriving just before dinner-hour, Lord Loringer hurried his own preparations and came to the room assigned to me.

"What good wind," he exclaimed, "blew you into England?"

I told him of my legacy, my resignation of my position, and of my return home.

"But you are absolutely your own master for the present?" he asked.

"Yes. Nobody expects me at home, as I was returning on that most idiotic principle—a surprise."

"Join us, then! We all start next week for a jaunt through France, Spain, Italy, perhaps up the Nile. We are not bound by any route, by any promises. We start a party of fourteen, everybody at leave if he prefers another route. We are to be joined by another party in Paris, Mr. and Mrs. Inglewood, Doctor Smith, and a Miss Marian Temple, who will probably prove the bore of the party."

"Why?"

"Oh, she is an old maid, a blue-stocking, and a poet. I forgave her her novel, 'Irmine,' but deliver me from a woman who writes verses and calls them 'Water-lilies.'"

"Now I should enjoy all the pleasures of novelty in meeting her," I exclaimed. "I have not one old maid on my visiting list, and I never had an hour's converse with a novelist—or is it a novelistess, or a poetess. You don't happen to have her books about you, do you?"

"You will find them on the library table, unless some one is reading them. There are several copies about, as most of our guests brought them."

I found them, as promised, on the library table, and after I got to my own room I opened the poems. The more I read, the more I was convinced that no old maid penned them. They were full of the fire, the genius, even the faults of youth, and some of them I seemed to have written myself. The leading one, "Water-lilies," brought back to me the lake where May and I had floated upon the transparent water, gathering the great, white, snowy treasures in profusion. I saw her sweet face dip into a great heap upon the floor of the boat and come up laughing, far sweeter than the most glorious blossom there. Then I saw her in the soft white evening dress, with the lilies trailing from her soft curls upon her pretty dimpled childish shoulders, dancing gleefully, the only little girl in the room, and with an admirer wearing a moustache—her devoted admirer.

And here it was and in musical verse, with a refrain of regret for the child-love gone forever.

It was far into the night when I slept, with the volume of "Water-lilies" tucked under my pillow, and at the first daylight I was picking out once more little scraps of memory—a drive we took to Marian's Falls, which Marian gravely assured me were named "years and years" before she was born; a walk we took, when I tucked up her curls in womanish fashion and twisted in sweetbrier, being piteously reproached a few hours later with making her "pull every hair out with those horrid thorns;" a ride we took to Silver Grove, where we pledged mutual faith and love in cups of lilies and vowed eternal constancy. Page after page brought my sweetheart to me, till I reached out my locket from my despatch box and put it round my neck, ready for any emergency—ready to swear with as much truth as most lovers' vows that it had never left my heart since her white hands first placed my treasure round my neck.

To Paris. We were en route at last. I knew my darling's verses by heart. I had read her novel twice, dreadfully disgusted both times by the fact that the heroine, who had brown eyes and golden hair, married a hero who bore not the faintest resemblance to me.

The party had engaged rooms for us at the hotel they were staying at, and one general drawing-room was to serve the entire party. Here, after making my dress an object of the most especial study, I went on the wings of love.

A lady stood by the window looking out, and I went forward timidly. She must be one of our party or she would not be there. Her dress—a Parisian marvel of taste and simplicity—was that of a jeune fille; her figure was tall, graceful and slender, and her golden hair was dressed with all the modern abominations. But she never stirred or turned until I stood close beside her, when she turned her full face to me. My darling's face, with all the little baby curls on her forehead, all the sweet innocence in the big brown eyes. It utterly unmanned me. For a moment I could not speak; then I held out my trembling hands, almost whispering, "My little sweetheart!"

Her eyes grew soft, lustrous, dewy.

"You have not forgotten?" she said.

"I have never forgotten. No other has taken for one hour your place in my heart. But you, beautiful and famous, with your talent"——

"Hush!" she said, softly. "Who gave me any of the gift you call talent? You, who taught me that books were not merely dreadful repetitions invented to torment schoolgirls, but preparations for future power of intellect; that lessons were not strings of words to be committed to memory, but stores of knowledge to be garnered and cherished. You roused my ambition, my hope, what power I have of expressing what my brain suggests."

"May," I said, gaining possession of the hands she had released, "you have traveled, seen the world, had your conquests; can I, dare I, hope I may still call you"——

She nestled into my bosom, her big eyes raised frankly to meet mine, and said, "Your little sweetheart, now and ever!"

"How I meant to torment you!" she told me, later, when, her soft loving emotion over, her sauciness regained sway. "I intended to win you back by all the arts of coquetry, of jealousy—for I have a lover or two, sir,—but my heart betrayed me when I saw your love in your eyes and knew that you had been faithful all these long years. Dear father and mother will be delighted; but perhaps I ought to tell you Janey is a widow."

"Then you guessed that secret, too?"

"You big goose, you were the family laughing-stock until I took pity on you."

"I'll believe as much as I please of that," I retorted. "You can never deny that you made the first advances."

FAMILY GOVERNMENT.

"William! stop that noise! I say, won't you stop? Stop! I tell you, or I'll slap your mouth!"

William bawls a little louder.

"William! I tell you, ain't you going to stop? Stop, I say! If you don't stop, I'll whip you, sure!"

William goes up a fifth and beats time with his heels.

"I never saw such a child! He's got temper enough for a whole town! I'm sure he didn't get it from me! Why don't you be still! Whist! whist! Come! come! be still, won't you? Stop! stop!! stop!!! I say. Don't you see this stick? See here now!" (Cuts the air with stick.)

William, more furious, kicks very manfully at his mother, grows redder in the face, lets out the last note, and begins to reel and shake and twist in a most spiteful manner.

"Come, William! Come, dear, that's a darling—naughty William! Come, that's a good boy; don't cry; p-o-o-r little fellow! sant ab-o-o-s-e you, sall eh? Ma's little man! want a piece of souger? Ma's little boy got cramps! p-o-o-r little sick boy," &c., &c.

William wipes up and minds, eats his sugar and stops.

After scene.—The minister is present, and a very nice talk is going on upon the necessity of governing children. "True, true!" says mamma, "some people will give up to their children, and it ruins them—every child should be governed. But, then, it won't do to carry it too far. If one whips all the time it will break a child's spirit. One ought to mix kindness and firmness together in managing children."

"I think so," said the preacher; "firmness first, and then kindness."

"Yes, sir, that's my practice, exactly."

VALUABLE HINTS.

A little lard or butter improves bread or cake made of Graham or Indian meal—it makes it more light and tender.

Soda or baking-powder biscuits must be handled as little and made as rapidly as possible.

Fresh lard is better than butter to grease cake-pans.

Ink stains on mahogany or black walnut furniture may be removed by touching the stains with a feather wet in a solution of nitre and water—eight drops to a spoonful of water. As soon as the spots disappear rub the place at once with a wet cloth in cold water. If the ink stains then remain, repeat, making the solution stronger.

Silver that is not in use may be kept from tarnishing by burying it in a box or barrel of oatmeal.

Pencil marks can easily be removed from walls, wood-work and marble by rubbing with a damp woolen cloth and a little sapolio.

Fine wire milk-pail strainers that become stopped up may be readily cleaned by rubbing with a damp cloth dipped into baking soda.—Rural New Yorker.

According to a current story, there are other ways of capturing wild geese than by shooting them. It is stated a Chautauqua hunter scooped the inside out of a large pumpkin, cut a couple of holes through which he could see, and slipping the shell over his head waded out to where a flock was swimming, unconscious of danger. Grabbing a goose by the legs he gently drew her under, and so proceeded until none were left to tell the tale.

Little Lucy fell and hurt her knee badly, which her mother, when she went to bed in the dark, tried to bandage. Soon the little one was heard calling: "Mamma," said she, "this bandage is not in the right place. I fell down higher up."

"There's some things as old as the hills anyhow," said Uncle Reuben. "What are they?" asked his niece. "They're the valleys between 'em, child," solemnly answered the old man.

Prescience.

The new moon hung in the sky, the sun was low in the west,
And my betrothed and I in the church-yard paused to rest—
Happy maiden and lover, dreaming the old dream over;
The light winds wandered by, and robins chirped from the nest.

And lo! in the meadow-sweet was the grave of a little child,
With a crumbling stone at the feet and the ivy running wild—
Tangled ivy and clover folding it over and over;
Close to my sweetheart's feet was the little mound up-piled.

Stricken with nameless fears, she shrank and clung to me,
And her eyes were filled with tears for a sorrow I did not see:
Lightly the winds were blowing, softly her tears were flowing—
Tears for the unknown years and a sorrow that was to be!

—T. B. Aldrich, in Harper's for December.

THE EDITOR AND THE SHOEMAKER.

One day an editor, hard at work trying to devise a plan to make delinquent subscribers pay their dues, was called upon by a shoemaker who dropped in to give the editor some valuable hints on running a newspaper. The editor, overjoyed at the opportunity, gave the man his best cane bottom chair, handed him a fresh cigar and listened attentively. Quoth the shoemaker, as he lit the weed: "Your paper needs a hundred improved features. You don't grasp the topics of the day by the right handle; you don't set the locals in the right kind of type; your telegraph news is too thin, even the paper itself is poorly manufactured, not thick enough and of too chalky a white; you don't run enough matter, and what you do run ain't of the right sort; your ideas about protective tariffs are infernally foolish, and your stand on the Conkling matter was bad, bad. I tell you these things because I want to see you succeed. I tell you as a friend. I don't take your paper myself, but I see it once in a while, and as a paper is a public affair I suppose I have as good a right to criticise as anybody. If a man wants to give me advice I let him; I'm glad to have him, in fact."

"That's exactly it," said the editor, kindly; "I always had a dim idea of my shortcomings, but never had them so clearly and convincingly set forth as by you. It is impossible to express my gratitude for the trouble you have taken, not only to find out these facts, but to point them out also. Some people knowing all these things perhaps, nearly as well as you, are mean enough to keep them to themselves. Your suggestions come in a most appropriate time; I have wanted somebody to lean on as it were, for some weeks. Keep your eye on the paper, and when you see a weak spot come up."

The shoemaker left, happy to know that his suggestions had been received with such a Christian spirit. Next day, just as he was finishing a boot, the editor came in, and, picking up the mate, remarked:

"I want to tell you how that boot strikes me. In the first place the leather is poor; the stitches in the sole are too wide apart, and in the uppers too near the edge. Those uppers will go to pieces in two weeks. It's all wrong, my friend, putting poor leather in the heels and smoothing it over with grease and lamp-black. Everybody complains of your boots; they don't last; the legs are too short, the toes too narrow and the instep too high. How you can have the gall to charge twelve dollars for such boots beats me. Now, I tell you this as a friend, because I like to see you succeed. Of course I don't know any more about shoemaking than you do about a newspaper, but still I take an interest in you because you are so well disposed to me. In fact—"

Here the exasperated cobbler grabbed a lapstone, and the editor gained the street, followed by old knives, pinchers, hammers and awls, sent after him by the wrathful cobbler, who, on regaining his seat, swore by the nine gods, that no impertinent, lop-eared idiot should ever come round trying to teach him his trade.

THE SECRET OF SILENCE.—Have you learned the secret of silence? Silence under injuries, when speech would breed wrath; amid discouragements when it would spread fear? Silence through well-doing, which speech would mar by telling; after successes, to trumpet which were to fail? There are times enough for speech: times when silence is false, cowardly, treacherous. To know when to be silent, and how to be silent, neither defiantly nor artfully, but gently, truly and strongly; a silence of the mouth uncontradicted by look of the face or thought of the heart; this is one of the finest of the fine arts, one of the most beautiful of the beauties of holiness. "He shall not strive nor cry; neither shall any man hear his voice in the streets."

The farmers of Maine ought to put up a monument in honor of the caterpillars which devastated their apple orchards a few years ago; for since that time the trees have regularly borne in what are elsewhere "off years." This year's crop of apples in Maine is enormous, the quality is superb, and the farmers are getting $3 a barrel at their own doors, owing to the scarcity everywhere else.

"Ma," she said confidingly, "Henry has asked me to marry him." "And you accepted?" was the query. "No," was the reply, "I didn't, and neither did I reject him. If I can keep him on the string until Christmas he'll make me a handsome present to induce me to say, 'yes.' You know I've been wanting a gold watch for a long time."

The best things nearest: breath in your nostrils, light in your eyes, flowers at your feet, duties at your hands, the path of God just before you. Then do not grasp at stars, but do life's plain common work as it comes, certain that daily duties and daily bread are the sweetest things of life.

An Austin boy came home from school very much excited and told his father he believed all human beings were descended from apes, which made the old man so mad that he replied angrily: "That may be the case with you, but it ain't with me; I can tell you that, now."

Why is a stylish girl like a rifle range? Because—oh, dear, we wish we hadn't begun this one—because—oh, shakey, you know; because—boo-hoo, boo-hoo! Because there is a bang at one end and a bustle at the other. —Burlington Hawkeye.

Men are apt to mistake the strength of their feeling for the strength of their argument. The heated mind resents the chill touch and the relentless scrutiny of logic.—Gladstone.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 26, 1881.

We shall be happy to give Representative Peck of Wilbraham the use of our columns to explain his vote for the $150 salary grab.

How many members of our Legislature ever earned $15 a day? And how many of them expect ever again to receive [we won't say earn] even $10 a day?

The ten-days' extra session of our Legislature has cost the State over $30,000. We hope the re-revised statutes are enough better to pay for it, but we doubt it.

Mahone is talked of as a possible member of the President's new cabinet. Why not? The lively Virginian would make a capital department head if he is half as good an executive officer as he is politician.

It is authoritatively announced by the Kennebec Journal that Secretary Blaine is not a candidate for Congress, the Senate, the Maine governorship, or any other position. but will devote himself entirely to his private affairs when he retires from the cabinet next month. Mr. Blaine will, however, doubtless find time to devote some attention to the cultivation of his presidential prospects.

President Arthur is reported to have expressed his purpose to make no removals except for cause, and then only after an opportunity has been given to answer any charges that may be made against an accused official. The President has also refused to allow a delegation of Southern carpet-baggers to present their "claims" to a cabinet position. If he keeps on in this line, President Arthur may make the greatest practical civil service reformer the country has ever had.

Hundreds of people visited the jail at Washington last Sunday, and the guards interviewed Guiteau for their benefit, while he was afterwards permitted to step into the corridor to satisfy the curiosity of the gaping crowd, saluting the people in military style when he retired. Is there no sense of decency about the jail officers? Such an exhibition of the egotistical brute is inexcusable and scandalous, and the officers who permit it need a sharp lesson on official propriety.

Another attempt was made on Guiteau's life last Saturday, while on his way from the court house to the jail in the prison van. A horseman rode up and peered through the rear of the van to see where Guiteau was, and then galloping around to the side, he fired at the prisoner. The ball grazed Guiteau's arm, but did no other harm than to frighten him badly. The horseman made his escape, but subsequently Wm. Jones, an eccentric farmer living near the capital, was arrested and identified as the assailant. Extra guards now escort Guiteau to and from the court house, and he will probably be kept safe from another assault. It is plainly the duty of the government to give him all the protection necessary to preserve him from violence, worthless as his life may be.

The Legislature completed its work upon the revised statutes last Saturday, and adjourned after a session of only 10 days. An attempt was made in the House on Friday to make the pay of the members $150 for these 10 days, and it was declared carried by a rising vote of 54 to 43. A call for the yeas and nays, however, resulted in a hasty adjournment, and on Saturday the House voted down the proposition by a vote of 100 to 40. Ten members from Western Massachusetts voted for the grab, including C. E. Peck of Wilbraham, J. Bumstead and H. M. Coney of Springfield, and J. H. Wright of Holyoke, the latter being the only re-elected member of the lot. The Senate bill, fixing the pay of members at $100, with mileage, was adopted, and it was voted that the members should each receive two copies of the revised statutes.

Interviews with some of the officers of the 9th regiment are published, in which the captains all say that none of their men behaved disorderly in Richmond. The officers consider the testimony against their men "frivolous and insignificant," and say the Richmond people seemed to retain some of their old vindictive feeling against the men in blue, and especially against the Massachusetts troops. The officers of the 9th regiment are apparently completely blinded to the faults of their men, and talk as positively of their gentlemanly conduct as they did before the investigation. But we have had enough whitewash. The report of the commission was conclusive, and all that remains now to be done is the punishment of the rowdies who disgraced their uniform. If their names cannot be ascertained, then the whole regiment, innocent and guilty alike, must suffer together.

The trial of Guiteau will pass into history as one of the most extraordinary on record, and in many respects the most horrible and indecent. The other day a portion of the fractured backbone of the dead President was exhibited in the court room and passed around among the lawyers and jurymen—a ghastly exhibition which was wholly without excuse. Then, too, the conduct of Guiteau is a public disgrace. He practically runs the whole court. He speaks whenever he chooses, interrupts lawyers and witnesses, gives directions to the officers, and is hardly silent five minutes at a time, talks blasphemously about his alliance with the Diety, and gets off grim jokes which bring shouts of laughter from the grinning assembly. Such a travesty on law and order is shameful, and Guiteau should be kept silent even if he has to be gagged. He may be insane, but there is a wonderful method in his madness, and his own attempts to prove his insanity are the best arguments for his sanity. Mr. Scoville is now conducting his defense alone, Mr. Robinson having withdrawn from the case on Monday.

LOCAL NOTICES.

W. R. Milligan says he has no time to distribute circulars through the surrounding villages, but is giving as big bargains in boots and shoes as can be described on any circular.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The sleds are out.

Advent Sunday to-morrow.

The sun don't rise now until after 7 o'clock.

Snow shovels had an airing Thursday morning.

The days are within 21 minutes of their shortest.

The schools in town will begin their winter terms next Monday.

The thermometer was down to 10 degrees above zero Wednesday morning.

Yesterday was the fine-promising "almanac day" for December weather.

Rev. Benjamin Stanton of East Albany, N. Y., is to be the preacher at the Congregational church to-morrow.

Rev. J. W. Searll of South Framingham will preach to-morrow at the Baptist churches in this place and Three Rivers.

Rev. S. G. Smith, formerly of this place, has accepted his call to Passaic, N. J., and begins his pastorate to-morrow.

The annual meeting of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural society will be held at the Weeks House on Monday, Dec. 5th.

A freight car got off the track in the B. & A. R. R. yard Thursday morning, delaying several freight trains an hour or so.

M. Fox delighted the hearts and stomachs of the children at the State Primary School on Thursday, by a contribution of four bushels of peanuts.

Holbrook's coal team took a lively sail through Main street yesterday forenoon without a driver, but the horses were soon stopped and no harm done.

Thomas Blanchard has sold his horse "Freeman" to New York parties. It is understood that he received another horse in exchange, and $3500 in cash.

Guy A. McIlvain of Charlestown, N. H., has become telegraph operator at the New London Northern depot, in place of E. S. Bardwell, who has gone to South Vernon.

Thanksgiving travel has made railroad trains heavy and late this week, and several of the Boston & Albany trains required two locomotives on Wednesday to take them through.

Tub butter now sells at 35 cents, and ball butter at 38, while the latter is very scarce at that price. Eggs bring 35 cents a dozen. The markets have disposed of a large amount of turkeys this week at 22 cents per pound.

We would inform "Inquirer" that the savory compound with which the interior of every respectable Thanksgiving turkey is filled, is denominated "dressing." The "stuffing" is no longer found in turkeys, but in those who eat them.

The meetings of the Golden Rule Alliance are now held once a month, and are very pleasant social occasions. At the last meeting Dr. Warren gave an interesting description of Venice, and there were also other literary exercises.

Van Amburgh's menagerie, which exhibited in Palmer in the autumn, was sold at auction recently in Amenia, N. Y. Forepaugh took $17,500 worth of the animals, paying $7100 for the five-ton elephant Bolivar, and $2450 for the rhinoceros.

The New London Northern Railroad has contracted for 2300 tons of steel rails, which will be laid in the spring between Willimantic and Palmer. The road will then have steel rails for the entire distance between New London and this place.

Charles Upham has struck a fine spring on the hill back of his house at Blanchardville, at the depth of eight feet. He carried it down four feet further into the rock, and has just put in some log pipe to carry the water to his house, giving him an excellent and unfailing supply.

Rev. T. C. Russell, late pastor of the Baptist churches in this place and Three Rivers, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Baptist church at Springvale, a thriving manufacturing town in Maine, and will probably begin his labors there the first Sunday in December.

The New York Publishing Co. are about beginning a canvass for a directory of this town, which they propose to publish shortly. It will contain the name of every taxpayer, a list of churches and other organizations, and a copy will be furnished free to each taxpayer in town.

The drawing room car on the express train going west at 11.02 a. m. now stops at Syracuse, N. Y., where sleeping cars are attached at 7.15 p. m., instead of waiting until Rochester is reached, two and a half hours later. The new arrangement went into effect on Monday, and will be a welcome one to through travelers.

A snow storm set in Wednesday afternoon and continued through the evening, covering the ground to the depth of about four inches. A few people improved the opportunity Thursday morning to take out their sleighs and polish up the runners, but the sleighing was not very nice, and what little there was was not improved by the warm midday sun.

Conductor Downer, of the New London Northern road, is level-headed. Instead of going off, like Conductor Sanders, on a three weeks' racket in the summer, he goes to the legislature every year and spends the winter in the Capitol city. This shows the difference between a salt water diet and the eccentricities of Massachusetts cider.—Willimantic Journal.

Palmer people are not much given to marrying and giving in marriage these days, for some reason. Perhaps the scarcity of clergymen in the village has something to do with their backwardness, and if this be so, the churches are assuming a grave responsibility in thus delaying the full accomplishment of youth's fond dreams, by their neglect in securing pastors.

A Norwich lawyer, Louis Rivard, has entered suits against the New London Northern, and nearly every other railroad in Connecticut, for not conforming to the law concerning water closets at stations. He has made a thorough tour of the State in looking up the evidence, and apparently has a sure thing of it. The penalty is $100 for each violation, the money to go to the informer, but Rivard generously proposes to give the State half the money, and even then has enough suits to bring him in $5000 or more.

Roller skaters have again had a chance to display their skill this week, Wales Hall having been opened for the purpose on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings, under the management of Messrs. Hopson & Hall. They have decided to remain here to-day (Saturday) also, and will have a session from 10 a. m. to 12 for children, and the regular afternoon and evening sessions. The new floor which has been laid in the hall since last season is said by the managers to be as good as any rink floor, making the skating easier and much more pleasant. If enough encouragement is offered them they may be induced to stay another week.

Thanksgiving day opened with cloudy skies and snowflakes in the air, but the clouds broke away in the forenoon, and the day was as pleasant as could have been desired, barring the sloppiness in the middle of the day. No religious services were held in the village. The places of business were closed in the afternoon, and the day passed off quietly, only four men indulging in so much liquid thanksgiving as to get into the lock-up. In the evening the dramatic club presented "Blow for Blow" at Wales Hall. Nearly every seat in the hall was taken, and the play was rendered in an excellent manner, to the enjoyment and full satisfaction of the large audience.

The question of calling a pastor at the Congregational church was brought no nearer a settlement at the meeting of the church Tuesday evening, than at the meeting last week. The formal ballot showed 48 votes for Rev. A. F. Newton, 4 for Rev. John Willard, 1 for Rev. J. L. Scudder, and 19 blank. An attempt was made to secure a unanimous call for Mr. Newton by a rising vote, but the result showed 45 for and 12 against the proposition. After considerable discussion, the meeting voted to have the committee request Mr. Newton and Mr. Scudder to supply the pulpit again, one Sabbath each, and then adjourned.

Alfred R. Barker, formerly of this place, was on Tuesday expelled from the Hampden bar by the superior court at Springfield, for unprofessional conduct. It was shown that he last year collected a note for Mrs. Dunkel, administratrix of her husband's estate, and gave her a worthless check for $400, afterwards making over to her his office effects, including his law books, which were found to belong to the estate of the late Judge Allen. His retention of insurance money collected for Montraville Ackert was also put in evidence. Barker displayed some feeling in making his defense. He said he had never intended to deprive his clients of their money, but had been the victim of unfortunate circumstances, and had done the best he knew how. The court stated that his course in the Dunkel case was sufficient to show unprofessional conduct. Barker is now held for breaking jail and as a poor debtor, but it is understood an attempt is to be made to secure bail for him.

At Tuesday's session of the probate court in this village the following business was transacted: Administration granted on the estates of—William F. Capen of Ludlow, Nancy S. Wilder administratrix; Alexander Goodman of Palmer, Gabriel Goodman administrator; Samantha L. Peirce of Springfield, Benjamin F. Peirce administrator; Samuel D. Shaw of Palmer, S. S. Taft administrator. Wills approved of—Joseph Larrive of Springfield, Louise P. Larrive executrix; Ann Ricketts of Wales, William J. Ricketts executor. Accounts filed on the estates of—George H. Back, Mary F. Knowlton and others, Rizpah Powers. A petition for license to mortgage real estate on the estate of Anna S. Tapley, late of Springfield, was granted, and a license to sell land on the estate of Rosa S. Carpenter of Holland. Phillip P. Potter, Enos Calkins and George A. Keefe were appointed commissioners to make a partition of certain real estate in Palmer, owned in common by Thomas Jenks, Amanda Green, Chloe Walker and Cynthia Capen. Ada L. Clee was appointed guardian of Hattie Louise Wellman of Monson.

THORNDIKE.

The bricklayers have commenced work on the new cotton house.

Workmen are also busy in setting up the machinery in the new factory.

The seven large double tenement houses that have just been built will be ready to accommodate the employes of the new mill.

Rev. Charles H. Ricketts occupied the pulpit of the Union church, Three Rivers, last Sabbath. Rev. W. G. Tuttle of Ware will preach in the Congregational church next Sunday.

WILBRAHAM.

The academy closed on Tuesday for a two-weeks' vacation.

Union Thanksgiving services were held at the Methodist church, Rev. T. B. Smith, the pastor, preaching the sermon.

Last Sunday was the 25th anniversary of Rev. M. S. Howard's ordination as a Congregational minister. Mr. Howard has been settled for 13 years in this place, where he is greatly respected and loved, and had previously been settled at West Yarmouth, South Darthmouth and Groveland.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

A large flock of wild geese flew into Nine-Mile pond Saturday afternoon, but none were seen to depart.

Just before the last heavy frosts E. J. Sikes had an apple tree in full bloom. The buds were of bright color, and very fragrant.

Business was generally suspended Thursday, and devoted to the annual family gatherings. Union services were held at the Memorial church in the morning.

The rag cutters at the paper mill were out on a strike Monday, but nearly all returned on the old pay. They demanded an advance from 40 to 60 cents per hundred pounds.

WALES.

F. L. Burley has recovered sufficiently to be on our streets once more.

The old hotel building recently sold is having a new covering of shingles.

Our stove dealer reports double the business this Fall of any year for five years.

Dimick Willis is canvassing the town, selling boots and shoes for Mr. Gibbons of Palmer.

Mrs. David Coley advertises her farm and stock for sale at auction to-day, at 2 o'clock p. m.

Erasmus D. Shaw, who has driven the mail team for a good many years, is visiting friends in Worcester and vicinity.

Constable Farrington's horse had a little diversion in attempting to run away a few days since, but was luckily stopped before any damage was done.

WARREN.

Another dance at the town hall Wednesday evening.

The copartnership between Bliss & Keyes is dissolved.

Most of the schools close next week for a vacation of three or four weeks.

The musical society met last Tuesday evening, and are to organize for the Winter.

Rev. Mr. Sanderson preached in the Congregational church on Thanksgiving day.

The pump works are obliged to run nights, on account of the increase in their business.

James Hill bid off the lots on Crescent street, sold at auction, last Saturday, and Mr. Otis the tenement house.

Blake & Co. gave each of their employes a turkey for Thanksgiving, it taking about two hundred to supply them all.

The spile driving at the Methodist church is completed, and the workmen are busy at work to complete the structure. The chimney had to be rebuilt,

The Methodists observed last Sabbath as Harvest Sunday, with an appropriate sermon in the morning by the pastor, and a concert in the evening. The hall was decorated with flowers, and a table was filled with different kinds of fruits.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

The Irish Land League now numbers a round hundred.

The Evangelical Sunday school has added some thirty books to its library, which will be ready to be taken out Sunday. The school has just lost one of its librarians, A. H. Halford, who has removed to Ludlow.

Thursday's programme consisted of a service at the Evangelical church at 10.30 a. m., and high mass at St. Aloysius church at 8 a. m. Requiem high mass at St. Mathew's church was celebrated at 10.30 for the late Rev. James Fitzgerald, late pastor of the church, who died a year ago.

It is announced that Alderman J. K. Wight will not serve another year, and there is a good deal of guesswork as to who will be the Republican candidate this year. Lots of men are mentioned, some of whom would not poll a dozen votes. When it comes to nominating, however, the boys will probably rally round postmaster E. D. Chapman.

The other night one of our young men, accompanied by a lady, was driving to attend a dance at Ludlow, and in the faint light he saw right beside the road a beautiful black and white cat. On the impulse of the moment, and from force of habit, he gave it a cut with his whip. That was the cause, and as it was not a cat, the reader can imagine the effect. When they got into the hall—but we refrain.

BELCHERTOWN.

John S. Green, who died at South Belchertown Wednesday morning, had lived with the wife of his youth for 58 years, having been married at the age of 17, his bride being 15.

The Grand Army post began with a ball on Wednesday evening a series of entertainments to be given during the winter, for the purpose of raising a relief fund for the poor and deserving soldiers and sailors of the town. An anonymous friend has presented the post with $100 during the past week.

The Farmers and Mechanics' club have elected these officers for the ensuing year: President, A. R. Owen; vice presidents, Dwight Shumway, Addison Bennett, Nathaniel Dwight; treasurer, W. E. Bridgman; secretary, Guy C. Allen; directors, G. H. B. Green, Ansel Shaw, Myron Barton, R. K. Shumway, Howard C. West.

Mr. and Mrs. Butler were surprised at their home last week Thursday evening by some thirty of their friends and acquaintances, it being the twenty-fifth anniversary of their wedding, and more than one hundred dollars' worth of silver-ware was presented them. Among some of the most valuable gifts were a silver service, ice pitcher, salver and cups, cake basket, fruit dish, etc. A collation was provided and all partook at the bountifully spread table. Mr. Butler is a successful merchant in New Haven, Ct., and he and his family have many friends, who were glad on this occasion to show their friendship and respect for them.

THREE RIVERS.

The churches being without pastors, there were no services Thanksgiving day.

It is expected that Prof. W. S. Karr, of the Hartford Theological Seminary, will preach in the Union church next Sunday.

Rev. T. C. Russell advertises to sell his horse and buggy, carryall, sleigh and other articles at auction next Wednesday at 2 p. m., or on the next fair day, if Wednesday is stormy.

In the second intermediate school the following scholars have had no marks during the term: Amy Graves, Ernest Lord, Eddie Longtine, Thomas Longtine, Etta Ruggles, Emma McMaster, Lillian Robbins, Katie Twiss, George Warriner.

F. W. Perry has organized a new brass band of about 15 pieces. This is the fourth brass band that has been organized in this village during the past three or four years. The first two soon played out. The third, the Three Rivers Cornet Band, is progressing finely under the leadership of Henry Dumas, and recently appeared upon the street in fine new uniforms.

The Y. M. C. A. have arranged for the first three lectures in their course, but have not been able to complete the arrangements for the other three, but hope to do so soon. The first lecture will be delivered Dec. 9th by Gen. John L. Swift. Subject: "Tadpoles, or The Coming Yankee." The second, January 6th, by Prof. Kimpton of Boston University, on "Eyes that See." The third by Prof. R. H. Mather, of Amherst college, January 20th. Subject: "Joan of Arc." The association have put the price of season tickets at $1 for six lectures, and ought to have full houses.

MONSON.

St. Patrick's choir had a good house Wednesday evening, and gave a very enjoyable entertainment.

Mrs. Eunice Smith, the oldest person in town, died last Saturday at the age of 93 years and 9 months.

James Wyllie, the champion checker player, opened a series of games with local players at Central Hall last night.

The young people have kept the rollers busy this week at Central Hall, and surely this is an amusement innocent, healthy and enjoyable.

M. F. Newton has returned to town. He left the whaling party in Missouri. From thence they come east into Illinois, then south to New Orleans.

Central market made a fine display of Thanksgiving fixtures this week; and G. L. Keeney, the druggist, has received a fine lot of fruit, nuts and confectionery.

Fox hunting and roller skating were the principal amusements Thanksgiving day. The "merrie notes of the hounds" were heard on every hill, and the rink was crowded all day and evening with a jolly set of skaters.

On Wednesday evening about fifty friends and neighbors of William H. Rogers reminded him of his forty-first birthday by a surprise, and left behind, as a token of their regard and esteem, presents and money to the amount of $114.

The next entertainment in the Star Course comes Nov. 30th, by "The Favorites," a good comedy company, who will give two popular plays full of fun, wit and laughter. Tickets for the remaining four entertainments may be had at the post office for $1.20.

Arthur Tucker, the young son of Joel M. Tucker, met with a painful accident last week. While riding home from a neighbor's on horseback his horse stumbled and fell upon him, breaking his leg near the hip. The horse was also injured internally, so that he died the same night.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Schools begin again a week from Monday.

Winter apples at $3 per barrel, and good ones, too.

The old chapel building is on the rise. J. B. Root is doing the work.

The recent rains have filled the springs and streams so that they are in good condition for winter.

The water was up within fourteen inches of the top of the wall on the east side of the new dam last Sunday.

Thanksgiving concert by the Congregational Sunday school next Sunday evening at the club rooms.

The Methodist society are holding weekly meetings Saturday evenings with Malcom Campbell, on Eddy street.

John W. Clark was unanimously elected delegate to attend the convention of the Irish National Land League of America, to be held at Chicago Nov. 30th.

Runaways are quite common of late, and Hitchcock & Osgood's meat cart was considerably demolished by one the past week, and meat fell very rapidly for a time.

The fence is up in front of the new Congregational church parlors on Church street, and the lot is being graded and turfed over, the fence being similar to that about the library lot adjoining.

Miss Mary A. B. Davis, for several years teacher in our public schools, was married to Myron L. Harwood on Thanksgiving evening by Rev. A. J. Hall. A large circle of friends were present to congratulate them.

Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Gates started Tuesday for a month's journey and visit South. They will visit the exposition at Atlanta, Ga., where their son, whom they visit, resides. They expect to return by way of Tennessee.

The lecture by Rev. Henry G. Spaulding, last week Friday, was listened to very closely by a good-sized audience. Lectures of this character, illustrated by the stereopticon, are among the best sources of education, and it ought to have been listened to by all.

The ground in front of the Methodist church has been graded and covered with loam, presenting a much better appearance, as well as being much nicer for those who pass over it. The work was done by the Improvement Society lately organized in the church.

We understand the Methodist society is in so prosperous a condition that every pew in their house of worship is rented, and still there is a call for more. To meet the demand the interior of the church is to be remodeled, removing the gallery to make room for pews, and arranging for the choir at the other end of the church, by the side of the pulpit.

Dr. C. S. Millette died on Tuesday morning of congestion of the lungs. He had not been well for some time, but was able to be about, attending to his business, and in fact ate his dinner as well as usual on Monday, and being of a robust and florid appearance no one thought he was so near his end. His body was sent to his home in Canada for burial.

P. O'Neil Larkin was met at the depot on Tuesday night and escorted through the street by a procession formed of the A. O. H., Oregon Engine Co., and the Ware branch of the National Land League, headed by the cornet band. The procession was lighted by about one hundred torches. Mr. Larkin spoke on the land war in Ireland to a fair audience, who seemed well pleased with his lecture.

The reference department in the library rooms is getting to be an important addition to our educational facilities. Many new books are being added from time to time One of the latest, and one that may be consulted by all classes with profit, is "Knight's American Mechanical Dictionary," giving a description of tools, instruments, machines, processes, and engineering; history of inventions, general technological vocabulary, etc., illustrated with upwards of 7,000 engravings.

The county commissioners were in town the 18th inst., called here to re-locate some of our streets. They viewed the same, and are to have a hearing Dec. 15th. One of the points in controversy is the corner of Water and South streets. It is claimed that if the land is taken to the line of the new survey it will spoil a valuable lot, and if an amount equal to its value is to be paid, it will be more expense than benefit to the town. It is hoped and expected that a compromise may be effected that will be satisfactory to all parties.

The annual meeting of the Ware Mission band was held in the temperance rooms Monday evening. This organization was formed seven years ago for the purpose of holding religious services in the school house at the four corners in district No. 7, in Hardwick Weekly, and a part of the time semi-weekly meetings were held, with a Sabbath school, and during the summer months a preaching service on Sunday, but the population of the district has so changed and diminished that the organization disbanded Monday evening. During the seven years the expenses of the mission have been over $432 for teams, while many were furnished by individuals. The money has been raised by subscription. The Sabbath school is to be continued in charge of Rollie D. Newton.

Representative Bumstead of Springfield tells how he happened to vote in favor of that $150 salary raid on the treasury, in these words:

"Two-thirds of those fellows agreed to vote for the $150, but when their names were called they didn't dare come up to the scratch Neither did the man who said the most to me about voting for the measure. My name came before his, and I was put on record for it according to contract, but he dodged the issue."

This is an impressive beginning. Now let's see if the other fellows will furnish an equally convincing vindication?

The Pacific National Bank at Boston closed its doors last week Friday, being swamped by the poor management of its president, A. I. Benyon, who has been carrying Theodore C. Weeks, a stock speculator who has failed, owing the bank some $500,000. On Saturday the Central National Bank, which had been helping the Pacific bank by re-discounting for it, was obliged to stop payment for a short time, but arrangements were soon made to tide the bank over its difficulties, and business was resumed.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company is making an effort to abolish the popular use of the word "depot." The word "station" is to be used on its lines henceforth, and even the great "Union Depot" at Pittsburgh is hereafter to be known as the "Union Station."

The thirty-fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs in Brooklyn, N. Y., occurred last week Saturday, and his congregation showed their appreciation of him by presenting him with $35,000.

A Wabash passenger train went through a bridge near Springfield, Ill., Friday week, falling 20 feet into a creek and injuring 15 passengers.

Postal cards spoiled by printing or otherwise will not be longer redeemed by the government after Feb. 1.

A crazy woman at Strafford, N. H., on Sunday murdered her grandchild, and committed suicide.

The butter, cheese, egg and milk business of this country is estimated to be worth $40,000,000 a year.

The report of Postmaster General James shows that the total expenditures of his department for the year ending June 30 were $39,251,736; receipts, $36,785,397; deficit, $2,481,129. He estimates a deficit the next year of only $920,077. The number of postage stamps issued was 954,128,450, and of postal cards 308,536,500. The number of post-offices June 30 was 44,519, of which only 1,863 are filled by the President. Among his leading recommendations are, that the department be made self-sustaining at the earliest moment; that letter postage be reduced to two cents within two or three years; that the fees on money orders be reduced to five cents on $5 and less, and that the maximum limit of a money order be $100 instead of $50; a device by which an order for less than $5 may be purchased for three cents; a system of postal savings banks; a commission to reorganize the service; a system of pensions for men disabled or the heirs of employes killed in the postal railway service.

A hundred men employed in a New York cigar factory struck last week because a girl 17 years old had been promoted into their room with increased pay. The girl was the daughter of a dead fellow-workman, and had an old mother to support, while the employers offered to refer the matter to a mixed arbitration board which has for years arranged all differences in the factory, but the brutes insisted that the girl must go, or they would, and the owners, to their credit be it said, let them go, increasing the girl's pay to the same the men had received. It is not always capital that is trying to oppress labor.

The Boston Journal is one of the very best and most enterprising of our New England papers, and its many excellencies are very fairly stated in its prospectus in another column. That its merits are appreciated by the people is fully attested by its prosperity, and with its new presses and outfit it is better fitted than ever before to do its work well and promptly, as it always does.

The plan of counteracting the bad influences of the dram shops by means of cheap coffee houses has proved a failure in New York. The two restaurants of the New York Coffee House company were closed last week for want of patronage. In London and other English cities the coffee houses have been very successful.

John H. Howard of Burlington, Vt., who last week gave the Home for Destitute Children a $125,000 building, has this week given $20,000 to Vermont University, to be expended in remodeling its buildings. His gifts to the university for the past year now aggregate $70,000.

Heavy rains at the West, especially in some parts of Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, have greatly damaged the railways and seriously interrupted travel. Communication between Chicago and St. Louis was practically cut off last Saturday.

Prof. Remsen, who was employed to investigate the cause of the offensive taste and odor of Boston's water supply, has reported that the troubles complained of are due to the presence and decay of fresh-water sponge.

A careless New York workman hung a lot of dynamite cartridges over a steam pipe to dry on Monday. The result was a terrific explosion, which wrecked doors and windows in 55 houses in the vicinity.

The State Board of Agriculture will hold its country meeting at Bridgewater, Dec. 6, 7 and 8, with a number of interesting lectures and discussions by leading agriculturists and scientists.

The Atlas Fire Ins. Co. of Hartford has been notified by the Connecticut insurance commissioner to wind up its affairs, or make good the deficiency in its assets within thirty days.

The latest report in regard to the New York & New England Railroad is that Jay Gould has got control of it, with a view to making it the eastern end of a big continental line.

Seven Bowdoin students have been sued for $10,000 each for hazing a Freshman. The suit is brought by the father of the boy, whose eyes are seriously injured.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

Faded or gray hair gradually recovers its youthful color and luster by the use of Parker's Hair Balsam, an elegant dressing, admired for its purity and rich perfume. n

CATARRH is a poisonous infection of the mucous membrane, just as small-pox is a virus of the blood. Catarrhal virus can only be reached and exterminated by antidotal, inoculative elements, that are obsorbed by the purulent mucous. DR. WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE is unquestionably the most important medical discovery since vaccination. It never fails. Supplied by druggists, or delivered by D. B. Dewey & Co., 46 Dey St., New York, at $1 a package. Pamphlets, with full instructions, mailed free. n

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. In ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it. Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

A GREETING TO OLD AND NEW FRIENDS.

The Boston Weekly Journal has long enjoyed the deserved reputation of being the representative newspaper of its class in the New England States. It has a constituency second to none in numbers and intelligence, and is each year commanding a wider field of influence. Its success among the reading classes of New England has been due to the liberal policy of its management, to the care and skill employed in its preparat on, to its extensive sources of information, to the variety and timeliness of its contents, and to the acknowledged honesty of its views. These qualities, upon which any newspaper must rely for permanent or worthy success, will characterize it in the future as they have in the past, and it is the confident expectation of its managers that the year to come will witness a better development of it than ever before. No pains or expense will be spared to make it in all respects a newspaper which no man in any degree removed from the great centres of information can afford to be without.

The Advantages to the Reader.—It has never been so well equipped as now for the securing and effective presentation of the facts and discussion of the tendencies of the times.

Its Peculiar Characteristics.—The Weekly Journal aims to furnish those who have not much time for reading with a full and comprehensive digest of the events of the day. Its purposes are to inform men upon the courses of government, politics and business, to present the news of the day and show its tendencies, and to give instructive facts and desirable information. With every resource known to modern journalism at its command, it unhesitatingly asserts its ability to do this, and invites an examination of its claims.

A Year of Great Political Interest.—The coming year bids fair to be one of exceptional interest. Some of the most important questions of the day are awaiting discussion and solution, and in the close balancing of political parties in Congress a more than ordinary concern in national affairs will be excited. The course of the new Administration will also attract attention, since a remarkable interest attaches to President Arthur in view of the melancholy fate of his predecessor, whose chair he has been called so suddenly to fill. Washington, therefore, will for many months be a center of gaze for Americans, and all will desire a full and intelligent account of what transpires in it. The Weekly Journal, through its skillful and well-known correspondents, "Perley" and "Webb," will be supplied with the most exhaustive and careful accounts of affairs, while the dispatches of the Associated Press will supplement their labors. "Perley's" accounts of social life in Washington, which are admitted to be among the best furnished to the press from the Capital, will also, as heretofore, be a feature of the paper. In the field of general news, The Weekly Journal will display a greater energy than ever before. The general press dispatches will be supported by SPECIAL ACCOUNTS OF MATTERS OF WIDE INTEREST, and especially much space will be given to the material interests of the country. As the paper has a large support among the farming community, particular attention will be given TO AGRICULTURAL AFFAIRS. Special articles by the "Young Farmer" will be a marked feature of the coming year, and the markets for produce in this city, together with the condition of crops in all parts of the country will be fully reported from time to time.

Its Political Character.—Politically, The Journal will remain in earnest support of the Republican party and its principles, criticising measures freely irrespective of party lines when occasion demands, but holding to the processes and theories of government which for the past twenty years have steadily improved their claims to popular confidence. The paper will support the principles of the freedom and integrity of the ballot, the maintenance of the national credit, the protection of American industries, a practical Civil Service system, and a sound system of finance, believing that thus only can the dignity and power of the government be upheld, or the prosperity upon which the country has entered be made permanent.

The World Abroad.—The Journal will also continue the valuable and instructive discussion of foreign men and affairs which MR. EDWARD KING has so long and so ably carried on. He is admitted to be the best of European correspondents, and none other is so much quoted and commended.

OTHER SPECIAL FEATURES will be "The Kennebecker's" entertaining description of sea life and strange countries, "M. E. B's." "Rambling Talks," and other papers of literary meri, besides which a wide and careful selection will be made of the best current reading of the day. Great attention will also be given to NEW ENGLAND AFFAIRS, and matters of interest in the sections in which the paper circulates will be given special prominence. Correspondents from all important points will contribute information, to which the telegraphic dispatches and the exchanges of the Journal will add as occasion requires. Altogether, The Weekly Journal will be better than ever before, and will commend itself to the intelligence and taste of the reading public of New England.

Each issue of The Weekly Journal contains

THIRTY-SIX LONG COLUMNS.

THE SEMI-WEEKLY JOURNAL,

Published on Tuesdays and Fridays, is a paper of especial value to persons engaged in commercial pursuits outside the large cities. It contains, in addition to all the news of the day, the fullest possible market, commercial and marine reports, besides a large amount of valuable reading matter of a miscellaneous character.

The Boston Semi-Weekly Journal is a paper which no man actively engaged in trade and watching the course of mercantile affairs can afford to be without.

TO THE HONORABLE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS IN GENERAL COURT ASSEMBLED:

The undersigned petitioners, citizens of Belchertown, in said Commonwealth, respectfully represent that the convenience of the inhabitants of that part of said town which lies southerly of a line beginning about 231 rods southerly of the northeasterly corner of the town of Ludlow, and running thence easterly in a straight line to the west line of the town of Ware, at a point about 60 rods northeasterly from the southwest corner of said last named town, would be greatly promoted by having that part of said town of Belchertown set off and annexed to the town of Palmer. We therefore pray that so much of said town of Belchertown as lies southerly of the line above described may be set off from said town of Belchertown and annexed to said town of Palmer.

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1882.

THE SUN for 1882 will make its fifteenth annual revolution under the present management, shining, as always, for all, big and little, mean and gracious, contented and unhappy, Republican and Democratic, depraved and virtuous, intelligent and obuse. The SUN'S light is for mankind and womankind of every sort; but it's genial warmth is for the good, while it pours hot discomfort on the blistering backs of the persistently wicked.

The SUN of 1868 was a newspaper of a new kind. It discarded many of the forms, and a multitude of superfluous words and phrases of ancient journalism. It undertook to report in a fresh, succinct, unconventional way all the news of the world, omitting no event of human interest, and commenting upon affairs with the fearlessness of absolute independence. The success of this experiment was the success of the SUN. It effected a permanent change in the style of American newspapers. Every important journal established in this country in the dozen years past has been modeled after the SUN. Every important journal already existing has been modified and bettered by the force of the SUN'S example.

The SUN of 1882 will be the same outspoken, truth-telling, and interesting newspaper.

We shall print all the news, putting it into readable shape, and measuring its importance, not by the traditional yardstick, but by its real interest to the people. Whenever anything happens worth reporting we get the particulars, whether it happens in Brooklyn or Bokhara.

In politics we have decided opinions; and are accustomed to express them in language that can be understood. We say what we think about men and events. That habit is the only secret of the SUN'S political course.

The WEEKLY SUN gathers into eight pages the best matter of the seven daily issues. An agricultural department of unequaled merit, full market reports, and a liberal proportion of literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence complete the WEEKLY SUN, and make it the best newspaper for the farmer's household that was ever printed.

Who does not know and read and like the SUNDAY SUN, each number of which is a Golconda of interesting literature, with the best poetry of the day, prose every line worth reading, news, humor—matter enough to fill a good sized book, and infinitely more varied and entertaining than any book, big or little?

If our idea of what a newspaper should be pleases you, send for the SUN.

Our terms are as follows: For the daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post-paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cts. per month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of the SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 per year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

Beautiful Crimps.

Beautiful crimps so fluffy and fair,
Whose unstable waves I guard from all air;
My life is devoted to tenderest care
Of you, you rebellious creation in hair,
Beautiful, beautiful crimps!

Beautiful crimps! when the day is damp,
Do I venture out for a stroll or a tramp?
No, I never! I light the gas or a lamp
And heat an iron and proceed to clamp
My beautiful, beautiful crimps.

Beautiful crimps! the heat I shun,
I never indulge in hilarious fun.
From moisture and breezes and snow I run,
For I know if they touch you, you are undone,
Beautiful, beautiful crimps.

Beautiful crimps! the fear and doubt,
Which always and ever I carry about,
Which is harder to bear than disgrace or the gout,
Is that some day you'll limply and straightly come out,
Beautiful, beautiful crimps.

Beautiful crimps! When life is o'er,
And I lay me down to crimp no more,
When vanquished are Satan and all of his imps,
Write over me simply: "She died of her crimps."
Died of her beautiful, beautiful crimps.

NATURE'S UNDERTAKERS.

How often do we hear the query, "What becomes of all the dead birds?" The secret of their mysterious disappearance was but just now half told by the buzz of those brown wings, and the other half is welcome to any one who will take the trouble to follow their lead. This beetle is one of man's incalculable benefactors. It is his mission to keep fresh and pure the air we breathe. He is the sexton that takes beneath the mould not only the fallen sparrow, but the mice, the squirrels, and even much larger creatures that die in our woods and fields.

Beneath that clump of yarrow I found just what I had expected—a small dead bird—and the grave-diggers were in the midst of their work. Already the rampart of fresh earth was raised around the body, and the cavity was growing deeper with every moment, as the busy diggers excavated the turf beneath.

Now and then one would emerge on a tour of inspection, even rummaging among the feathers of that silent throat, and climbing upon the plumy breast to press down the little body into the deepening grave.

These nature-burials are by no means rare. and where the listless eye fails to discover them the nostril will often indicate the way, and to any one desirous of witnessing the operation, without the trouble of search, it is only necessary to place in some convenient spot of loose earth the carcass of some small animal. The most casual observer could not fail soon to be attracted by the orange-spotted beetles. Entomologists assert that these insects are attracted by the odor of decay; but from my own humble investigations I have never been able to fully reconcile myself to this theory.

If it were the question of odor alone in this dead bird, for instance, it would be difficult to explain the bee-line flight of these humming beetles, two of which came swiftly toward me even from the direction of the wind, and dropped quickly upon these feathers hidden from sight among the grass. Perhaps in such an instance we might imagine that they had been there before, and knew the way; that they had noted this clump of yarrow, maybe; but I have observed the fact before when there was every reason to believe that no such previous visit had been made.

I am always glad of the opportunity to watch the progress of these meadow burials. And had you accompanied me on that morning walk, you would have looked with interest at those little undertakers—seen that feathery body toss and heave with strange mockery of life as the busy sextons worked beneath it, digging with their spiked thighs, shoveling out the loose earth with their broad heads and pulling down the body into the deepened cavity.—W. H. Gibson, in Harper's for December.

A Western judge was approached by a verdant couple who wanted to be married. The would-be groom asked the price of tying the knot, and was told it was $1. "Can't you take beeswax?" inquired the rustic. "Yes," said the squire. The beeswax was brought in and, upon being weighed, was found to be worth just sixty cents. "Waal," said the anxious groom, "tie the knot, and I'll fetch more wax next week." "No, sir; I don't trust; that is against the rules of this office." Slowly the disappointed youth turned to go out, saying, "Come, Sal, let's go." "I say, mister," answered Sal, with a woman's wit, "can't you marry us as far as the wax will go?" "Yes, I can, and I will," responded the squire, and he did.

"You want to be free from whatever gives you annoyance," said the doctor to the sick man; "free from all causes of worry and nervous excitement, from everything that tends to produce mental distress or agitation." "Doctor!" exclaimed the patient, sitting bolt upright in bed and clasping his professional adviser's hand with enthusiasm, "put that in writing and I'll apply for a divorce at once."

A debating society has tackled the question: "Is it worse to think you're at the top when there is one stair more than to think there is one stair more when you have reached the top?"

A New Britain man has just become father for the twentieth time in twenty-two years. He says to the city, "You get the factories here; I'll take care of the population."

It is easy finding reasons why other folks should be patient.

Coal oil or petroleum may be very nice for illuminating or lubricating purposes, but surely it is not the proper thing to cure a cough with. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is looked upon as the standard cough remedy.

There is more strength-restoring power in a fifty-cent bottle of Parker's Ginger Tonic than a bushel of malt or a gallon of milk. As an appetizer, blood purifier and kidney corrector, there is nothing like it, and invalids find it a wonderful invigorant for mind and body. See other column. 'n

AMPUTATION OF THE LEG.

THE OLD FAMILY PHYSICIAN AT FAULT—DR. DAVID KENNEDY THE SUCCESSFUL SURGEON.

Money is the universal necessity, and none but a cynic or a fool will affect to despise it. Mr. Abram Ellsworth, of Port Ewen, Ulster county, N. Y., had realized this truth. His disease involved the whole of his thigh-bone, and the suffering man looked forward, not without apparent reason, to death as his only deliverer. His family physician refused to amputate the limb—asserting that the operation would kill the patient on the spot. Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who was consulted, held a different opinion, and amputated the limb. The doctor then administered freely his great Blood Specific FAVORITE REMEDY to afford tone and strength to the system, prevent the return of the disease, and Mr. Ellsworth remains to this day in the bloom of health. This gentleman's disease was the offspring of foul blood, and Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY purified the blood and restored to him the power once more to enjoy his life. Are you suffering from any disease traceable to the same cause? Try Favorite Remedy. Your druggist has it. ONE DOLLAR a bottle. Bear in mind the proprietor's name and address: Dr. David KENNEDY, Rondout, New York. 4w35

Simmons Liver Regulator!

THE GREAT UNFAILING

SPECIFIC FOR LIVER COMPLAINT.

THE SYMPTOMS OF LIVER COMPLAINT

Are uneasiness and pain in the side, sometimes pain in the shoulder, and is mistaken for rheumatism; the stomach is also affected with loss of appetite and sickness; bowels, in general, costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, and dull, heavy sensation; considerable loss of memory, with painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done; often complaining of weakness, debility and low spirits. Sometimes many of the above symptoms attend the disease, and at other times very few of them; but the Liver is generally the organ most involved.

REGULATE THE LIVER, AND PREVENT

Dyspepsia, Constipation, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Chills and Fever, Headache, Colic, Depression of Spirits, Sour Stomach, Heartburns, Piles, etc.

TONIC ALTERATIVE AND CATHARTIC!

Simmons Liver Regulator, purely vegetable, is the medicine generally used in the South to arouse the torpid liver to healthy action.

It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy on the Liver and Kidneys!

The action of the Regulator is free from nausea or griping. It is more effective in starting the secretions of the liver, causing the bile to act as a cathartic. When there is an excess of bile in the stomach, the Regulator is an active purge; after the removal of the bile it will regulate the bowels and impart vigor and health to the whole system.

See that you get the genuine in White Wrapper, with red Z, prepared only by J. H. Zeilin & Co. Sold by all druggists.

GRAEFENBERG VEGETABLE PILLS

Are the mildest ever known, they cure Headache, Malarial Disease, Biliousness and Indigestion.

THESE

PILLS

Tone up the system and restore health to those suffering from general debility and Nervousness. Sold by all Druggists.

NEW YORK, 1882.

THE SUN for 1882 will make its fifteenth annual revolution under the present management, shining, as always, for all, big and little, mean and gracious, contented and unhappy, Republican and Democratic, depraved and virtuous, intelligent and obtuse. The SUN'S light is for mankind and womankind of every sort; but it's genial warmth is for the good, while it pours hot discomfort on the blistering backs of the persistently wicked.

The SUN of 1868 was a newspaper of a new kind. It discarded many of the forms, and a multitude of superfluous words and phrases of ancient journalism. It undertook to report in a fresh, succinct, unconventional way all the news of the world, omitting no event of human interest, and commenting upon affairs with the fearlessness of absolute independence. The success of this experiment was the success of the SUN. It effected a permanent change in the style of American newspapers. Every important journal established in this country in the dozen years past has been modeled after the SUN. Every important journal already existing has been modified and bettered by the force of the SUN'S example.

The SUN of 1882 will be the same outspoken, truth-telling, and interesting newspaper.

We shall print all the news, putting it into readable shape, and measuring its importance, not by the traditional yardstick, but by its real interest to the people. Whenever anything happens worth reporting we get the particulars, whether it happens in Brooklyn or Bokhara.

In politics we have decided opinions; and are accustomed to express them in language that can be understood. We say what we think about men and events. That habit is the only secret of the SUN'S political course.

The WEEKLY SUN gathers into eight pages the best matter of the seven daily issues. An agricultural department of unequaled merit, full market reports, and a liberal proportion of literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence complete the WEEKLY SUN, and make it the best newspaper for the farmer's household that was ever printed.

Who does not know and read and like the SUNDAY SUN, each number of which is a Golconda of interesting literature, with the best poetry of the day, prose every line worth reading, news, humor—matter enough to fill a good sized book, and infinitely more varied and entertaining than any book, big or little?

If our idea of what a newspaper should be pleases you, send for the SUN.

Our terms are as follows: For the daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post-paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cts. per month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of the SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 per year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

A Tomboy.

She comes! she comes! with song and glee
She leads her train o'er lawn and lea!
And fair and free her wind-blown tress,
Her fleecy scarf, her careless dress,
Her sweet girl-voice, that bird-like sings,
Her merry laugh, that tireless rings
High o'er those booming sounds of sport—
All hail! wild queen of madcap court!

No daisy chain will this gay girl
E'er weave to deck her dancing curl;
No wreath entwine of bud or bell,
Though both, she wots, become her well;
Not hers to guess of joy or grief
By conning of a holy leaf:
She tents not fortune's smile or frown
By puffs of dandelion down;
No necklace frames of rowan gems,
Nor fragrant, flower-wrought diadems!

No poet she to doze and dream
Long, lazy hours by haunted stream!
If small the brook, she'll lead her train
And leap it o'er and back again;
Or if her boys will but away
She'll wade it, maybe—I can't say,
Her boys—all boys—around her press
For love of her sweet winsomeness,
And dogs that bark for very glee—
A harum scarum company!

She's o'er the lea, she's won the wood,
This dainty bit of womanhood!
Those joyous peals, I trow, bespeak
The gay, glad mirth of hide and seek,
As hazel dell and brackened glade
Her graceless band in turns invade;
Little she recks rents or shreds,
But boldly breasts the bramble beds!

'Tis she has bade them rig the swing,
And wood for fires unhallowed bring;
'Tis she the torch illicit waves,
And leads her troops through mirky caves;
'Tis she hath crossed the pine trunk thin,
That, rocking, bridges yon dark linn—
With joyous cheer and wild halloo
Hounds on her host to derring-do!

'Tis she has taught those nimble feet
To scatter wide the windrows sweet;
On fragrant hay-ricks led the foe,
And long hours' work at once laid low;
Yet Farmer Swan, who from the stile
Had watched it all, ne'er ceased to smile—
"God bless her purty face! She be A regular Tomboy, sartinlee!"

AFTER MANY YEARS.

Only a broken violin! There it lay in the mud, a worthless piece of wood, rudely snapped in twain, with a few loose fragments of string, soundless, voiceless; yet beside it as reverently as though bending over something human that had died—with a passionate burst of grief, as for some dearly loved friend, knelt a little lad of some thirteen summers.

Out from the mud, with tender, caressing touch, he lifted up the shattered remnants, his tears falling the while thick and fast, his slight frame convulsed with the sobs which would not be repressed.

He made no outcry, but his face was white with the anguish of despair. He had lost his all—the friend to whom he poured out all his woes; the companion who, until now, never had failed him, his second, better, nobler self.

Not many paces distant on the sidewalk stood the perpetrator of the outrage, a sort of undefined remorse gnawing within his breast. For mere bravado he had wrenched from the hands of the little musician his instrument and broken it across his knee, throwing the pieces in the mud. Realizing dimly that he had committed a coward's and a bully's act, he took from his pocket a small coin and tossed it toward the boy.

"Take that," he cried, "and stop your whimpering. You've got no business to play your music in the public streets. You're a beggar and a nuisance."

But in an instant, with flashing eyes and head thrown proudly back, the little street Arab had flung the money back.

"You think you can pay me thus!" he replied in frenzied tones. "It is I who owe you a debt. I yet will live to wipe it out."

They stood one instant looking steadily in each other's eyes—one the senior of the other by some three or four years, tall and powerful, clad in broadcloth and fine linen—one a little, shrinking lad, his ragged clothes bespattered with the mud of the streets.

At this moment an open carriage rattled by, but the little girl seated within it had with her quick eyes discovered something amiss.

She had seen the disdainful return of the rejected coin; she had heard the boy's words; she had marked the traces of a passionate grief upon his face; and with hasty command to the coachman to stop she called him to her.

"What are you about to do, Miss Selma?" questioned the lady with her, her governess.

"Nothing naughty, dear Miss Irwin," she replied. "This poor boy—see, his violin is broken. I am so sorry for him."

The lad slowly approached the carriage in obedience to her command; but there was no light on his face, no eagerness in his step.

"How did this happen?" asked the little girl.

Carl looked up. Was this an angel who spoke to him? He had never seen one half so lovely. Her hair floated about her shoulders in a shower of gold, and resting on it was a white hat with a long white plume drooping far down behind; her eyes were like two purple pansies; on her cheek was the flush of surprise; her lips were red as the carnation, though they quivered with her unspoken sympathy.

The boy held up the broken pieces of his violin.

"It was my all," he said. "I shall starve now, but I am glad of that, for I did so love it—I loved it because it talked to me, and with it I was never lonely."

"But can you not buy another?"

"I have no money, miss. I can never make enough since this has gone. I had hoped one day to buy something better than this, but now the day will never come."

A shade of thoughtfulness crept over the sweet, fair face. In the little gloved hand she held a tiny purse, and within it the bright glittering gold pieces shone. They were to purchase a coveted doll, her fond father's birthday gift.

She turned hastily to her governess.

"Please, Miss Irwin, do you think papa would be displeased if I did not buy my doll? No, no, I think he would not." Then waiting for no reply, she pressed the purse into the boy's hands.

"Go buy your violin," she said. "No, you must not return this as you returned the other money; but some day, when you are a great musician you shall pay me. Who knows? You may play at my wedding."

And with a little laugh, as the carriage started forward, the child with a wave of her hand disappeared.

The boy stood motionless, wrapped in a sort of ecstacy. No doubt that a veritable angel had visited him, crossed his mind. Had he been dreaming! No, for within his hand lay the dainty little purse. Opening it with almost reverence the shining pieces of gold met his gaze; but something else as well—a little piece of pasteboard, and upon it written a name and address. The lad lifted it to his lips.

"It is another debt I owe," he said softly to himself.

* * * * * * *

Ten years later, and on a bright starlight night in January the New York Academy of Music was filled from pit to dome. The great violinist, Herr Carl Seiberg, was to appear. He was very young, not yet twenty-three, the critics said, and yet he had reached the zenith of his fame. A great wave of applause greeted him as he came forward to the centre of the stage. He was tall, but slight, with large, dreamy eyes, and a mouth whose sensitiveness the blonde moustache could not wholly hide. With a soft caressing motion he drew the bow across the strings. An almost human voice of exquisite melody seemed to respond. The house held its breath to listen.

In one of the lower proscenium boxes sat a young girl of nineteen. She wore no hat, and in her golden hair there gleamed a diamond star. She was beautiful with a rare loveliness. There was no fairer face in all that crowded assemblage. Behind her, leaning on the back of her chair, was a young man whose gaze of rapt admiration never withdrew itself—a man of superb height and breadth of form, and with eyes and hair as dark as the night—eyes which glowed with feeling as they dwelt upon her face, for the hope nearest Fairfax Farley's heart was to win the woman for his wife.

She turned toward him as the music died, with a quick indrawing of her breath.

"Tell me," she whispered, "was it not perfect?"

"I did not hear it," he replied. "I was thinking but of you."

A vivid flush almost of annoyance rose to her brow; but at that moment the young musician, recalled by the thundering plaudits of the people, reappeared.

His gaze now wandered over the house, finally resting on that exquisite face. He gave a sudden start. Of what, of whom did it remind him? For a full moment their eyes met, then with a sudden inspiration, he drew his bow.

What was he playing? It was a cadence no man ever heard before. It seemed to tell an unknown story, if one could have interpreted it. It began a storm of grief, of passionate despair, unreasoning, hopeless; then followed a lull, a rift in the clouds, a sudden gleam of sunshine, then a heavy toiling of weary feet, often tired and bleeding, but with that rift of sunshine never quite hidden by the clouds overhead, no matter how dark or how dense they gathered; then came a burst of triumph, a song of victory, a transport of passion, and thence peace.

The last note seemed to have no ending. Its echoes lingered in a melodious hush, and ran in the paans of applause.

The girl in the box tore the violets from her breast, and threw them at Herr Seiberg's feet. Flowers rained everywhere, but these only he stooped to gather. These he held so tightly that their crushed fragrance was wafted to his senses as he bowed his adieux.

The young musician was the lion of the hour. Fashionable ladies sought him out. Invitations to fetes, receptions, and dinners, rained upon him. It was at one of these latter that he and Miss Laurence met.

"I have pressed your flowers," he said to her in a low voice.

"My flowers?" she answered with a blush. Then she remembered the violets she had so impulsively thrown him.

"I had almost forgotten," she added.

"What was it, Herr Seiberg, that you played? It has haunted me ever since."

"Some day," he replied, "I will tell you. Now you shall only know that you were its inspiration."

Were his words presumption? She could not answer; neither could she know the strange power which ever swayed her in this man's presence.

"You do not teach?" she said to him one day.

"No," he answered. "But if you will be my pupil, it will indeed be a pleasure."

"And your terms?"

His face flushed.

"I need no gold," he responded. "It is that some day you should hear my story."

* * * * * * *

"I see nothing of you, Selma," said Fairfax Farley, during this time. "Do you forget that I have some claims?

"No, I forget nothing," she said.

But there was sadness rather than happiness in her tone.

"Are you not ready to give me your answer, dear?" the man continued. "Why do you hold me in suspense? Why, darling, may I not have the sweet promise that I crave."

Did she shudder? If so, it was but momentary, as the sweet young voice made answer.

"True," it said, "you have been very patient; but be so yet a little longer. Let me be sure of myself. It is only for this assurance, Fairfax, that I wait."

But under Fairfax Farley's courteous calm was a seething maelstrom, a burning jealousy.

Two weeks later, he waited outside Miss Laurence's home until Herr Seiberg stood on the steps, in the moonlight. He had been passing the evening with her. The two had dined at her table. An hour before Mr. Farley had made his adieux.

"Herr Seiberg!"

It was his voice, addressing the musician.

"Yes," he responded, his surprise showing in his tone.

"I have waited for you," continued Mr. Farley, "in order to ask you a favor. It is a great favor, money need be no object between us. I am willing to pay you any price, however fabulous; and although I know it is out of your line of business, I want very much that you should play one solo at my wedding."

In the moonlight Herr Seiberg's face showed a strange pallor.

"At your wedding! You are to be married? May I inquire to whom?"

"Miss Laurence is my betrothed. Had you not heard?"

Both in question and answer rang a strained intensity; but the silence that followed had in its dumbness more force than either. Then Herr Seiberg spoke:

"To-morrow night, at this hour, you shall have my decision," he said, and rapidly strode away.

Before noon, the day following, Miss Laurence received Herr Seiberg's card. Penciled on it were these words:

"Pardon my intrusion, and grant me a half hour's interview in which to bid you farewell."

Farewell! There was a certain spasmodic fluttering of her heart as she dimly realized its purport.

What did this sudden departure portend? and why—why did it cause this faint sickness, which stole through her pulse, and every fiber of her heart.

"Show Herr Seiberg up," she said to the servant; then, schooling herself to be calm, sat awaiting him.

On the threshold of the room he paused.

"You asked me once, Miss Laurence," he began, "the story my violin told on the night we met. I answered you that some time you should know. Would it weary you to hear it now?

She bowed assent, and motioned to a chair, but he still stood.

"I must go back many years," he said, "to the time when I was a little lad, footsore and friendless. Nay, not friendless; I had one friend, a poor little piece of wood, with strings across it; but I forgot it was wood. In my hours of loneliness, and grief, and sadness, I would talk to it and then by idly drawing my bow across the strings, it would answer me. Ah, no one would have believed it, but it pointed me to the future—it told me all that I might be. It whispered courage—it breathed hope. Well, one day, strolling through the streets touching its chords, asking no alms—I never begged—a boy older than I, taller, stronger; a boy richly dressed, and with a gold chain hanging at his vest, stopped and mocked me. I walked on silently. He followed me, and in an unprepared moment snatched my violin, and, snapping it across his knee, threw it into the filth and mud of the street.

"I was stunned. The magnitude of my loss overwhelmed me. The surging tide of my despair closed in about my soul. I saw neither earth nor sky—naught save the shattered, voiceless wood. Then he who had wrought the wanton, wicked act, threw me a coin. It roused me from my stupor. Not thus might he pay the debt I owed to him.

"In that moment a carriage passed. Seated within was a beautiful child—a little girl. She ordered the coachman to stop. She had seen something of what had happened. She inquired the cause of my distress. Then with a tender pity in her eyes, and a voice like music, she put her purse into my hands and bade me use the contents as I would.

"'Some day,' she said, 'when you are a great musician, you shall play at my wedding.'"

The girl's head was bowed now. Her bosom rose and fell. Two sparkling tears glimmered on the lashes which swept her cheek. Like a dream it all came back to her; like a vision, she saw the boyish face uplifted to hers.

Herr Seiberg strode to her side. He put his hand within his coat and drew something forth. Instinctively she knew it to be the little purse.

"It has never left me," he said hoarsely. "I owe all that I am to you. The gulf between us is as wide now as then. I have never hoped to cross it. You are the heiress of a rich man. I, too, have wealth, but that cannot wipe out the past. Let me tell you, though, what I did. I took your money and bought with it my violin. The man who sold it to me had a kindly face, and when I paid him for it I asked of him a favor.

"'The money with which I purchased this was lent to me,' I said. 'I would like,—oh, so very much!—to keep this same gold. Will you lay it aside for three months, when I may redeem it? I do not know that I can, but I will save every penny I earn, if you will but do this for me.'

"The man smiled and consented.

"He marked the gold in my sight, and laid it away. Within the time I had regained possession of it. It is here, Miss Laurence. It seems a trifling sum now to both of us, but remember that it has made me all that I am. Yet its payment does not pay my debt. You said, perhaps I might play at your wedding. Command me, and I obey, even though I thus forswear my second debt to the boy, who a second time, in manhood, causes me the deepest misery my life has known."

He paused, and held outstretched toward her the open purse. His face was like marble; his eyes shone with a wonderful fire.

"Of what are you speaking?" she said gently. "Whom am I to marry?"

"Last night he told me you were his betrothed."

"He? Who?"

"Fairfax Farley."

"It is not true. He has wished it so, but I did not know my own heart, and asked that he should wait. I know it now. I know that it can never be. Carl, you spoke of a gulf between us. Is it one that love cannot bridge?"

The next night, Fairfax Farley and Herr Seiberg met.

"Have you decided?" asked the former.

"It is impossible," Carl replied; "but as you have so kindly asked me to play at your wedding, may I not ask you to dance at mine?"

"Ah, you are betrothed then?"

"Yes."

"And to whom?"

"Miss Laurence," the young musician answered proudly.

Two little words—a name soon to be merged into another identity; but their momentary utterance had canceled his twofold debt—redeemed his boyhood's vow.

This is said to be a fresh one from England: Lady, anxious to reach the station—"Cahn't you drive a little fahster? We'll miss the train if you don't 'urry." Cabman whips up his 'orse, but doesn't seem to get on much "fahster." Lady, again—"Cahn't you 'urry the 'orse a bit? 'It 'im in some wital part, vy don't ye?" Cabman—"It 'im in some wital part? Vy, mum, Hi've halready 'it 'im in all uv his wital parts hexcept one, and Hi'm reserving that for 'Olborn 'Ill!"

"Now," said the teacher of a primary class to one of his pupils, to whom he was trying to impart a knowledge of division, but with little success, "if you had a pie, and I should ask you for a quarter of it, and you should give me what I wanted, how much would you have left?" "I wouldn't have any left!" quickly responded the little girl.—Yonkers Statesman.

"I'm very sick, docther. Do ye think I'll die?" "I see no reason to think so," said the doctor, calmly. "How do you feel?" "I feel as if somethin' was kickin' widin me." "What have you been eating?" "Upon me sowl, I doan' know, but be the way it goes on I'm afeard it musht be frogs' ligs."

It takes eight hundred full blown roses to make a tablespoonful of perfume, while ten cents' worth of cooked onions will scent a whole neighborhood.

After the Frost.

After the frost! Oh, the rose is dead,
And the weeds lie piled in the garden-bed,
And the peach-tree's shade in the wan sunshine,
Faint as the veins in these hands of mine,
Streaks the gray of the orchard wall,
Where the vine rasps loose and the last leaves fall,
And the bare boughs writhe and the winds are lost—
After the frost—the frost!

After the frost! Oh! the weary head
And the hands and the heart are quieted,
And the lips we loved are locked at last
And kiss not back, though the rain falls fast,
And the lashes drip and the soul make moan,
And on through the dead leaves walks alone
Where the bare boughs writhe and the winds are lost—
After the frost—the frost!

INDIAN WIVES.

Among the Northwestern tribes of Indians innocence is as marked among the girls as their color. The impression that the red maiden does not entertain a high standard of morality is an error, for she is taught as other girls and grows up with well-developed ideas of the responsibilities of life and a firm resolution to discharge them. Educated in the faith that she was ordained to work, she trains herself to undergo hard labor, and at 16 years of age is sturdy and strong, brave against fatigue, and a perfect housewife.

She may not possess New England notions of cleanliness, but she takes not a little pride in her personal appearance, and in the arrangement of her lodge she displays some crude ideas of taste and a certain amount of neatness. If she marry a white man she makes him a good wife as long as she lives with him. His home is her sole comfort and his comfort her ambition. She thinks of him and for him, and makes it her study to please him and make him respect and love her. She recognizes in him one of a superior race, and by her dignity and devotion endears herself to him and struggles to make him happy.

At the agencies of the upper frontier thousands of men are employed, and it is not an exaggeration to say that the majority of them have Indian wives and live happily. They are not sought after by the maidens, for the Indian girl's custom is to remain quiet until the marriage contract is made and the marriage portion paid over. The husband must have the dowry, with which he must invest his projected mother-in-law before the ceremony takes place. The process is a little out of the usual run, and a description may be of interest.

The aspiring bridegroom must be well known in the tribe before he can hope to win a wife. Her people want to thoroughly understand him and know if he can support not only her but also her relatives in the event of a pinch. He must be a hard-hearted man with a temper warranted to keep in any domestic climate, and he must have a good lodge and at least have a dozen horses. If he be, and have all these, he can a-wooing go. Selecting the lady, he makes application to her mother and at a council the price is fixed upon.

If the girl be especially pretty her mother will demand a gun, two horses and a lot of provisions, blankets and cloth. A gun is valued at $50, a horse at $20, and he must furnish material to bring the amount up to from $100 to $150. Then he tries to beat the dame down, and if he succeeds he knows there is some reason for letting the girl go; if not, he understands that he is making a good choice. The courtship is left entirely to the mother.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE EARTH DRYING UP.

There is abundant evidence that the amount of water on the surface of the earth has been steadily diminishing for many thousand years. No one doubts that there was a time when the Caspian Sea communicated with the Black Sea, and when the Mediterranean covered the greater part of the Desert of Sahara. In fact, geologists tell us that at one period the whole of the earth was covered by water, and the fact that continents of dry land now exist is proof that there is less water on our globe now than there was in its infancy. This diminution of our supply of water is going on at the present day at a rate so rapid as to be clearly appreciable. The rivers and smaller streams of our Atlantic States are visibly smaller than they were twenty-five years ago. County brooks in which men now living were accustomed to fish and bathe in their boyhood have in many cases totally disappeared, not through any act of man, but solely in consequence of the failure of the springs and rains that once fed them. The level of the great lakes is falling year by year. There are many piers on the shores of lake-side cities which vessels once approached with ease, but which now hardly reach to the edge of the water. Harbors are everywhere growing shallower. This is not due to the gradual deposit of earth brought down by rivers or refuse from city sewers. The harbor of Toronto has grown shallow in spite of the fact that it has been dredged out so that the bottom rock has been reached, and all the dredging which can be done to the harbor of New York will not permanently deepen it. The growing shallowness of the Hudson is more evident above Albany than it is in the tide-water region, and, like the outlet of Lake Champlain, which was once navigable by Indian canoes at all seasons, the upper Hudson is now almost bare of water in many places during the summer. In all other parts of the world there is the same steady decrease of water in rivers and lakes, and the rainfall in Europe, where scientific observations are made, is manifestly less than it was at a period within man's memory.

What is becoming of our water? Obviously it is not disappearing through evaporation, for in that case rains would give back whatever water the atmosphere might absorb. We must accept the theory that, like the water of the moon, our water is sinking into the earth's interior.

Post Office Clerk: "Here! your letter is overweight." Pat: "Over what weight?" P. O. C.: "It's too heavy; put another stamp on it." Pat: "Och, git out wid your foolin'! sure if I put another stamp on won't it be heavier still?"

A Philadelphia society are wrestling with the question: "When a man has his life insured for $100,000, is his wife justified in refusing to prepare a mustard plaster for him when he is seized with a sudden and severe attack of cramps?"

"I am very glad to have met you, sir," said Brown politely. "Are you?" replied Fogg; "here's a note you may be glad to meet also." Brown wasn't so powerfully glad to meet it, but he had to.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1881.

Special Notice!

All persons indebted to this office in any way are requested to call and settle before Jan. 1, 1882.

EX-SENATOR FRELINGHUYSEN of New Jersey will, it is said, succeed Secretary Blaine in the State department on the 15th inst.

THE papers will not have a chance to get hold of the President's message this year in advance of its delivery to Congress, as it is understood that President Arthur will send it in in manuscript.

ST. LOUIS is happy at last in the discovery that she is way ahead of Chicago in one thing, at any rate, having a debt of $23,200,000, while Chicago can boast of an indebtedness of only $12,700,000.

AFTER much tribulation and a general refusal of candidates to serve, the Republicans of Springfield have succeeded in persuading ex-Mayor Powers to accept a re-nomination, and he will undoubtedly be elected next week. He knows the ropes thoroughly, and will make a most efficient officer. His Democratic opponent is E. W. Ladd.

GOV. LONG announced by proclamation on Wednesday that the amendment to the constitution allowing pauper soldiers to vote had been adopted. The vote was 30,245 for, and 20,184 against the amendment. The official count of the votes for Governor is as follows: Long, 96,609; Thompson, 54,586; Andrews, 4889; Almy, 1640; scattering, 76; total, 157,800.

DRUNKENNESS will lose something of its charms for army officers if President Arthur continues in the course he has pursued thus far, of approving every court-martial sentence of dismissal for this cause. It has been too common a thing of late years for the President to mitigate or annul these sentences, and for the good of the service it is high time this mistakenly good natured treatment of such offenses was abandoned.

IN his annual report, Mr. Burchard, director of the U. S. Mint, recommends that the coinage of silver dollars be discontinued until other commercial nations unite with this country in establishing an international bimetallic standard. Mr. Burchard was formerly a stanch advocate of an unlimited coinage of the dollars, but he now thinks that $200,000,000 of silver circulation is quite enough for the country's needs.

GUITEAU has been on the witness stand himself this week, and has met the sharp and severe cross-examination, to which he has been subjected by Judge Porter, with an adroitness and clear understanding of his position which is remarkable, to say the least, for a man who claims to be insane. He has been closely watched this week by a number of experts, who hardly know what to make of him, and do not agree in their opinion of his mental condition.

CONGRESS will assemble next Monday, and the contest for the speakership is becoming quite lively. Hiscock and Kasson, the leading candidates, are having a close race, with the chances seemingly in favor of the latter, though the result is one of those things which no man can foretell. It may yet be a "dark horse," and in that event our Representative Robinson will stand a good chance to come to the front and secure the prize. There is no question but that he would make a most excellent presiding officer if elected.

DR. LEWIS A. SAYRE of New York has had Mrs. Abraham Lincoln under his care lately, for treatment for a spinal injury, and he says she needs a nurse and body servant constantly, but has not means for this and the medical treatment needed. She has a pension of $3000 from the government, besides some $2000 income from her husband's estate. If this be not sufficient for her needs, then she by all means ought to receive a larger pension. It is stated, however, by friends of the family, that she has an income of $8000, and has saved $5000 in the last eighteen months.

AN APPEAL to the voters of Massachusetts to vote "no" on the question of granting licenses to sell liquor, in the approaching city and town elections, has been published, signed by Gov. Long, Senator Dawes, Thomas Talbot, William Claflin, Geo. S. Boutwell, P. A. Chadbourne, J. G. Whittier and many other prominent men. The signers express their belief that "no interest vital to the well-being of our people will suffer by the suppression of the dram shops, but, on the contrary, in them all the most sacred attributes of home, the peace and quiet of society, and the safety and perpetuity of popular government itself, find constant and unrelenting foes, entailing, as they do, 84 per cent of all taxation required to support the criminals, paupers, lunatics and idiots of the State." The appeal is worthy the careful attention of every voter in the State, and we do not see how any unprejudiced mind can avoid the conviction that our people would be better off, by far, if every liquor saloon in the State were closed. This can be practically done when the voters take hold of the thing unitedly, with this end in view, and not until then.

Workmen on the West Shore Railroad are doing their work very rapidly all along the Hudson. The track is to be made as straight as possible, and there will be few curves. In many places it runs in the river some distance from the shore.

W. H. Vanderbilt controls directly, including his latest acquisition, the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis, about 3800 miles of railroad, being about 4 per cent of all the railroads in the United States.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Another lot of fine sole leather at C. Hitchcock's.

W. R. Milligan has a fine assortment of ladies' and gents' beaver boots and shoes for cold weather.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Five JOURNALS this month.

The last full moon of the year next Monday.

The thermometer got up into the sixties Wednesday.

George M. Robbins has sold his house near Three Rivers to T. D. Potter.

A new section of side track is being put in at the Boston & Albany freight house.

The pulpit of the Universalist church will be again occupied, to-morrow, by Rev. J. H. Amies.

The annual meeting of the agricultural society will occur next Monday afternoon, at the Weeks House.

There will be a partial eclipse of the moon next Monday, invisible in this section, but visible in the Pacific Ocean.

The preaching service at the Baptist church will be omitted to-morrow. Sunday school and prayer meeting as usual.

J. F. Holbrook has bought of John Ferrell the house and lot adjoining his residence on North Main street, for $4000.

"Hazel Kirke" is to be played at Wales Hall Dec. 20th, by a company from the Madison Square Theatre, New York.

The Young Men's Library Association will hold their annual meeting at the library rooms next Monday evening, at 7.30 o'clock.

Calvin Blodgett and Michael Foley 1st have been drawn as jurors for the criminal term of the superior court, which meets at Springfield on the 12th inst.

The sewer pipe and traps near the Boston & Albany depot have been taken up and cleaned out this week, having become completely filled with sediment.

The ladies of the Universalist church will hold their annual festival and supper at the church next Wednesday evening, followed by a social dance at Wales Hall.

The Congregational churches of this town, Monson, Hampden, Wilbraham and Ludlow will have a fellowship meeting at the South church, Wilbraham, next Wednesday.

The Boston & Albany and the New London Northern railroads have begun work this week on a new and enlarged depot at Barrett's Junction, on the site of the one recently burned.

A valuable tract of woodland at Blanchardville, belonging to the estate of the late John Ward, is to be offered for sale soon, as will be seen by an advertisement in another column.

A much-needed new floor has been laid this week on the Commercial street bridge over the river, travel in the meantime going around by the Fay bridge. New floor timbers were also put in.

O. E. Crawford will continue as acting agent of the American Express Co. at Amherst through this month, but will return to his old place as messenger on the N. L. N. R. R. in January.

Rev. Benj. Stanton of East Albany, N. Y., will preach again at the Congregational church to-morrow. On the following Sunday Rev. William Crawford, D. D., of Roxbury, will occupy the pulpit.

J. P. Barnes has sold his shop to John M. Converse and moved it to the head of Maple street, where it has been attached to another small building owned by Mr. Converse, and is being made over into a comfortable house.

November went out in a burst of sunshine and Summer mildness, and December came in with a pouring rain Thursday morning, followed by clearing weather in the afternoon and a charming day yesterday, which savored much more of Spring than of Winter.

Some of our business men, as well as some in other places, now refuse to receive silver pieces through which holes have been punched. In order to get rid of them certain ingenious people have taken to filling the holes with lead, but the deception is easily discovered.

Work has been suspended for the Winter on the new reservoir for the State Primary School. There still remains some paving to be done, as well as the outside turfing, but the reservoir is so nearly completed that it has been partly filled with water, which was let into the pipes last Saturday for use at the school.

Rev. John L. Graves of Boston, who has for several years been buying up lands on and near Mt. Toby in Sunderland and Leverett, has recently completed purchases by which he comes in possession of Mt. Toby entire, and will next year make extensive improvements. The territory now embraces about 800 acres.

A heavy fog settled down upon the village Wednesday morning, so dense that for some time objects could be seen clearly at the distance of only a few feet, while at the distance of 100 feet nothing whatever could be seen but the fog. Thanks to careful pilotage, however, and the constant use of fog horns and bells, there were no collisions on any of our streets, so far as heard from.

Rev. O. R. Hunt of Springfield has been engaged to supply the pulpit of the Baptist church through the Winter, beginning a week from to-morrow. For the past four years this church and the Baptist church at Three Rivers have had a pastor in common, but since the resignation of Rev. Mr. Russell there has been a growing sentiment in both societies in favor of having a pastor for each church. The churches would have united, probably, in giving Mr. Hunt a call, had he been willing to accept a double pastorate, but as he was not, and there seemed to be no immediate prospect of securing a pastor for the united fields, the church in this place decided to engage Mr. Hunt for the Winter, his preaching for the two Sundays he has been here having given very general satisfaction. The Three Rivers church will doubtless take similar action, and secure a supply for the Winter.

DISTRICT COURT ITEMS.

The past week has been a busy one for Judge Robinson, the festivities of the Thanksgiving season evidently being too much for a number of weak stomachs. Last week Friday James Quinn was committed for drunkenness, not being able to pay his fine. James Higgins and Thomas O'Brien of Monson each paid $4.55, and Thomas Wells $3.55, for the same offense, while O'Brien and Wells also paid $12.70 apiece, and Higgins $11.70 for disturbing the peace.

On Saturday John P. Dunn of Three Rivers was fined $57.74 for selling liquor to a minor on the Lord's Day, but appealed, furnishing sureties in the sum of $300.

The familiar face of Elexus Waid of Ludlow appeared before the bar on Monday to answer to the charge of being a common drunkard, and the evidence was considered sufficient to warrant a sentence of two months in the house of correction, from which he appealed, and furnished sureties in the sum of $200.

Ex-Constable Zolva Williams received a call on Monday evening from "Jimmy" Cook and his wife Sarah, and after they went away Mr. Williams missed two or three pairs of his best pantaloons. He was properly indignant, and early the next morning invoked the aid of Sheriff Palmer and a search warrant, and the missing breeches were found under Cook's bed. The matter was settled by Mrs. Cook by payment of costs, $3.95. James Breen paid $5.65 the same day for drunkenness, and George Davis of Monson disgorged $11.70 for an assault on his wife.

James, Maurice and Patrick Moriarty of Bondville were brought before the court Wednesday morning for an assault on John Sullivan, and settled up by paying costs, $14.55. Lorenzo Calkins of Monson paid $10.60 for an assault on Richard Atkinson, and George Allen of Brookfield $4.85 for being drunk.

Maurice and James Cahill were found in rather a joyful condition Wednesday evening by Sheriff Northrop, who started for the lock-up with them. One of them was somewhat perverse, and in quieting him the officer was seized in an unguarded moment by the other one, and pitched into the sand, his victims on top of him, and in the struggle that followed they managed to get away. They were found Thursday morning, though, and were committed for three months for assault, also being locked up in default of payment of fine and costs for drunkenness. Charles McCarthy of Thorndike was up for an assault on John Dunn of Three Rivers, and paid costs amounting to $3.70.

AN OLD-TIME DEDICATION.

The following interesting account of the dedication of the First Congregational church at Thorndike is taken from the Iowa State Reporter, and was written by Rev. Moses K. Cross, a former pastor of the church:

In the county of Hampden, and town of Palmer, in the good old State of Massachusetts, on Wednesday, (not on Sunday,) the 22d day of November, 1848, the memorable event transpired. A fresh snow had just fallen—the first of the season—and the sleigh bells jingled merrily all over the rural parish.

It was not a large meeting-house—so they used to call them in New England—nor a very costly one; only about $5000. The church itself was small—less than one hundred members—consisting mostly of New England farmers and their families; but the new sanctuary was built in a small factory village, bearing the name of Thorndike. The church had been located originally, as the ancient custom was, in the geographical center of the town, from which roads issued in every direction, like the spokes of a wheel. But when the first railroad came rushing through the town, in 1841, it ran along on the rim or felly of the town, and gave birth to a village some two or three miles from the center, whither, very soon, most of the people and business followed. The factory village was in another direction, a mile or two from the center.

The church, of course, had to follow the people and the business. But here was a dilemma:—two settlements, both of them wanting a church and a minister. Both of them could not have the old ones. So after careful deliberation, it was concluded to pluck up the old tree, root and branch, which had been growing on the old spot more than a hundred years, and make two new ones of it. The people were not wealthy, and paid their minister all together only $550 per annum, with an occasional donation. But they resolutely undertook the work; first starting off a colony to the railroad station, with a new sanctuary, and a young pastor, in good running order. Here went about $6000 to begin with.

Then came the tug of war; for the colony was larger than that which remained, and richer too. Nevertheless, in the face of poverty and discouragements, the old sanctuary was deliberately abandoned, (afterwards sold to the Catholics,) and meetings began in a tavern hall at T., where, in process of time, "By the patience of hope and the labor of love" another new sanctuary arose, complete, furnished and paid for, or securely pledged, without the aid of a dollar, so far as I can remember, outside of the church and congregation for whom it was built. And when the happy day dawned on which it was to be dedicated, there was no lingering deficit of hundreds or thousands of dollars to be made up before the dedicatory prayer could be offered; actually nothing to do but simply and devoutly dedicate to the Lord that which they had been "able to offer so willingly, after such sort." Ministers and members of other churches in the neighborhood had been invited, and came in large numbers to witness the solemn service, and at the close were invited to sit down to a generous repast of turkey and plum pudding, according to the old-time fashion at ordinations and dedications.

The modern fashion of running into debt or calling upon everybody to help pay last bills, and some not quite the last, had never been heard of then. The pastor, during the building operation, not only devoted his time and strength to the work, but relinquished his salary, or left it to the free-will offerings of the people, which amounted to about $300 for the year. Those who wanted a new church, in those days, expected to build it out of their own pockets, with their own hard work; and when it was done, dedicate it to the Lord, with prayer and psalm and sermon, giving thanks and praise to God for all the good things he had so bountifully bestowed upon them.

The dedicatory hymn, or psalm, sung on this occasion was from Dr. Watts' grand version of the 132d psalm:

Arise, O King of grace, arise,
And enter to the rest;
Lo! Thy church awaits with longing eyes,
Thus to be owned and blest.

Enter with all Thy glorious train,
Thy spirit and Thy word;
All that the ark did once contain
Could no such grace afford.

Here let the Son of David reign,
Let God's anointed shine;
Justice and truth His court maintain,
With love and power divine.

It was sung with the accompaniment of viols and violins, by choir and congregation, heartily as unto the Lord, and not unto men.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. Charles H. Ricketts of Thorndike preaches again at the Union church to-morrow. Rev. John Ricketts of Wales supplies the Baptist pulpit.

Names of scholars not absent during the autumn term of the primary school in this village: Jerry Casey, Ariste Dupont, Joseph Grigware, Robert Hayes, James Schofield, Mamie Hayes, Maggie Longtine, Della Ludington, Rosanna Mahoney, Hattie Warriner, Matilda McDougall. Absent but one-half day: Michael Fogarty, James Sullivan, Jessie Kenerson, Emma Ludington.

WALES.

Charles A. Royce and son from Boston were in Wales spending Thanksgiving.

John C. Sullivan, an operator in the Wales mill, left Tuesday night, taking $15 of his room-mate's money with him.

The ladies' aid society held a pop-corn ball festival Wednesday evening in the vestry, which was enjoyed very much by all.

Our citizens generally will regret to learn that our popular stage driver, Mr. Sessions, has resigned, and his genial countenance will be seen no more on the stage.

Otis Pratt, one of the oldest, if not the oldest citizen in town, was buried Tuesday. He had long been an invalid, but the patience and tender care of his daughter, with whom he lived, soothed his later years, and at the ripe age of 92 he has departed.

THORNDIKE.

The schools of this village have commenced after the short intermission with an unusually good attendance.

F. S. Breard, who has kept a grocery store here, has removed to Springfield, where he expects to engage in business.

About fifty neighbors and friends passed last week Friday evening very pleasantly with Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Hastings, at their home. An elegant repast was served at 6 o'clock, after which music and conversation filled the time.

Names of scholars not absent in the second intermediate school during the past term: Genie Hutchinson, Mary Gerald, Genevra Clark, Bessie Edwards, Mary O'Donnell, Eugene Sughrue, Matthew Hurley, Michael Fleming, Isaac Gerald, John O'Leary, Freddie LaPlant.

MONSON.

The skating rink closed last Saturday. The proprietors will return again some time next month.

James Wyllie, the champion checker player, closed his series of 100 games with our players Monday evening, winning 92 of them, the other 8 being drawn.

The entertainment announced for Wednesday evening by "The Favorites" comedy company was postponed to a future day, on account of sickness in the company.

Says the Boston Globe: "The first selectman in Monson is trial justice, master of Masonic Lodge, Sunday school superintendent, chairman of committee on academy, runs the grist mill, saw mill, shingle mill, planing machine and carpenter's shop, retails corn, meal, grain, lime, etc.,—and attends to his own business."

BONDVILLE.

Murdock Bros. have just received a lot of new goods.

G. W. Canterbury has the contract to build two more houses.

The schools have commenced, and the teachers are ready any time to receive a visit from the parents of the pupils.

With four school teachers and all the other young people our village can boast of, why cannot we have a lyceum, dramatic club, or literary society? It would be instructive to the young people, and perhaps to the older ones.

The following scholars in the Bondville schools have been neither absent nor tardy during the past term: Grammar school—Clara Collis, Minnie Culver, Mary Grady, Nettie Lamb, Mary Landers, Gertie Smith, Nettie Thayer, Frank Bagley, Timmy Clifford. Intermediate—Mary Callahan, Maggie Landers, Abbie Lusty, Hannie Sullivan, Maggie Shea, Thomas Moynihan, Scott Merrifield, Sumner O'Regan. Second primary—Katie Sullivan, Frankie Lamb, Tommie Fitzgerald. First primary—Abby Moynihan, Lizzie Bagley, Jerry Shea, John Lusty, Willie Lusty.

WARREN.

Mr. Skipper is building a shop on Southbridge street.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met in the ladies' parlor Wednesday evening.

William Sumner of East Brimfield had his head badly hurt at the new mill on Thursday.

F. W. Shepard, of Windsorville, has taken the hotel. Mr. Mulcahy has gone to Holyoke.

Rev. T. C. Martin of South Hadley exchanged with Rev. Mr. Sanderson last Sabbath.

Crescent Division of the Sons of Temperance has organized and chosen officers for the ensuing year.

The musical association has decided upon Mason Broad of Worcester for director, and chosen their officers for the year.

Rev. Mr. Forbes preached to young men last Sabbath, and strongly urged them not to follow the vices of the present time.

The teachers held their monthly meeting Tuesday evening. The best method of teaching geography was discussed, and an essay upon the subject was read.

Mrs. Laura A. Dainty will give the last entertainment of the course next Monday evening, consisting of miscellaneous readings, with vocal and instrumental music.

Charles M. Allen, a young man who has lived in Dr. Deland's family for ten years, took morphine last week Thursday night, and died from the effects before morning. The funeral was held on Sunday afternoon. His head had troubled him for some time, and it is thought this brought on despondency, and caused him to take his life.

WILBRAHAM.

The public schools of the town commence the Winter term on Monday.

Rev. Mr. Howard, of the Congregational church, exchanged with Rev. Mr. Root of Hampden last Sabbath.

R. R. Wright and daughter are visiting in New York, where they intend to spend part of the Winter with his son.

Prof. W. H. H. Phillips of the academy has given land for the establishment of a mission in Pembina county, Dakota.

There will be a fellowship meeting of seven of the Eastern Hampden Congregational churches at the South church next Wednesday.

Prof. J. H. Porter of Hartford gave a variety entertainment, consisting of scenes of ventriloquism, feats of legerdemain, etc., at the hotel hall on Thursday evening.

The Young Woman's Missionary Society of the South church met with Miss Jessie Lilley last Saturday afternoon and evening, and held a dime sociable Wednesday evening, at the home of Miss Emily Phelps.

The Farmers' Club held the first meeting of the season at the house of D. Havens on Monday evening. Mr. Havens read a fine essay upon "Farm Crops of the Past Year." After congratulating the club upon their good health and success since their last meeting, he stated that he had experimented with fourteen different varieties of crops, raised corn at 52 cents a bushel and sorghum at 48 cents a gallon. Samples of the sorghum were tested by the club and pronounced excellent. Other members spoke of the results of their labors the past season. Chas. Corbin had raised 80 bushels of corn to the acre, at a cost of 50 cents a bushel; Wm. Day corn, 75 cents a bushel, 180 bushels of potatoes on ⅝ of an acre of land, at 16 cents a bushel; Geo. Lee 98 bushels of potatoes on 50 rods at 20 cents a bushel; A. J. Blanchard, 75 bushels of corn to the acre, at 40 cents a bushel, potatoes 200 bushels to the acre, and had harvested 150 tons of hay. A letter was read from Chauncey L. Buell of Ludlow, regretting that he was unable to be present. The next meeting of the club will be with M. F. Beebe, Dec. 12th, at which the discussion of the same subject will be continued.

BRIMFIELD.

The Ladies' Union of the Second Congregational church had an oyster supper at the town hall Thursday evening.

The Hitchcock Free High school commenced its winter term on Tuesday, with 103 pupils. Others expected to come in will make the number about 110.

The young people of the First Congregational church announce an entertainment at the parish hall next Wednesday evening by the quartette of the First church choir of Springfield, consisting of Mrs. A. F. Barrett, soprano; Mrs. J. C. Ingersoll, alto; J. C. Ingersoll, tenor; Geo. B. Bond, bass; Miss Maude C. Newell, pianist; assisted by Mr. C. H. Lang, humorous and dramatic reader.

On Friday, after Thanksgiving, mine host of the Brimfield House, (who tips the scales at 275 lbs.) ever alert for the delicacies and varieties of the season, dispatched an expert to Sherman's pond to ascertain the thickness of the ice, who reported the pond all frozen over and ice three inches thick. Mr. Munroe and Frank E. Webster, a young man of 118 lbs., having secured suitable bait, started for the pond. After setting some half dozen hooks, and securing one pickerel, one foot in length, mine host found himself up to the arms in water, the ice being at that place only about one inch thick. Webster, who was near, grasped him by the hand, but finding that on the smooth ice he was going into, rather than bringing Munroe from the water, seized his axe, and cutting places in the ice for his boot heels, succeeded in extricating Mr. Munroe and landing him at length on the ice, only to see him again break through. The experiment was again repeated, this time with success, and the parties agreed to separately gather up their fishing tackle and return home. While doing this, Webster broke through, but hastily rolled out on to the ice without assistance, when the parties returned home. Too much praise cannot be awarded the parties for their self possession in extricating themselves from their perilous position. By measurements afterwards made the water at the place where this happened was found to be eight feet deep. After their return home the parties were congratulated by their friends here, and by telephone from Palmer, on their fortunate escape, mine host also receiving many orders for flounders, hand-caught pickerel, etc. "All's well that ends well."

WARE AND VICINITY.

The East Congregational Sunday school held a Thanksgiving concert at the church Sunday afternoon.

C. A. Stevens & Co. were awarded a bronze medal for their flannels at the fair of the Mass. Charitable Mechanic Association.

Rev. A. J. Hall's horse dropped dead in the street a few days since. Mr. Hall has the sympathy of his many friends in his loss.

John Stevenson's carriage, from Gilbertville, was run into and badly injured Monday evening by a team from New Braintree.

The Catholic fair at Gilbertville has closed after a successful run of nine nights. The total receipts were $1600, with expenses of about $200.

About 3350 lbs. of turkeys were disposed of by our seven marketmen for Thanksgiving, besides a large amount of chickens and other meat.

The Otis company put in circulation $30,057.99 as their pay roll for last month; not quite up to some previous months, as a part of their works were stopped four days.

About fifty persons employed by the Otis Co. in the finishing room and box shop made John Kennedy, superintendent of those departments, a surprise visit last week, leaving valuable presents.

Westboro has secured the services of an able assistant in its high school, in the person of Miss Jennie J. Robinson of Ware, late preceptress of Prospect Hill school for young ladies at Greenfield.

E. H. Baker, agent of the Otis Co., received a few days since $7 conscience money. It was inclosed in an envelope, and with it a slip of paper on which was written, in a disguised hand, "Due the Otis company."

Ten doctors are residents of Ware at the present time, and in addition to this a traveling doctor has been stopping at the Hampshire House the past week. The new French doctors are St. Jacques from Chicopee, Lacette from Canada and Lafreniere from Bellows Falls.

Dr. Thayer, who has recently returned from an extended tour of Europe, Egypt and the Holy Land, is visiting his sister, Mrs. Wales H. Newland. At the temperance prayer meeting and also at the Methodist meeting Sunday evening he gave an interesting account of some of his travels.

The Ware Musical society, at a meeting Thursday evening, decided to give a public rehearsal Dec. 15, to which a small admission fee will be charged. It is also proposed to canvass for the names of those who will become honorary members of the society, for the sake of helping the good work along.

A town meeting has been called by the selectmen, to be held next Wednesday, to see if the town will choose a committee to look after the interests of the town in regard to locating roads and streets at a hearing before the county commissioners, soon to be held for that purpose, and to see if the town will authorize the committee to employ counsel and provide plans and surveys if in their judgment the interests of the town require it.

The Christian Union, which commences its thirteenth year next month, is in every way desirable as a family newspaper. It is large, containing twenty-eight pages; comprehensive, touching upon all topics in which the public is interested; and of high literary merit, the editorial staff comprising Messrs. Lyman Abbott, Eliot McCormick and Hamilton W. Mabie, assisted by the best literary talent in the country. Mr. Beecher will contribute to its columns even more frequently than in the past, and the Christian Union will undoubtedly in the future fully sustain the enviable reputation already so fairly attained among the weekly papers of the present time. See its prospectus in another column.

The will of the late Col. Aaron Bagg of West Springfield gives $3000 to Park Street church at West Springfield, and $1000 to the Boston Home Missionary society. His widow is to have $60,000 and the use of the house and furniture, his two daughters $15,000 each, and the four sons the rest of the property.

The directors of the suspended Pacific National Bank of Boston are considering the advisability of continuing business. To do so they must sacrifice the present capital of $1,000,000, and raise $1,500,000 additional.

A receiver has been appointed for the American Book Exchange of New York, which for the past three years has been making and selling books at such wonderfully cheap rates.

The new church at West Brookfield is to have a 2500 pound bell, the gift of Homer and Charles Merriam of Springfield.

December Magazines.

Harper's Magazine for December—the beginning of the sixty-fourth volume—offers its readers an unusually rich and varied entertainment. The frontispiece is a fine full-page illustration by Abbey of Herrick's poem "Upon Sappho." The opening article is a very interesting description of the royal family of Sweden—The Bernadottes—with twenty-four elegant illustrations. T. B. Aldrich contributes a fine poem entitled "Prescience," charmingly illustrated by Abbey. Joseph Hatton in his third paper on "Journalistic London" gives considerable space to Edwin Arnold, author of "The Light of Asia." William Hamilton Gibson contributes another of his delightful papers, entitled "Among Our Footprints," with sixteen illustrations. Alfred T. Story presents some timely information respecting William Penn's Grave at Jordan, which shows why permission could not be granted for the removal of Penn's remains to America. Howard Pyle contributes a short paper entitled "Autumn Sketches in the Pennsylvania Highlands," illustrated by five exquisite engravings from his own drawings. William Allen Butler, the author of "Nothing to Wear," contributes a poem, entitled "The Garden of the Gods." A curious article respecting certain popular delusions, entitled "Monsters," is contributed by M. D. Conway, with illustrations. Prof. John Fiske's paper, "How America came to be Discovered," offers some very interesting suggestions for thoughtful readers. The author of 'Cape Cod Folks" contributes a characteristic short story, "Sam Sperry's Pension." A humorous sketch, entitled "A Crisis," is contributed by Mrs. L. W. Champney. One of the most interesting articles in the number for women is entitled "Economy in Dress," by Mrs. T. W. Dewing, author of "Beauty in Dress." Thomas Hardy's novel, "A Laodicean," approaches its conclusion. It is to be followed by a novelette entitled "Prudence," a story of Æsthetic London, by Mrs. John Lillie. "Anne," Miss Constance Fenimore Woolson's novel, will be continued for several months. The editorial departments are crowded with entertaining and instructive reading.

The December Atlantic contains the closing chapters of Mr. Howells's and Mr. James's stories, which for months have been notable features of this magazine. An article of peculiar interest just now, in view of the trial of Guiteau, is that upon "British State Assassins and the Defense of Insanity," by James W. Clarke. Miss Harriet W. Preston contributes a charming article entitled "At Canterbury." Richard L. Dugdale continues his papers on Social Science with one on the "Origin of Crime in Society." "Socialists in a German University," by Willard Brown, is a paper that will be read with no little interest. Mrs. Kate Gannett Wells writes an instructive article on "Caste in American Society." One of the Atlantic's excellent short stories is "Hester's Dower," by S. A. L. E. M. Other interesting articles are upon "Shakespeare and Berlioz," by Theodore Child; "The Habitant of Lower Canada," by Edward Farrer; and a poem by Edith M. Thomas. The number contains the usual excellent book reviews, and the Contributors' Club is of more than ordinary interest. The Atlantic promises for next year serial stories by Thomas Hardy, author of "Far from the Madding Crowd;" by Mr. Bishop, author of "Detmold;" Mr. Lathrop, author of "A Study of Hawthorne;" and by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. The other departments of the Atlantic will be of the same high order as heretofore; and though the magazine does not offer its readers the special attraction of illustrations, its literary contents are so excellent and so varied that it commends itself to the hearty favor of all who like and can appreciate the best literature. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

A CARD.—We would hereby express our heartfelt thanks to the neighbors and friends who have shown us so much kindness and sympathy in our recent affliction.

WM. G. PASCO AND CHILDREN.

Thorndike, Dec. 1st, 1881.

FIRES.—The works of the American Rubber Co. at East Cambridge were burned Monday night, involving a loss of $500,000.—— The business portion of Augusta, Ark., was burned Monday night, at a loss of $200,000.

Rev. Dr. W. L. Gage, a Hartford clergyman, found a burglar in his residence last Sunday evening. He clinched the fellow and was dragged into the street, where the burglar was thrown and held until aid arrived.

It is reported that a contract has been made for the construction of 50 miles of railroad in Minnesota next year, upon which Edison is to test the efficiency of his electrical engines as a motive power for railroads.

More cases of sick headache, biliousness, constipation, etc., can be cured in less time, with less medicine, and for less money, by using Carter's Little Liver Pills, than by any other means. 37

We saw some very nobby wolf robes and good horse blankets at Payne's Harness store, 477 Main street, Springfield. Now the weather is getting cold, you will want one, and Payne says he will sell quite as low as any one else.

Made from harmless materials, and adapted to the needs of fading and failing hair, Parker's Hair Balsam has taken the first rank as an elegant and reliable hair restorative. 4w37

D. F. Davison, who purchased the watch and jewelry business of the late George Hunt, (402 Main street, Springfield,) has been so increasing the stock and business as to compel him to seek more roomy quarters, and he can now be found at 354 Main street with a full line of watches, jewelry, clocks, silver and plated ware, spectacles, &c. While keeping a complete assortment of the better quality of medium goods, he has also a large line of the very finest jewelry and watches to be found anywhere in the city. Our readers should see his show windows, which rival those seen in any of the larger cities.

SHILOH'S VITALIZER is what you need for constipation, loss of appetite, dizziness, and all symptoms of dyspepsia. Price 10 and 75 cents per bottle. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE has been proved to be a positive antidote for Catarrh at any stage. Catarrh being a constitutional infection as well as a local inflammation, the elements of the Cure are absorbed by the purulent mucous. It is unquestionably the most important medical discovery since vaccination. Supplied by all druggists, or DELIVERED by D. B. DEWEY & Co., 46 DEY ST., NEW YORK, at $1 a package. Pamphlets, with full explanations and overwhelming proofs, mailed free. d

THAT HACKING COUGH can be so quickly cured by Shiloh's Cure. We guarantee it. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.—It seems strange that any one will suffer from derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the BEST BLOOD PURIFIER ever discovered, effectually curing scrofula, syphylitic disorders, weakness of the kidneys, erysipelas, malaria; all nervous disorders and debility, bilious complaints and all diseases indicating an impure condition of the blood, liver, kidneys, stomach, skin, etc. It corrects digestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it ACTS LIKE A CHARM, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

BAKER'S PAIN PANACEA cures pain in man and beast. For use externally and internally.

DR. ROGER'S VEGETABLE WORM SYRUP instantly destroys worms and removes the secretions which cause them.

CASTORIA.—For sour stomach, constipation, and fretfulness of children. Pleasant, safe and cheap. 900 drops; 35 doses, 35 cents.

CENTAUR LINIMENT.—Invaluable to families and owners of horses. For sale everywhere.

WILL YOU SUFFER with dyspepsia and Liver Complaint? Shiloh's Vitalizer is guaranteed to cure you. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

HAVE Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry always at hand. It cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Consumption and all Throat and Lung Complaints. 50 cents and $1 a bottle. †

SLEEPLESS NIGHTS, made miserable by that terrible cough. Shiloh's Cure is the remedy for you. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

THE Peruvian Syrup has cured thousands who were suffering from Dyspepsia, Debility, Liver Complaint, Boils, Humors, Female Complaints, etc. Pamphlets sent free to any address. Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston. †

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. In ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

For lame back, side or chest use Shiloh's Porous Plaster. Price 25c. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

SHILOH'S COUGH and Consumption Cure is sold by us on a guarantee. It cures consumption. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and mixtures of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

CROUP, WHOOPING COUGH and Bronchitis immediately relieved by Shiloh's Cure. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

WOOD AND LUMBERMEN ATTENTION!

This is to call attention to a valuable Wood and Timber Lot soon to be thrown into market.

Said lot belongs to the estate of the late John Ward, situated in Palmer, Mass., and contains 100 acres (more or less). Every square rod of this tract is accessible to horse teams, slopes toward the shipping points on the B. & A. R. R., one-half mile north of Blanchardville lower crossing, one-third of a mile northe st from Tenneyville crossing, and one mile east from Palmer Depot, a shipping point in six directions.

The present growth (which is mostly of hand some chestnuts) has been growing from 30 to 40 years, and portions are now ready for cutting.

Taking into consideration the size and situation of the lot, its accessibility and nearness to market, with the present and prospective demand and high prices for telegraph and telephone poles, railroad ties, lumber and wood, this is undoubtedly the most desirable tract of woodland to be found within many miles.

The time and conditions of sale will be made public in a few days. Till then all interested are referred to HIRAM CONVERSE, near the premises, or to C. H. PLUMLEY, Palmer Depot, and are invited to examine the lot and surroundings, or to correspond with

THE CHRISTIAN UNION.
LYMAN ABBOTT, EDITOR.

With the first of January, 1882, The Christian Union enters upon its thirteenth year and twenty-fifth volume. In the future, as in the past, it proposes to be

I.—HELPFUL. It will give every week something which will help its readers to be more true, more patient, more courageous, more gentle, more faithful—in a word, nobler Christian men and women. It will help parents to be forbearing, children to be obedient, servants to be hearty, employers to be considerate, neighbors to be friendly, and friends to be faithful. It will help every heart to bear its own burden, and a neighbor's burden, too, and to grow more near to God by a daily life more worthy of a true Christian manhood.

II.—SPIRITUAL. It will not devote twenty columns to hammering at the shell and one to picking out the kernel. Doubtful disputations about forms and methods and rites and formulas will not jostle from its colums the explication and application of the "truths that make for righteousness." Mint and anise and cummin will go in fine print; judgment, mercy and faith in clean, clear, bold-faced type.

III.—FRESH. It will deal with the theories of the present. Its motto will be "day by day our daily bread." It will not ransack the middle ages for topics. On the eve of a political election it will present the duties of citizenship; in a time of religious revival it will present methods of Christian work. The text of the minister is to be found in the word of God; the text of the editor in the providence of God. He will study that book as God turns its leaves over for him from day to day.

IV.—COMPACT. It will put great truths in little compass. It will take introductions for granted and will remorselessly cut off perorations. It will allow no space for rhetorical eloquence. It will allow no superfluous words. In time its contributors will catch the spirit of its editors, and every page will march compact as an army to battle. It will throw out no skirmish line and allow no stragglers.

V.—MANY-SIDED. It will seek the best thoughts of the best thinkers on every topic of importance. Its round table will be a famous gathering place of free knights. Every contributor will be at liberty to speak his own mind. The paper will not be a personal organ, a whispering gallery to magnify one small voice into a sound of thunder. It will have much weight because in it will speak many weighty men.

VI.—Above all it will be CATHOLIC, COURTEOUS, CHRISTIAN. Putting away all uncharitableness, it will speak the truth in love. It will make mistakes sometimes, for there is only one infallible man, and he lives in Rome and is not an editor. But its readers will learn to trust it, and to believe that if it is sometimes mistaken it never deliberately misreports, and never consciously conceals the truth.

In carrying out this general plan, the paper will avail itself of the services not only of its regular editorial staff, comprising

MESSRS. LYMAN ABBOTT, ELIOT MCCORMICK AND HAMILTON W. MABIE,

but of the best literary talent in the country. Mr. Beecher's retirement from the Editorial Chair will only make him a more frequent contributor, while the large force of writers, editorial and otherwise, who have associated with the paper in past years will continue to enrich it with their choicest thought.

The subscription price is $3 per annum; Clergymen $2.50. Send one three-cent stamp for sample copy. Address
THE CHRISTIAN UNION,

TO THE HONORABLE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS IN GENERAL COURT ASSEMBLED:

The undersigned petitioners, citizens of Belchertown, in said Commonwealth, respectfully represent that the convenience of the inhabitants of that part of said town which lies southerly of a line beginning about 231 rods southerly of the northeasterly corner of the town of Ludlow, and running thence easterly in a straight line to the west line of the town of Ware, at a point about 60 rods northeasterly from the southwest corner of said last named town, would be greatly promoted by having that part of said town of Belchertown set off and annexed to the town of Palmer. We therefore pray that so much of said town of Belchertown as lies southerly of the line above described may be set off from said town of Belchertown and annexed to said town of Palmer.

That Clock.

I have listened to the clock
That hangs above my head;
It ticks away the livelong day,
And curious words it said.

It whispered first, "You love him,"
Then softly sighed, "Take care!"
It called his name out clear and loud,
Then murmured low, "Beware!"

It said, "He thinks not of you;"
And then it said, "He dotes;"
Then came a merry interlude
Of crowing, chuckling notes.

O wicked, wicked clock,
To tell my secrets so;
I still my heart for shame
That these things you should know.

I'll take you from the wall,
I'll tie your naughty hands;
I'll tie a veil across your face,
Doom you to garret lands.

Unless you quick repent,
And tick back every word,
You never more shall see the light
Where you such scandals heard.

—Minnie C. Ballard.

SWEET-FLAG CANDY.

Sweet-flag candy is relished by all lovers of sweetmeats, and is a valuable aid to digestion, as it will stop the disagreeable rising of gas, so annoying to dyspeptics. Being eaten greedily by children, it is often better than other medicine. A bit held in the mouth when one is caring for the sick will often counteract the effect of contagious germs. To prepare it, take fresh, healthy roots of sweet-flag, and after a careful washing, cut in slices one-eighth of an inch in thickness. Put them into a stewpan or bright basin, and pour a little more cold water over them than will cover them. Set on the stove and heat slowly; when the water boils turn it off. If the candy is desired for medicine, quite enough of the strength has been removed, but for a sweetmeat it is better if boiled up and the water turned off four or five times. Now measure the sliced roots, and to each two cupfuls allow one and a half cupfuls of white sugar, turn on water enough to cover, return to the stove and simmer slowly, stirring often until the water has quite boiled away; then turn out on buttered plates, and stir frequently until dry. The long simmering after the sugar is added makes the root quite tender, and the candy will keep fresh and nice for years.—Country Gentleman.

A CURE FOR SMALL-POX.

A Paris physician says: "I herewith append a recipe which has been used to my knowledge in hundreds of cases. It will prevent or cure the small-pox though the pittings are filling. When Jenner discovered cow-pox in England, the world of science hurled an avalanche of fame upon his head, but when the most scientific school of medicine in the world—that of Paris—published this recipe as a panacea for small-pox, it passed unheeded. It is as unfailing as fate, and conquers in every instance. It is harmless when taken by a well person. It will also cure scarlet fever. Here is the recipe as I have used it, and cured my children of scarlet fever; here it is as I have used it to cure the small-pox; when learned physicians said the patient must die, it cured: Sulphate of zinc, one grain; foxglove (digitalis), one grain; half a teaspoonful of sugar; mix with two tablespoonfuls of water. When thoroughly mixed, add four ounces of water. Take a spoonful every hour. Either disease will disappear in twelve hours. For a child, smaller doses, according to age. If counties would compel their physicians to use this, there would be no need of pest-houses. If you value advice and experience, use this for that terrible disease.

POTATOES ARE ALWAYS AN EXPENSIVE FOOD.—That is to say, comparatively. A bushel of potatoes (60 lbs.) contains nearly 50 lbs. of water and only about 10 lbs. of solid nutriment, which is mainly starch. At present wholesale prices here this is nearly 10 cents a pound for the food they yield. Fair wheat flour, at $8 a barrel, is only 4 cents a pound. Corn at 80 cents a bushel (56 lbs.) has nearly 50 lbs. of nutriment, costing less than 2 cents per lb. Taking the country altogether, and the prices of potatoes, corn, wheat, etc., high and low, from year to year, the average nutritious food obtained in the form of potatoes costs 4 to 5 times as much as it does in the consumption of corn or beans, and 2½ to 4 times as much as in the form of wheat flour, or oatmeal, beans, rice, etc.—American Agriculturist for December.

A young lady who graduated from our high school last July is teaching school up in New Hampshire. A bashful young gentleman visited the school the other day, and was asked by the teacher to say a few words to the pupils. This was his speech: "Scholars, I hope you will always love your school and your teacher as much as I do." Tableau, giggling boys and girls and a blushing schoolma'am.—Lawrence American.

A frank old granger, in advertising his household goods for sale, wound up the list of articles with "and a lot of trash not worth much." If he had been an æsthetic he would have called it "a lot of valuable bric-a-brac."—Norristown Herald.

"I declare," said Julia, "you take the words right out of mouth." "No wonder; they are so sweet," said Henry. The day was set that evening.

The components of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup are daily precribed by the ablest physicians, whose success is due to the specific influence of these components. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, skillfully prepared for immediate use, is for sale by all druggists.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into their graves when, by using Parker's Ginger Tonic, they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength surely coming back to them. See other column. 6

AMPUTATION OF THE LEG.

THE OLD FAMILY PHYSICIAN AT FAULT—DR. DAVID KENNEDY THE SUCCESSFUL SURGEON.

Money is the universal necessity, and none but a cynic or a fool will affect to despise it. Mr. Abram Ellsworth, of Port Ewen, Ulster county, N. Y., had realized this truth. His disease involved the whole of his thigh-bone, and the suffering man looked forward, not without apparent reason, to death as his only deliverer. His family physician refused to amputate the limb—asserting that the operation would kill the patient on the spot. Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who was consulted, held a different opinion, and amputated the limb. The doctor then administered freely his great Blood Specific FAVORITE REMEDY to afford tone and strength to the system, prevent the return of the disease, and Mr. Ellsworth remains to this day in the bloom of health. This gentleman's disease was the offspring of foul blood, and Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY purified the blood and restored to him the power once more to enjoy his life. Are you suffering from any disease traceable to the same cause? Try Favorits Remedy. Your druggist has it. ONE DOLLAR a bottle. Bear in mind the proprietor's name and address: Dr. David KENNEDY, Rondout, New York. 4w35

Simmons Liver Regulator!

THE GREAT UNFAILING

SPECIFIC FOR LIVER COMPLAINT.

THE SYMPTOMS OF LIVER COMPLAINT

Are uneasiness and pain in the side, sometimes pain in the shoulder, and is mistaken for rheumatism; the stomach is also affected with loss of appetite and sickness; bowels, in general, costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, and dull, heavy sensation; considerable loss of memory, with painful sensation of having left undone something which ought to have been done; often complaining of weakness, debility and low spirits. Sometimes many of the above symptoms attend the disease, and at other times very few of them; but the Liver is generally the organ most involved.

REGULATE THE LIVER, AND PREVENT

Dyspepsia, Constipation, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Chills and Fever, Headache, Colic, Depression of Spirits, Sour Stomach, Heartburns, Piles, etc.

TONIC ALTERATIVE AND CATHARTIC!

Simmons Liver Regulator, purely vegetable, is the medicine generally used in the South to arouse the torpid liver to healthy action.

It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy on the Liver and Kidneys!

The action of the Regulator is free from nausea or griping. It is more effective in starting the secretions of the liver, causing the bile to act as a cathartic. When there is an excess of bile in the stomach, the Regulator is an active purge; after the removal of the bile it will regulate the bowels and impart vigor and health to the whole system.

See that you get the genuine in White Wrapper, with red Z, prepared only by J. H. Zeilin & Co. Sold by all druggists.

JOURNAL FFICE.

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1882.

THE SUN for 1882 will make its fifteenth annual revolution under the present management, shining, as always, for all, big and little, mean and gracious, contented and unhappy, Republican and Democratic, depraved and virtuous, intelligent and obtuse. The SUN'S light is for mankind and womankind of every sort; but it's genial warmth is for the good, while it pours hot discomfort on the blistering backs of the persistently wicked.

The SUN of 1868 was a newspaper of a new kind. It discarded many of the forms, and a multitude of superfluous words and phrases of ancient journalism. It undertook to report in a fresh, succinct, unconventional way all the news of the world, omitting no event of human interest, and commenting upon affairs with the fearlessness of absolute independence. The success of this experiment was the success of the SUN. It effected a permanent change in the style of American newspapers. Every important journal established in this country in the dozen years past has been modeled after the SUN. Every important journal already existing has been modified and bettered by the force of the SUN'S example.

The SUN of 1882 will be the same outspoken, truth-telling, and interesting newspaper.

We shall print all the news, putting it into readable shape, and measuring its importance, not by the traditional yardstick, but by its real interest to the people. Whenever anything happens worth reporting we get the particulars, whether it happens in Brooklyn or Bokhara.

In politics we have decided opinions; and are accustomed to express them in language that can be understood. We say what we think about men and events. That habit is the only secret of the SUN'S political course.

The WEEKLY SUN gathers into eight pages the best matter of the seven daily issues. An agricultural department of unequaled merit, full market reports, and a liberal proportion of literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence complete the WEEKLY SUN, and make it the best newspaper for the farmer's household that was ever printed.

Who does not know and read and like the SUNDAY SUN, each number of which is a Golconda of interesting literature, with the best poetry of the day, prose every line worth reading, news, humor—matter enough to fill a good sized book, and infinitely more varied and entertaining than any book, big or little?

If our idea of what a newspaper should be pleases you, send for the SUN.

Our terms are as follows: For the daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post-paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cts. per month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of the SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 per year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

Out and Into.

He brought us out that He might bring us in.—Deut. vi. 23.

Out of the distance and darkness so deep,
Out of the settled and perilous sleep,
Out of the region and shadow of death,
Out of its foul and pestilent breath;
Out of the bondage and wearying chains,
Out of companionship ever with stains,
Into the light and glory of God,
Into the holiest, made clean by blood,
Into His arms—the embrace and the kiss,
Into the scene of ineffable bliss,
Into the quiet and infinite calm,
Into the place of the song and the psalm.
Wonderful love, that has wrought all for me!
Wonderful work, that has thus set me free!
Wonderful ground, upon which I have come!
Wonderful tenderness, welcoming home!

Out of disaster and ruin complete,
Out of the struggle and dreary defeat,
Out of sorrow and bondage and shame,
Out of the evils too fearful to name,
Out of my guilt and the criminal's doom,
Out of the dreading, and terror and gloom,
Into the sense of forgiveness and rest,
Into inheritance with all the blest,
Into a righteous and permanent peace,
Into the grandest and fullest release,
Into the comfort without an alloy,
Into a perfect and confident joy.
Wonderful holiness, bringing to light!
Wonderful grace, putting all out of sight!
Wonderful lowliness, draining my cup!
Wonderful purpose, that ne'er gave me up!

Out of the horror of being alone,
Out and forever, of being my own,
Out of the bitterness, madness and strife,
Out of myself and all I called life,
Out of the hardness of heart and of will,
Out of the longings that nothing could fill,
Into communion with Father and Son,
Into the ecstacies full to the brim,
Into the having of all things with Him,
Into Christ Jesus—there ever to dwell,
Into more blessings than words can e'er tell.
Wonderful Person, whose face I'll behold!
Wonderful story, there all to be told!
Wonderful all the dread way, that He trod!
Wonderful end—that He brought me to God!

THE BREAD UPON THE WATERS.

A crisp winter evening, just after dusk. Here and there a frostily-shining star, and a pale new moon, hanging like a silver crescent half way between horizon and zenith. Snow packed firm, and hard, and slippery, and an intense cold, brooding with the solemn silence like twin brothers.

Bessie Holt stepped outside the door looking like a picture, in her thick scarlet shawl, pinned over her head and wrapped warmly about her shoulders, with her happy eyes shining, her cheeks flushed, her red lips firmly closed—a healthy, contented country lassie, who had lived all her 17 years of life in the country, and had no longings for the gaiety and excitement of the city.

She closed the door carefully after her and went fearlessly down the starlit path to the barn, singing the refrain of a Sunday school hymn in a low contralto voice.

By the corner of the big corn-crib Phil, her brother, met her.

"Hello, sis! Cold, isn't it? What are you out for?"

A big, manly fellow, with handsome, blue eyes, that always lighted with pride and affection when he looked at Bessie.

"Mother sent me after you," she said, with a little laugh. "She was afraid you'd forget which of the chickens she wanted killed for to-morrow's market."

"I remember," he answered. "Now run back, Bess, before you take cold."

"The idea! I'm going down to the barn to say good-night to 'Lady May.' I'll lock up all right."

She hurried off, and because Phil knew she preferred to spend a sentimental minute alone with her pet pony—because he knew Bessie would not want anyone to see her hug 'Lady May's' arched neck, and kiss the proud little head, and hear her talk all sorts of nonsense—he went on towards the house and Bessie went skimming along alone to 'Lady May' in the big, red barn.

"Be sure to lock up," he shouted. "There are tramps around, and last night Squire Burnett's forks were stolen."

"All right!" Bessie shouted back. "Although what Squire Burnett's forks have to do with our barn I don't know," she thought, "that is, unless he'd not stop at a horse. And if 'Lady May'—oh, mercy!"

For Bessie had unlocked the door and lighted the lantern, and was half-way across the stable-floor, when a low, human voice sounded from the pile of bedding in an empty stall.

For one second, Bessie's impulse was to scream in fear for help; the next, she saw a pair of suffering eyes, dark and wistful, shining from the straw through the dim light.

"Don't scream! Please don't scream!"

A low, choked voice, gasping between fear and pain, and then Bessie recognized the crouched-up figure nestled under the straw was a young girl.

"What in the world are you doing here? What do you want? What—why, what is that?"

For a sudden turn of her lantern threw its light on a glittering pile of something lying partly concealed in the straw.

As she spoke, Bessie reached suddenly forward and grasped the package.

"Squire Burnett's stolen forks! Now I understand what you are here for. You are a thief, and you were hiding! You are a tramp and a thief!"

A little moan of pain answered her.

"I fell on the ice and twisted my ankle. It hurts me awfully—oh, it hurts me awfully—and I was so thankful to creep in here!"

The voice was sweet as Bessie's own, but vibrant with pain and apprehension, and all the stern horror died out of Bessie's face as she heard it.

"Are you in great pain," she asked, involuntarily stepping nearer the crouching figure, and seeing what great, beautiful dark eyes the girl had, and what masses of purple-black hair, all tangled and matted.

A moan, that begun in anguish and ended in defiance, accompanied the girl's answer.

"Am I in pain! Yes, I am; and hungry and starved, and homeless and friendless, and—a thief! Yes, that's what I am—a thief! I stole 'em last night, thinking I'd pawn 'em for bread when I got to the city. And I haven't touched victuals since yesterday."

A look of grave pity was in Bessie's sweet eyes.

"It is dreadful. But you shouldn't have stolen; you could have begged."

"Begged!" she repeated, bitterly. "Try it once! They slam the door in your face, and they set the dogs on you. Beg! I'll steal and get put in jail first, before I'll beg again!"

Bessie listened thoughtfully, gravely.

"I am sorry for you. I wish you would be a better girl. I—"

A derisive laugh interrupted her.

"The idea of being better. I like that."

"Yes, you can if you want to and I will help you. What is your name?"

A half sullen, half bewildered look flashed through the dumb, defiant pain in the great, dark eyes.

"It's mighty fancy, and I dare say you won't believe it. Folks call me 'Slippery Sithe;' but my name's Osyth—Osyth Laurent."

Osyth! It was after a saint that Bessie had read of in an old Norse legend.

"Very well, Osyth. It is a lovely name; you can and you ought to do credit to it. I will tell you what I will do. I will go bring you some supper, nice and warm, and a thicker dress, and some shoes and stockings. I'll get some liniment for your ankle, and—I won't tell any one you are here. You will promise me never, never to steal again, but to do your very best to find honest work, be it ever so humble—will you, Osyth?"

The girl looked at her amazed. Then two big tears rolled slowly down her haggard cheeks.

"You—you kind o' frighten me," she whispered, in awe-struck tones.

"No one shall molest you," Bess said, pityingly. "I will take the forks up to the house with me, and after you are gone, I will tell them I found them in the stall, half hidden in the straw."

She hurried back to the house, and, unknown even to her mother, hastily gathered together a plateful of wholesome food and warm coffee. She put liniment in her pocket and from the cast-off clothing in the big garret selected a few warm garments, and hurried back to the barn; while Phil and the handsome young doctor from New York, who was visiting at the big house up in the village, sat and talked, and waited for Bessie to come in—especially Doctor Raymond.

Out in the barn Bessie did her Christian deed, and fed and clothed, her hurt ankle soothed and softened, her heart touched to its very core, Osyth Laurent fell on her knees and kissed Bessie Holt's hand.

"I will try—I will try, so help me God!"

And then, after Bessie had seen her safely away, and "Lady May" had been kissed and caressed, Bessie went back to the glad surprise that awaited her, handsome young Frank Raymond's society, that with a little flutter at her heart, a little stirring of all her pulses, Bessie was obliged to admit was becoming very precious to her.

And surely that night, when the recording angel took his pen, it was to write over against Bessie Holt's name, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these little ones, ye have done it unto me."

* * * * * * * *

Five years later, and a glorious spring day, when grasses were springing up and leaves unfolding and birds singing in their blithesomeness of joy—an ideal day—and sweet Bessie Holt's wedding day, to which she and Dr. Raymond had looked forward during those happy years of courtship and betrothal, while Dr. Raymond had been building up a practice that would warrant him in giving the woman he loved a home worthy of her.

And now it was accomplished, and the May sunshine was laughing over the glad day, and Bessie, fair and womanly, was also too happy for speech.

The ceremony had been short, but brimming with sweet solemnity. Friends had left their heartfelt wishes for the wedded couple, and the doctor's carriage was at the door to take them to their beautiful new home, a mile or so away.

Just then a handsome barouche drove up, its shining panels glittering, its claret upholstery luscious and magnificent, its high-stepping horses dancing and curveting as the coachman held them, while the footman opened the little low door and assisted a lady to descend—a queenly, gloriously lovely woman—young and fair, whose silk dress rustled softly after her, and whose creamy fair face was alight with intensest interest as she swept imperiously up the little path and waited on the piazza while her servant knocked.

"Who can it be?" Phil asked, glancing through the window, his handsome blue eyes full of genuine admiration. "It is a mistake, unless you have some rich relations, Doc."

And then Bessie's cheeks suddenly paled, then flushed, as she looked at the card handed her; for the name was "Osyth Laurent Fane." She looked at her husband as she read the name.

"I will see her. It is a—it is somebody I know."

And she went into the big, old-fashioned parlor, to see the splendid, elegant lady come eagerly toward her and grasp her hands and kiss them in reverent tenderness.

"You surely remember me? It is really I—the forlorn little outcast—the miserable, starving, desperate girl whom you saved that winter night! I heard you were to be married to-day, and I knew I could bring you no purer joy than to tell you what you did for me. It was the turning-point in my life; I tried—God helped me—I found employment, and two years ago a rich old lady, childless and a widow, for whom I had sewed, legally adopted me. A year later she died, and I am her heiress—to $100,000—all through you!"

Miss Fane's words had rolled out so impetuous and fast that Bessie could only listen.

"I am so glad," she said at last, the happy tears standing in her eyes. "Let me introduce my husband and family to you, Miss Fane."

Osyth interrupted her.

"Please, 'Osyth!' it broke my hard heart the time you said it first. I have been waiting for years to hear you speak it again."

Bessie looked at the pure, lovely face—so proud and spirited, yet grand and noble. "'Osyth,'" she whispered tenderly, "Come—will you?"

* * * * * * * *

And when the next beautiful spring days came, one bright May noontide brought two blessed events; and Mrs. Raymond, pale and peaceful on her pillows, with her little Mayflower—her baby Osyth—on her arm, heard the joy-bells ring their merry clangor at the wedding of her brother Phil and Miss Fane, the beauty and heiress.

And, a little later, with arm around his bride, Phil made her tell him over again for the hundredth time, the story of that fateful winter night when sweet Bessie did her Christian duty.

The little daughter of a clergyman, hearing her father talking of John the Baptist, inquired what a Baptist might be, and then, "Are you a Baptist, papa?" "No, I am a Congregationalist." "What am I?" "You are a Congregationalist, too." The child paused a moment, and then with great earnestness asked, "Well, what is God?"

Attrition is to the stone what good influences are to the man; both polish, while they reveal hidden beauties.

A Soapsuds Idyl.

Her arms were white as milky curds;
Her speech was like the song of birds;
Her eyes were gray as mountain lakes,
Where dream of shadow stirs and breaks.
Her gown was print—her name was Sally—
Her summer years were barely twenty—
She dropped the soap to glance and dally—
And then her dimples came in plenty!
I praised her fingers, dripping sweet,
Where warmth and whiteness seem to meet—
I made her blush and made her pout,
And watched her wring the linen out.
Oh, to meet her in the valley,
Snatch her hand and call her Sally!
Oh, to find her on the hill,
Kiss, and call her Sally still!
Oh, to clasp her quite alone,
And call her Sally of one's own!
Thyme and marjoram were sweet,
All the lavender was blowing—
Through the honeysuckled heat
Bees were coming, bees were going.

PREPARING TEA FOR MARKET IN JAPAN.

The following statement of the treatment of Japanese teas by one who is familiar with the operations will interest many: I have put down tea as an article of manufacture, for although it is the leaf of a shrub, its treatment and preparation are such as to entitle it to be treated under this head. The firing and preparation of tea for market, as practiced in Japan, is as follows: The Japanese green tea may be divided into three general classes—colored, uncolored and basket-fired. The leaf used for all these is from the same plant, differing only in quality, condition, etc. All teas used by foreigners are first fired by the natives in the places where grown. If a grade of colored tea is to be made, this fired leaf (four or five pounds) is taken and put into iron pans or bowls, which are heated sometimes up to a temperature of 212 degrees Fahrenheit. The leaves are then rapidly stirred by hand against the smooth iron surfaces, some 20 minutes. A tea-spoonful of thoroughly pulverized soap-stone (saponite), and five grains, or so, of Chinese indigo are placed in the pan, and thoroughly rubbed into the leaf for about 20 minutes more, when half a tea-spoonful of soap-stone or gypsum, and pulverized tamarak bark (a species of larch) is added, and the stirring continues for 20 minutes more. It is then put into cold pans, and simply cold rubbed against the iron surfaces until it has the required polish, which is arrived at in from 40 minutes to an hour. This is the ordinary way of preparing colored tea. Other materials are perhaps sometimes used, but so far as I can learn, all are as harmless as these mentioned. The different manufacturers, of course, vary the process a little now and then, to produce slight changes of color. The leaf is then run through three to five sizes of sieves, till all the dust and loose coloring matter is separated. The shrinkage is about 12 per cent. It is held that the coloring is "beneficial to the leaf, tending to preserve its shape and flavor." The Japanese prepared teas, it is declared, are superior in purity to the Chinese. The latter use various drugs which are deleterious to health, such as Prussian blue in the place of indigo for coloring green teas, and black lead for coloring black teas.—San Francisco Bulletin.

WHAT ARE WILD OATS?

Wild oats are certain wild, wayward, lawless, sinful actions in the life of the young man. A general recklessness characterizes sowing wild oats. Profanity, the familiar language of vice, scoffing at sacred things, irreverence, a defiant indifference to virtuous conduct, is called sowing wild oats. Intimacy with fast company, late hours, all-night debauches, is called sowing wild oats. Frequenting billiard halls, gambling-rooms, drinking saloons, is called sowing wild oats. An honorable man will do only honorable things, an honest man, honest things, a pure man, pure things, a good man, good things, and by invincible logic the man who does wicked things is a wicked man. Any young man must wear that trademark who sows wild oats. Wild oats must be harvested, and the terrible fact meets us that the majority of young men never get over the sowing of wild oats. And those who do reform have suffered irreparable injury. Look at the harvest sanitarily. Good health is a fortune. See how men seek to recover it when lost, traversing oceans and continents, seeking the tropics and cool mountains, drawing on all medical science and impoverishing all pharmacy. Profligacy of health is enormous folly. Often there is no place for repentance, though it be sought with tears. But all sins labeled "wild oats" are vandals that destroy public health. They are grave-diggers. Wild oats are the only crop that grow up by gas-light.—Rev. J. O. Peck.

Gentleman meets a friend and takes him home to dinner. Arrived at the house he leaves him in the sitting-room, to announce the fact to his wife. The friend, hearing directly a clamor of tongues in the adjoining room, decorates the key-hole with his ear. Shrill voice—"Always the way, bringing people home without a minute's warning. Him, too! Why couldn't you leave him to fatten on his usual free lunch route?" Hoarse voice—"Ssh!" Shrill voice—"I won't ssh!" Hoarse voice—"I tell you you will. Oh, if he wasn't in the room outside, wouldn't I just give you——?" The friend, shouting through the keyhole—"I ain't any longer; give it to her." (Exit, slamming the door.)

Women sleep by far too little. Sleeplessness is one of the most fruitful causes of the paleness and nervousness so characteristic of American mothers. You will excuse us, sir, but permit us to ask whether your wife is not still busy with the care of your family six hours after your day's work is done? And then, when your children cry at night, don't you turn over your lazy two hundred pounds for another good sleep, and let that little thin pale wife get up and worry by the hour with the little ones? And now, forsooth, you wish to know whether it is not bad for her to lie till eight o'clock in the morning.—Dio Lewis.

A French matrimonial advertisement:—"Marriages—A young man without fortune, but possessing a name honorably known and a generous heart, wishes to pardon a great fault. (A rich young lady preferred.)"

"Tom, where can I get a good two-foot rule?" "I can give you one on the spot, John." "Well, let's have it." "Don't wear tight shoes. That rule applies to both feet."

Why is the money you are in the habit of giving to the poor like a new-born babe? Because it's precious little.

Before marriage she was dear, and he was her treasure; but afterward she became dearer, and he treasurer.

GERANIUMS IN THE WINDOW.

It is very rare to see a well-grown geranium in window culture. Even if the plants bloom fairly, they are often drawn up, misshapen things, not pleasing to look upon. In the majority of cases, plants that have been set out in the garden for the summer, are allowed to "go as you please." The roots finding an abundance of rich soil, the tops grow off at a fearful rate. At the approach of cool weather the plants are taken up as they stood; if any cutting is done, it is at the roots, to bring them within the limits of the pot, and the plants are placed in the window. As a consequence of such treatment, the majority of the leaves fade and fall, and show a lot of long, lanky stems, with a small tuft of leaves at the top. This condition of the plants is due either to a lack of knowledge or to timidity. Amateur cultivators, as a general thing, seem to fear to use the knife; could the plants suffer pain, they would not be more reluctant to cut. The proper method is to prepare the plants for taking in long before the time for lifting them; but it is too late to advise that, as it is to suggest pruning them at the time of taking them up. Even at this late day it is better to cut back the geraniums to a good shape than to let them remain as they are. Of course each plant will have its own needs in this respect, and only general advice can be given. Cut back the long stems in such a manner that the plant will form a low, rounded head, and remove altogether such branches as will make the head too much crowded.—American Agriculturist for December.

A SAILOR'S ADVICE.—The Richmond county (Staten Island) Herald tells this good story: Sergeant Roe has incurred deserved censure for his officiousness in arresting an old sailor of the Snug Harbor, who committed a technical offense, but evidently without evil intent. The sailor was in a North Shore church, and, becoming intensely interested in the sermon, uttered an involuntary exclamation, which the policeman construed into "disturbing a place of worship." The sermon was on the downward path of a soul, and the clergyman used the illustration of a ship drifting on the rocks.

"The waves dash over!" exclaimed the minister. "Her sails are split! Her yards are gone! Her masts are shivered! Her helm is useless! She is driving ashore. There is no hope! What can save her now?"

"Let go the anchor, ye lubber!" yelled the excited seaman.

TOO TRUE.—Many a girl is careless as to how much money a young man spends for her. Three and five dollars for a horse and carriage he can poorly afford, perhaps; yet she will go with him week after week with no particular interest in him, unmindful, apparently, whether he earns his money or takes it from his employer's drawer. He makes her expensive presents. He takes her to a concert, in going to which usually, save for her pride and his gallantry, a horse-car ride for ten cents would be far wiser than a carriage ride for several dollars. A young man respects a young woman all the more who is careful of the way he spends his money, and will not permit too much to be used for herself. A thoughtful and well-bred girl will be wise about these matters.—Woman's Journal.

A WILL WHICH PUZZLED THE EXECUTOR.—A man died, and by his will bequeathed 17 cows to his three sons, as follows: To one 1-2, to the second 1-3 and to the third 1-9, and a provision forbade that any of the animals should be killed. The executor was at his wit's end for some time how to carry out the intent of the will, but finally added one of his own cows to the 17, and then divided the lot as was specified, thereby giving one son nine, another six and the third two, which disposed of the 17 cows and did not affect the 18th. The executor having divided the cows drove home his own cow, whose presence had done such good service. It will be seen that each son received more cow than would have fallen to him but for the thoughtfulness of the executor.

Some girls are born fat, some achieve fatness, and some fix themselves up with old newspapers and things.

Is there a word in the English language that contains all the vowels? There is, unquestionabiy.

Don't despise the lowly; the under-jaw does all the work.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1881.

Special Notice!

All persons indebted to this office in any way are requested to call and settle before Jan. 1, 1882.

MAYOR GOODALL of Holyoke was re-elected on Tuesday by a majority of only 4 votes. The city voted in favor of license.

THE new city of Brockton starts off well by refusing to license liquor saloons. The cities of Somerville, Fitchburg, Gloucester and Newton also voted no license on Tuesday.

JUDGING from the small vote on the constitutional amendment at the late election, but little interest is felt in such matters in this State. Let the Legislature try the people on the question of biennial elections, though, and we'll warrant the development of a big interest and a bigger vote.

IT is proposed by the Hampshire Gazette that every clergyman in the State shall preach a sermon on temperance, in season to influence people before the next town meetings. We pass the call along with pleasure, and would suggest that two or three pointed sermons on this subject wouldn't come amiss in many localities.

JAY GOULD has certainly got his fingers into the New York & New England Railroad pie, the Gould board of directors being elected without opposition at the annual meeting on Tuesday. It is given out that the road will be double-tracked at once, and it is pretty certain that Gould will not let any grass grow on its rails, but will do what he can to make the road a formidable competitor of the Boston & Albany line.

THE commissioners appointed to reconsider the original apportionment of the cost of the south end bridge at Springfield, by which Springfield was to pay 65 and Agawam 35 per cent of its cost, $113,000, have made their report, and conclude that Hampden county ought to pay Agawam $11,500 and $972 in accrued interest, the city assessment to remain unchanged. They also conclude that the bridge is a benefit to Springfield to the amount of $75,522, and that Agawam is benefited by it to the extent of $27,963. Their decision must yet be approved by some judge of the courts to make it operative. Agawam may consider herself fortunate if she gets even $11,500 of her burden transferred to the county, though she doubtless hoped for still greater relief.

IN the Guiteau trial at Washington the defense rested their case on Tuesday, having produced all the evidence they could get hold of to prove that Guiteau is insane, as shown by hereditary taint, an erratic career, absence of motive for the crime, and his "inspiration," as he calls it. It is noticeable, however, that the experts summoned by the defense to watch Guiteau and testify as to his insanity, went home without doing so, saying privately that they could do him no good. On Wednesday the prosecution began the introduction of evidence in rebuttal. People who have known the prisoner and his family for years, including Guiteau's old school teacher, testify that they never saw any symptom of insanity in any of them, and the theory of the defense seems likely to be completely overthrown.

SPRINGFIELD had a regular political earthquake in its city election Tuesday, E. W. Ladd, the Democratic candidate for mayor, being elected by a "whopping" majority. Ex-Mayor Powers, the Republican nominee, is unquestionably better fitted for the position of mayor than his successful opponent, as far as business and executive ability goes, but it was charged that his nomination was brought about by the work of Democratic liquor sellers, after he had positively declined to run, while Mr. Ladd was more explicit in promising desired reforms. Consequently Mr. Powers got badly "left," every ward in the city going against him. His total vote was 1416, to 2802 for Mr. Ladd. Mr. Folsom, the city clerk and treasurer, who is in Europe for his health, was re-elected by a close vote. The city voted in favor of license, 2227 to 1406.

CONGRESS assembled on Monday, and the House carried out the decision of the Republican caucus held on Saturday by electing Gen. Joseph W. Keifer of Ohio speaker, Edward McPherson of Philadelphia clerk, Col. George W. Hooker of Vermont sergeant-at-arms, Walter P. Brownlow of Tennessee—nephew of the late "Parson" Brownlow—doorkeeper, and Rev. Frederick D. Power of Washington—pastor of the church where President Garfield worshiped—chaplain. The new speaker was nominated by a combination of the Conkling-Cameron forces, who were bound to defeat Hiscock of New York, to punish him for his opposition to Conkling and Platt in the late senatorial contest. Mr. Keifer has a good war record, and is now on his third term in the House, but is not considered as well qualified for the speakership as some of the defeated candidates.

A company of Boston and other hopeful capitalists are about to organize a quick transit association, and expect to revolutionize the ocean passenger traffic. Steamers are to be built on an entirely new plan, entirely without masts, and nothing will be seen on the domed deck save the pilot house, smoke stack and ventilator. The boilers and machinery are to be very compact and powerful, and the vessels are expected to make the trip between Boston and Liverpool in five days. $200,000 has already been furnished for the building of a trial steamer.

An oil well at Titusville, Pa., which in former years produced five barrels per day, has been drilled sixty feet deeper and now flows 400 barrels per day.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

President Arthur sent in his first message to Congress on Tuesday. It is an able paper, and for the most part in full accord with the best sentiment of the country, its greatest fault being its unconscionable length. Few people care to wade through ten columns of close print to get at the recommendations of the President, and the message would be much more generally read and appreciated if thoroughly boiled down.

The President begins with a feeling allusion to the tragical death of his predecessor, and pays a glowing tribute to his memory. Our foreign relations are mostly in a satisfactory state. He insists upon our right to control the Panama canal project, and proposes to England the abrogation of such clauses of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 as do not comport with the obligations of the United States towards Colombia. He deplores the existing differences of opinion between Chili, Bolivia and Peru, and states that he has sent an envoy to the Central American States with such instructions as he hopes will bring them into friendly relations. He regrets the withdrawal of American lines of communication between the United States and Brazil, but makes no recommendations. He advises the adoption of the new code of international rules for the prevention of collisions on the high seas.

In reference to our financial matters, the President approves the recommendation of the secretary of the treasury, that provision be made for the early retirement of the silver certificates, and that the act requiring their issue be repealed; also that the silver coinage law be amended so that no more silver need be coined than is necessary to supply the demand. He would not attempt to fund the extended 3½ per cent bonds unless they can be placed at a much lower rate than the present. He notes the increased prosperity of the country, thinks the people ought to be relieved of some of the burdens of taxation, and recommends the abolition of all internal revenue taxes except those upon tobacco, distilled spirits and fermented liquors, the special tax upon the manufacturers of and dealers in such articles; also that the law imposing a stamp tax upon matches, proprietary articles, checks, etc., and the law by which banks and bankers are assessed upon their capital and deposits, be repealed. The tariff question is alluded to, and it is recommended that a commission aid Congress in its labors in that direction.

President Arthur agrees with General Sherman that the army should be increased to the strength of 30,000 enlisted men. He also forcibly recommends that such appropriations be made as shall secure us an efficient and well-equipped navy. He approves the postal-savings recommendation of the postmaster general, and says in regard to the star route cases that he has enjoined upon the government counsel to prosecute all persons who have practised frauds upon the service to the full extent of the law. Upon the Indian question President Arthur takes advanced ground, and suggests that an act be passed making the Indian as well protected in his territory as a white man is in the States; also that a reasonable amount of land be granted each of them for twenty or twenty-five years, and that Indian schools be liberally provided for. He speaks plainly of the evils of polygamy, and recommends that a law be passed qualifying the wife of a bigamist to testify against her husband, and also providing that marriage certificates shall be filed in the supreme court of the territory. He speaks favorably though briefly upon the subject of national aid to education at the South, and is evidently not as deeply impressed with its importance as was President Garfield. He finds in the result of the arrears of pensions law an admonition to Congress and the executive to give serious attention to similar projects in the future, and suggests legislation to guard against fraudulent claims.

Civil service reform is treated at greater length than any other subject in the message, and it is evident that the President has made the subject one of considerable study. To a law which should embrace the features of the civil service system of Great Britain he would give his approval, but he doubts the practicability of a system which embraces but a part of the features of that of England. The President doubts if the best results will be secured by a strictly competitive system of examination, but thinks that the present evils may be eradicated if examining boards shall have the discretion to ascertain the characteristics and general capacity, as well as the scholastic attainments of candidates. The President, however, declares that if Congress shall see fit to establish competitive tests, he will give the measure his earnest support. Meanwhile he urgently recommends Congress to appropriate $25,000 to carry into effect existing laws designed to improve the civil service. In concluding, the President urges upon Congress, with a gravity and emphasis which recent events in our history fully justify, the need of a new law for ascertaining and declaring the result of presidential elections, and for determining the question of presidential inability, and the succession to the presidential office. No excuse will avail for a further postponement of these questions, concerning, as the President truly says they do, "the very existence of the government and the liberties of the people."

David Leavitt, an unmarried man 20 years of age who had just bought a confectionery store in Springfield, was found dead in the Agawam woods last week Friday, seated in a carriage and shot through the head. The horse had broken away and returned to the stable. Leavitt hired a team and drove away about 10 o'clock Thursday evening with a companion, having considerable money and a watch, but neither was found on the body. Joseph Loomis, son of a respectable Southwick farmer, and a chum of Leavitt, who is believed to have been his companion in the carriage, was arrested at Westfield Friday on suspicion of being the murderer.

The restoration of the Old State House at Boston is now in progress. From original paintings, drawings and specifications of the architects, a complete idea can be obtained of every detail of the construction and ornamentation of the building a century and a half ago. An engraving by Paul Revere gives a correct idea of the size, shape and number of panes of glass in the windows.

Isaac Bassett, the veteran doorkeeper of the United States Senate, on Monday completed 50 years of public service. He was employed as page on the 5th of December, 1830, on the recommendation of Daniel Webster.

A shocking catastrophe occurred at Vienna, Austria, Thursday evening. The Ring theater was set on fire by a falling lamp, and it is supposed that fully 800 persons perished in the flames.

LOCAL NOTICES.

People who make useful presents will find a large assortment of fancy slippers at Milligan's.

All coal bills must be paid at once. On and after this date 30 days will be the limit. J. F. Holbrook.

Don't forget that G. L. Hitchcock will soon open the largest stock of Holiday Goods ever shown in Palmer.

E. S. Brooks is receiving a large stock of goods in his line for the Holiday trade, and will sell at bottom prices.

A. E. Park is now ready to show the handsomest stock of plain and fancy Crockery, Lamps and Christmas Goods to be found between Springfield and Worcester.

J. B. Shaw has added to his stock of staple and fancy dry goods, a large assortment of Holiday Goods in cheap, medium and expensive grades, to the inspection of which the public is respectfully invited.

PALMER AND VICINITY

We had sleighing last year at this time.

Rev. Mr. Heywood of Holyoke preaches at the Universalist church to-morrow.

The pulpit of the Congregational church will be occupied to-morrow by Rev. William Crawford, D. D., of Roxbury.

Rev. O. R. Hunt of Springfield will preach at the Baptist church to-morrow, and will continue to supply the pulpit through the Winter.

Elexus Waid's horse fell on the street last week Friday and broke a shoulder, and was killed the next day to put him out of his suffering.

A concert was given at Wales Hall Monday evening by some vocalists and musicians from the eastern part of the State, for the benefit of Edward Chase.

The 11.02 a. m. express for the west now makes the trip from Boston to Chicago in 31 hours. The evening express takes 38 hours for the same run.

Vennor says the outlook for this month is "ugly" and smacks of "cold, bitter, biting north and south, east and west winds." We don't get much "ugliness" yet, though.

A Sunday night mail is now made up at the post office for Boston, New York and the West, closing at 8 o'clock. The week-day western mail, which is now sent on the evening modoc at 8.48, instead of on the 5.52 accommodation, closes at 8.10 o'clock.

It takes more than an ordinary storm to keep people at home when the ladies of the Universalist society get up an entertainment. Wednesday night's lowery skies accordingly had little effect on the crowds which turned out to their annual festival. Some 300 people sat down to supper, and the net proceeds of the evening's festivities were about $100.

Elexus Waid of Ludlow, who last week appealed from a sentence of two months in the house of correction for being a common drunkard, concluded to withdraw his appeal the other day, and started for Springfield to give himself up at the jail; but on the way his old habits overcame him, and he was jugged and sent up for drunkenness. "Leck" will accordingly have to wait a while before he can begin serving out his other sentence.

The Young Men's Library Association made choice of the following officers for the ensuing year, at their annual meeting on Monday evening: President, Dr. J. K. Warren; vice president, C. B. Fisk; secretary, S. H. Hellyar; treasurer, S. W. French; librarian, Dr. W. H. Stowe; directors, O. P. Allen, S. S. Taft, W. C. Dewey, W. H. Stowe. The treasurer's report showed the receipts of the year, including balance on hand at its beginning, to be $843, and the expenditures $399, leaving $444 in the treasury. Of this sum $250 will soon be expended in new books, which have already been ordered.

The Palmer Dramatic Club have presented to the Improvement Association the sum of $60, this being the net proceeds of their Thanksgiving evening entertainment. The club make the suggestion that the money be expended in the construction and repairing of cross-walks at the most important street corners, believing that the public will appreciate and receive more benefit from this improvement than any other. The suggestion is a good one, and the club by their generous gift have put it in the power of the association to make a very good beginning in the direction of this needed improvement.

Burglars broke into Robinson & Brooks's hardware store Monday evening and attempted to force open the safe, but did not succeed. They first tried to enter the store through the cellar window, but the stairs were in the way, and they went around to the cellar door, which they managed to get open. The men were apparently novices at the business, for after trying in vain to pry off the hinges of the safe, they proceeded to knock off the dial of the lock, and the door handle, leaving themselves nothing to work on, as they did not attempt any drilling. They started to pry off one of the cash drawers under the counter, but did not finish the job, and appearances indicated that they got frightened and left in a hurry, without securing any booty.

At Tuesday's session of the probate court in Springfield administration was granted on the estate of Newell O. Perry of Palmer, Laura E. Perry administratrix. Wills approved of—Alvin Hastings of Palmer, C. L. Gardner adm'r with will annexed; Sophronia Allen of Palmer, James D. Collins executor; Amasa King of Monson, Adaline and George M. King executors; Reuben Pease of Wilbraham, Ira G. Potter executor. Inventories filed on estates of—Samuel D. Shaw of Palmer, (special administrator's inventory) personal $537; Reuben D. Keith of Ludlow, personal $3086, real $3480; Alexander Goodman of Palmer, personal $262; James P. Murphy of Palmer, personal $788. The report of the commissioners appointed to partition the estate of Thomas Jenks and others in Palmer was accepted.

Ernest P. Wood, who for some time had charge of the pump supplying the B. & A. R. R. tank houses at this station, and left last May to take the position of fireman on the New York & New England Railroad, died this week from injuries received in a collision last Saturday. A freight engine with a caboose was running contrary to orders on the time of an east-bound passenger train, and the two engines collided near Thompson, Ct. Two men were killed outright, and Mr. Wood, who was fireman on the passenger engine, was fatally scalded and bruised, several others also receiving injuries. Mr. Wood was a brother-in-law of Thomas Morgan, master bridge builder of the Boston & Albany road, and has a brother who is an engineer on the N. Y. & N. E. road, who saved his life in a recent smash-up by jumping. Mr. Wood's remains were taken to Feeding Hills for burial on Thursday.

At the annual meeting of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society on Monday, the following officers were elected: President, W. M. Tucker of Monson; vice presidents, O. M. Graves of Monson, H. P. Holden of Palmer; secretary and treasurer, O. P. Allen of Palmer; directors, J. H. Carpenter and A. H. White of Monson, D. R. McCray of Hampden, J. S. Loomis and C. T. Brainerd of Palmer, Silas Billings of Ludlow, L. A. Cutler of Brimfield, A. P. Capen of Belchertown; delegate to the State Board of Agriculture for three years, W. R. Sessions of Hampden. The society expended about $450 in permanent improvements the past year, putting a new fence across the entire front of their grounds, and they voted to expend the balance in the treasury, $283, as far as it will go, in putting a new fence on the rear of the park during the coming year. It was also voted to have four institutes during the Winter, on the third Tuesday of each month, the first one to be on the 20th inst., when the subject of "How to Make a Successful Agricultural Fair" will be discussed.

THORNDIKE.

The ladies of the Methodist church will serve a supper in Murdock's Hall next Thursday evening.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

The young folks are preparing for an entertainment to be held here in the church New Year's eve, consisting of a drama, speaking and a New Year's tree.

ENFIELD.

The citizens of the town have organized a free library association, and have already a fund of nearly $600 to start off with. Officers are to be chosen next Monday evening.

THREE RIVERS.

The opening lecture of the course was given last evening, by Gen. John L. Swift.

The ladies of the benevolent society have a sociable and oyster supper next Friday evening.

D. F. Holden, of the firm of Holden Bros., has bought his brother's interest in the store, which has been run under the name of Holden Bros. for 7½ years, and the firm is now D. F. Holden.

WALES.

The house owned by Clinton Rogers of Rochester, N. Y., and occupied by N. M. Bradley, caught fire last Sunday morning, but it was promptly extinguished. $25 will cover the damage.

The Good Templars' lodge which was to have been organized last week Friday night proved a failure, as the officers who came from Springfield could not find their agent who had arranged the matter.

BELCHERTOWN.

At the annual meeting of Vernon Lodge of F. and A. M., Wednesday evening, the following officers were chosen for the ensuing year: W. M., W. N. Bridgman; S. W., E. E. Fairchild; J. W., W. P. Robinson; Treas., W. E. Bridgman; Sec'y, C. L. Kibbee; C., S. M. Warren; M., W. F. Carter; S. D., Geo. D. Rhodes; J. D., M. W. Graves; S. S., P. M. Whalen; J. S., C. L. Barnard; I. S., Dexter Winter; T., A. W. Stacy. The officers will be installed Wednesday evening, Dec. 21st.

BONDVILLE.

T. D. Potter and family have returned to Stanton, Mich.

By the moonlight of the past two or three weeks Silas Collis has been able to capture sixteen coons, some of which weighed twenty-five pounds.

F. S. King, our new baggage "smasher," has completed moving. He will occupy the old Canterbury homestead, now owned by Merrick Whitney.

It has been rumored that at no distant day the N. L. N. railroad will run a branch from Barrett's Junction into this village. With that and a branch from Holyoke to connect with the Central, the railroad facilities of this village will stand second to none in town.

At last the Mass. Central R. R. has appeared. It runs about thirty feet over the track of the Athol branch, and higher over the river and highway, necessitating the building of quite a long bridge, upon which work will begin soon.

The total receipts at this station for November were $7,399.94, and we think that the business of this village does require better depot accommodations than are now afforded by the unsightly, ill-arranged and uncomfortable one with which we are now compelled to content ourselves.

WARREN.

Ten new houses are to be erected this winter.

"Hazel Kirke" will be presented at the town hall the 19th.

The committee on the soldiers' fair meet on the 12th to arrange for the coming fair in Boston.

The ladies of the Methodist church are preparing for a three-days' fair at Brigham's hall, Dec. 20, 21 and 22, the avails to go toward the church repairs.

The Congregational Sabbath School chose their committee on organizing the Sabbath school and selection of question books, also committee on library, last Sabbath.

Mrs. Dainty completed the last entertainment of the course on Monday evening. Her selections were well chosen, and gave evidence of fine elocutionary talent. The vocal and instrumental music was also listened to with pleasure.

All the public schools closed this week, with the exception of the high school. There will be a vacation of five weeks and most of the teachers will return. Miss Tyler will take Miss Hitchcock's place in the intermediate school, and Miss Janes takes Miss Tyler's place in the primary department.

MONSON.

The common schools began Monday, with very full numbers in all the village schools.

The attendance at the academy numbers over 80, and some additions are made every few days.

"The Favorites" have not decided on a date when they will appear in Monson, but promise to do so in a few days.

The selectmen advertise for proposals for building the two new roads recently accepted by the town. Plans and specifications may be seen at Gage & Reynolds' office.

Frank Gaffney, living in the east part of the town, was seriously injured several days since, being run over by a loaded wagon. Several ribs were broken and one lung crushed.

The next entertainment in the Star course will be next Wednesday evening, when Col. Carroll D. Wright will give his famous lecture on "Communism." Col. Wright is a man of great ability, and an eloquent speaker. His lecture will interest all.

The display of holiday goods has already begun, and from present indications our people will not be obliged to go out of town to supply their wants in this line. G. L. Keeney, Chas. Fowler, H. Chapin and Flynt & Co. will make special displays.

The town has another lawsuit on its hands for damage received on the highways, Sylvester Darling having sued the town for $1000 damage to his harness and carriage, caused by his horse shying at a barricade around an open sewer last Summer on Main street.

W. N. Flynt & Co. will make a special opening day to-day (Saturday), when their new dry goods department will be opened to the public. The recent additions and improvements in their store make it one of the most complete in Eastern Hampden. Ample light is obtained by a glass front the entire length of the building, and the different departments are all full and well arranged. People familiar with the old Towne's Block of 10 years ago would fail to recognize it in the large, well arranged store of to-day, fitted with all modern improvements.

The wife of Charles E. Fuller, a former superintendent of the mill at North Monson, who moved to Holyoke something over a year ago, died very suddenly at Ludlow, Vt., Thanksgiving night. The following particulars of her death are given by the Holyoke Transcript: She had been about the house as usual during the evening, and was preparing to retire at nine o'clock when the girl who was with her saw her throw up her hands and gasp for breath. She spoke once, saying, "Don't leave me," and in a short time was dead. Mrs. Fuller has been in delicate health but was not considered seriously ill. The cause of death was dropsy of the heart. Mr. Fuller, who was formerly superintendent at Connor Brothers' mill and has lately taken a similar position at the Webber & Beebe mill, was in this city when his wife died, and the news of her death was a very sudden blow. She leaves one child three years old.

Father J. J. McCarthy, parish priest at Greenfield, and recently of this place, was shot and fatally wounded last Saturday evening at his residence by David McMillen, an employe in Boston of the American Express Co. McMillen's wife left him a few years ago because he treated her badly, and has lately been acting as housekeeper for Father McCarthy, who was her cousin. McMillen visited her last week Monday and urged her to live with him, but she refused. Last Saturday night he called upon her again, and she still refused to go with him. He returned three times to the priest's house, ringing the bell violently and kicking at the door. Fathers McCarthy and Purcell refused him admission to the house, and he finally fired a shot from a revolver, the bullet entering Father McCarthy's abdomen and causing acute inflammation of the bowels, from which he died Tuesday night. The assassin made his escape and went to Boston, where he was arrested on Sunday and taken to Greenfield. Father McCarthy was born in Ireland in 1836, but came to this country when a boy and learned the printer's trade. He afterwards devoted several years to study and teaching, and was ordained in Springfield in 1874, being an assistant at the cathedral for three years, when he was sent to this place, where he remained for the past four years, having moved to Greenfield only about two months ago. Father McCarthy was a man of ability and rare social qualities, which endeared him to his people and made him generally liked by all who knew him. His funeral occurred at Greenfield yesterday, and a special train left this place early in the morning, connecting at Palmer with another special, which carried a number of friends and former parishioners on their way to attend the ceremonies.

WARE AND VICINITY.

William McMahon has received his back pension, amounting to $800.

Thomas Donahue's little boy broke his thumb while playing in his father's barn on Saturday last.

The high school has had its membership increased this term by the admission of several scholars from out of town.

Lewis Jerome had a two-years-old heifer killed on the railroad about a mile north of the village on Monday afternoon.

The schools commenced the winter term on Monday. The only change in teachers is the employment of W. E. Sibley to take charge of the high and grammar school at the center.

Some miscreant broke a light of glass in Geo. E. Holden's show window on Wednesday morning, about 6 o'clock, taking a box of cigars therefrom, and running away so quickly that he was not identified.

The American Legion of Honor held their first meeting at their new room in Lawton's Block on Tuesday evening. The next meeting will be next Thursday evening, when the annual election of officers will occur.

Lewis Lamarine, a Frenchman living in what is called the "Light House" on the Palmer road, was arrested on Wednesday for liquor selling without a license. About fifty more in various parts of the town ought to be served the same way.

The new gun from the Prescott Gun Co. has made its appearance, and a fine appearing weapon it is. It has several improvements which have not before been reached by other manufacturers, and altogether seems to be gotten up in a very superior manner, both as to style and workmanship.

Complaint having been made in reference to the delay and irregularity of the trains on the Ware River road, on account of the heavy freight, one of the officials was in town on Thursday to see what arrangement could be made to run a separate freight, and thus better accommodate the traveling public.

The reading room of the Young Men's Library Association was opened on Monday evening, with one of their members, Geo. S. Snow, as custodian. The room is neatly but plainly fitted up, and has at present over 50 publications for the use of any persons, over 15 years of age, who are pleased to visit the rooms.

Mrs. Willard Converse, aged 85 years, walked from beyond Ware Center to the village, a distance of nearly three miles, and a part of the way back, a few days ago. There are but few of our ladies fifty years younger than this who would be willing to undertake to do it. Mrs. Converse has 6 children living, 11 grandchildren and 8 great-grandchildren.

The woodwork of the President's bedroom has been painted sky blue. The walls are covered with silver paper with gold flowers, and the furniture covering and curtains are of blue satin damask with a small gold figure. This selection of color was made by a lady friend of the President, Mrs. John Davis, and is regarded as "too utterly utter."

A marble tablet has been placed in the ladies' waiting room of the Baltimore and Potomac depot at Washington, to mark the spot where President Garfield was shot. The tablet is of American statuary marble, and bears this inscription: "James Abram Garfield, President of the United States, July 2d, 1881."

Rosa Provost, a 14-years-old Westfield girl, eloped last Saturday with her step-mother's brother, a man 40 years old, who calls himself "Heller, the Magician." He has pretended to be deeply in love with the girl for some time, while the girl has also been infatuated with him.

Mrs. Garfield has appointed President Hinsdale of Hiram college editor of General Garfield's works, with instructions to collect, edit and carry them through the press as speedily as is consistent with completeness and thoroughness.

"HACKMETACK," a lasting and fragrant perfume. Price 25 and 50 cts. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

More cases of sick headache, biliousness, constipation, etc., can be cured in less time, with less medicine, and for less money, by using Carter's Little Liver Pills, than by any other means. 37.

The last advance in rubbers (that of the 1st instant) carries the wholesale price of many kinds higher than "Morse," of the "Central Shoe Store," is retailing them to-day.

Remember the mark-down sale, Opera House Clothing Co., Springfield. Entire stock to be closed out. Men's all-wool pants $1 90, reduced from $3; men's $2 pants reduced to $1. Send for prices on overcoats.

A good many people get married during the holidays, and are looking for housekeeping goods. They ought to know that the largest housekeeping store in Western Mass. is at Metcalf & Luther's, Springfield. They will know if they go there that they can find everything they want to fit up a house complete.

The reputation of Hardy's studio, 310 Main St., Springfield, is very high for taking first-class pictures. People thinking of having their pictures taken before they go home for Christmas holidays should call there and see the fine specimens on the walls.

During the past week "The Three Clothiers" of Springfield have been in market and secured the best bargains of the season on overcoats and business suits. If you would see them, call for those $12 and $15 overcoats, or those $12 suits. They also remembered the boys, as their prices will show.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, offer colored dress goods at 15 cts., worth 25 cts; all-wool French dress goods, 44 inches wide, 50 cts., worth 75 cts.; silk handkerchiefs from 20 cts. to $1, worth 50 cts. to $1.25. They offer gents' flat scarfs for 25 cts., worth 50 cts., and at 37½ cts., worth 50 cts. to $1. Gents' braces, each pair in a pretty box 37½c. to $1.

Before purchasing holiday gifts elsewhere, our readers should call and examine the fine stock of ladies' gold watches, guard chains, neck chains, solid Roman gold bracelets, and fine jewelry of every description to be found at D. F. Davison's, 354 Main street, Springfield, four doors below Bridge street. We noticed especially the elegant woven gold bracelets of a new style of design.

With the advent of winter weather, colds and coughs abound. For persons afflicted with either, Griswold's Pastilles will be found to be an excellent and agreeable remedy, and if taken promptly are also an efficient preventive. For catarrh and cold in the head the smoke from a burning pastille will give immediate relief. Druggists all have them, or they can be obtained of W. R. Griswold, M. D., 161 Capital Avenue, Hartford, Ct.

We ask you to read the advertisement of Darby's Prophylactic Fluid, which appears in our issue of to-day. It is a wonderful healing remedy, a most powerful disinfectant, and a positive germ destroyer, and is perfectly safe to use, even in the hands of the most inexperienced. It is highly recommended by eminent physicians and chemists, and endorsed by hundreds of others who have used it and know its valuable properties. It costs but a trifle, and will save much suffering, time and money. Darby's Fluid has long been recognized as a household article for universal family use. Prepared by J. A. Zeilin & Co., manufacturing chemists, sole proprietors.

All the boys in New England will be glad that Oliver Optic is writing a new story, and that it will be printed in a new form. It is entiled "Beau Gray, or Getting His Living," and will be printed in THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE, beginning Monday, January 2, and continued for several weeks. It will be in Oliver Optic's well-known graphic and popular style, and will not only be intensely interesting, but, like all of his stories, healthy in tone. Boys will do well to ask their parents to take THE GLOBE next year, and get this and other stories. It is only 2 cents per copy, of all newsdealers, or 50 cents per month by mail. It is published by The Globe Newspaper Company, 238 Washington street, Boston.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

THE REV. GEO. H. THAYER of Bourbon, Ind., says: "Both myself and wife owe our lives to SHILOH'S CONSUMPTION CURE. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it. Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

HARPER'S MAGAZINE.

ILLUSTRATED.

"Always varied, always good, always improving."—CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, JR.

Harper's Magazine, the most popular illustrated periodical in the world, begins its sixty-fourth volume with the December number. It represents what is best in American literature and art; and its marked success in England—where it has already a circulation larger than that of any English magazine of the same class—has brought into its service the most eminent writers and artists of Great Britain. The forthcoming volumes for 1882 will in every respect surpass their predecessors.

WOOD AND LUMBERMEN ATTENTION!

This is to call attention to a valuable Wood and Timber Lot soon to be thrown into market.

Said lot belongs to the estate of the late John Ward, situated in Palmer, Mass., and contains 100 acres (more or less). Every square rod of this tract is accessible to horse teams, slopes toward the shipping points on the B. & A. R. R., one-half mile north of Blanchardville lower crossing, one-third of a mile northeast from Tenneyville crossing, and one mile east from Palmer Depot, a shipping point in six directions.

The present growth (which is mostly of handsome chestnuts) has been growing from 30 to 40 years, and portions are now ready for cutting.

Taking into consideration the size and situation of the lot, its accessibility and nearness to market, with the present and prospective demand and high prices for telegraph and telephone poles, railroad ties, lumber and wood, this is undoubtedly the most desirable tract of woodland to be found within many miles.

The time and conditions of sale will be made public in a few days. Till then all interested are referred to HIRAM CONVERSE, near the premises, or to C. H. PLUMLEY, Palmer Depot, and are invited to examine the lot and surroundings, or to correspond with

TO THE HONORABLE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS IN GENERAL COURT ASSEMBLED:

The undersigned petitioners, citizens of Belchertown, in said Commonwealth, respectfully represent that the convenience of the inhabitants of that part of said town which lies southerly of a line beginning about 231 rods southerly of the northeasterly corner of the town of Ludlow, and running thence easterly in a straight line to the west line of the town of Ware, at a point about 60 rods northeasterly from the southwest corner of said last named town, would be greatly promoted by having that part of said town of Belchertown set off and annexed to the town of Palmer. We therefore pray that so much of said town of Belchertown as lies southerly of the line above described may be set off from said town of Belchertown and annexed to said town of Palmer.

A Poem without an E.

John Knox was a wight of wondrous might,
And his words ran high and shrill,
For bold and stout was his spirit bright,
And strong was his stalwart will.
Kings sought in vain his mind to chain,
And that giant brain to control,
But naught on plain or stormy main
Could daunt that mighty soul.
John would sit and sigh till morning cold
Its shining lamps put out,
For thoughts untold on his mind laid hold,
And brought pain and doubt.
But light at last on his soul was cast,
Away sank pain and sorrow,
His soul is gay in a fair to-day,
And looks for a bright to-morrow.

MILITARY ANTS OF THE AMAZON.

The Nineteenth Century has the following: The most astonishing insects, if not the most astonishing animals, in the world, are the so-called "foraging," or, as they might more appropriately be called, the military ants of the Amazon. They belong to several species of the same genus, and have been carefully watched by Bates, Belt, and other naturalists. The following facts must therefore be regarded as fully established.

Eciton Legionis moves in enormous armies, and everything that these insects do is done with the most perfect instinct of military organization. The army marches in the form of a rather broad and regular column, hundreds of yards in length. The object of the march is to capture and plunder other insects, etc., for food, and as the well organized host advances, its devastating legions set all other terrestrial life at defiance. From the main column there are sent out smaller lateral columns, the composing individuals of which play the part of scouts—branching off in various directions, and searching about with the utmost activity for insects, grubs, etc., over every log and under every fallen leaf. If prey is found in sufficiently small quantities for them to manage alone, it is immediately seized and carried to the main column; but if the amount is too large for the scouts themselves to deal with, messengers are sent back to the main column, whence there is immediately dispatched a detachment large enough to cope with the requirements. Insects or other prey which, when killed, are too large for single ants to carry, are torn in pieces, and the pieces conveyed back to the main army by different individuals. Many insects in trying to escape run up bushes and shrubs, where they are pursued from twig to twig by their remorseless enemies, till on arriving at some terminal ramification they must either submit to immediate capture by their pursuers, or drop down amid the murderous hosts below.

As already stated, all the spoils which are taken by the scouts, or by the detachments sent out in answer to their demands for assistance, are immediately taken back to the main army or column by smaller columns of carriers, which are constantly running in two double rows (one of each being laden and the other not) on either side of the main column. On either side of the main column there are constantly running up and down a few individuals of smaller size, lighter color, and having larger heads than the other ants. These appear to perform the duty of officers, for they never leave their stations, and while actively running up and down the outside of the column, they seem intent only on maintaining order in the march, stopping every now and then to touch some member of the rank and file with their antennæ, as if giving directions.

When the scouts discover a wasps' nest in a tree, a strong force is sent out from the main army, the nest is pulled to pieces, and all the larvæ in the nest are carried by the carrier columns to the rear of the army, while the wasps fly around defenseless against the invading multitudes. Or, if the nest of any other species of ant is found, a similarly strong force is sent out, or even the whole army may be deflected toward it, when with the utmost energy the innumerable insects set to work to sink shafts and dig mines till the whole nest is rifled of its contents. In these mining operations the Ecitons work with an extraordinary display of organized co-operation; for those low down in the shafts do not lose time by carrying up the earth which they excavate, but pass on the pellets to those above, and the ants on the surface, when they receive the pellets, carry them only just far enough to insure that they shall not roll back again into the shaft, and, after having deposited them at a safe distance, immediately hurry back for more.

The Ecitons have no fixed nest themselves, but live, as it were, on a perpetual campaign. At night, however, they call a halt, and pitch a camp. For this purpose they usually select a piece of broken ground, in the interstices of which they temporarily store their plunder.

The following good advice was given by the president of an agricultural society on presenting a silver cup to a young man who had won the first prize at a ploughing match: "Take this cup, my young friend," he said, "and remember always to plough deep and drink shallow."

Some men have a Sunday soul which they screw on in due time, and take off again every Monday morning.—Robert Hall.

I would rather have a church of five and twenty members than a crowd of twenty times that number.—Dr. John Hall.

A wasp's stiletto is not as large as an elephant's trunk, but it will break up a camp-meeting about as quick.

Every one has a will and a mind to think for himself, yet many will go about hacking and coughing until a friend recommends Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup for that cough.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into their graves when, by using Parker's Ginger Tonic, they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength surely coming back to them. See other column. d

AMPUTATION OF THE LEG.

THE OLD FAMILY PHYSICIAN AT FAULT—DR. DAVID KENNEDY THE SUCCESSFUL SURGEON.

Money is the universal necessity, and none but a cynic or a fool will affect to despise it. Mr. Abram Ellsworth, of Port Ewen, Ulster county, N. Y., had realized this truth. His disease involved the whole of his thigh-bone, and the suffering man looked forward, not without apparent reason, to death as his only deliverer. His family physician refused to amputate the limb—asserting that the operation would kill the patient on the spot. Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who was consulted, held a different opinion, and amputated the limb. The doctor then administered freely his great Blood Specific FAVORITE REMEDY to afford tone and strength to the system, prevent the return of the disease, and Mr. Ellsworth remains to this day in the bloom of health. This gentleman's disease was the offspring of foul blood, and Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY purified the blood and restored to him the power once more to enjoy his life. Are you suffering from any disease traceable to the same cause? Try Favorite Remedy. Your druggist has it. ONE DOLLAR a bottle. Bear in mind the proprietor's name and address: Dr. David KENNEDY, Rondout, New York. 4w35

THE CHRISTIAN UNION.

LYMAN ABBOTT, EDITOR.

With the first of January, 1882, The Christian Union enters upon its thirteenth year and twenty-fifth volume. In the future, as in the past, it proposes to be

I.—HELPFUL. It will give every week something which will help its readers to be more true, more patient, more courageous, more gentle, more faithful—in a word, nobler Christian men and women. It will help parents to be forbearing, children to be obedient, servants to be hearty, employers to be considerate, neighbors to be friendly, and friends to be faithful. It will help every heart to bear its own burden, and a neighbor's burden, too, and to grow more near to God by a daily life more worthy of a true Christian manhood.

II.—SPIRITUAL. It will not devote twenty columns to hammering at the shell and one to picking out the kernel. Doubtful disputations about forms and methods and rites and formulas will not jostle from its colums the explication and application of the "truths that make for righteousness." Mint and anise and cummin will go in fine print; judgment, mercy and faith in clean, clear, bold-faced type.

III.—FRESH. It will deal with the theories of the present. Its motto will be "day by day our daily bread." It will not ransack the middle ages for topics. On the eve of a political election it will present the duties of citizenship; in a time of religious revival it will present methods of Christian work. The text of the minister is to be found in the word of God; the text of the editor in the providence of God. He will study that book as God turns its leaves over for him from day to day.

IV.—COMPACT. It will put great truths in little compass. It will take introductions for granted and will remorselessly cut off perorations. It will allow no space for rhetorical eloquence. It will allow no superfluous words. In time its contributors will catch the spirit of its editors, and every page will march compact as an army to battle. It will throw out no skirmish line and allow no stragglers.

V.—MANY-SIDED. It will seek the best thoughts of the best thinkers on every topic of importance. Its round table will be a famous gathering place of free knights. Every contributor will be at liberty to speak his own mind. The paper will not be a personal organ, a whispering gallery to magnify one small voice into a sound of thunder. It will have much weight because in it will speak many weighty men.

VI.—Above all it will be CATHOLIC, COURTEOUS, CHRISTIAN. Putting away all uncharitableness, it will speak the truth in love. It will make mistakes sometimes, for there is only one infallible man, and he lives in Rome and is not an editor. But its readers will learn to trust it, and to believe that if it is sometimes mistaken it never deliberately misreports, and never consciously conceals the truth.

In carrying out this general plan, the paper will avail itself of the services not only of its regular editorial staff, comprising

MESSRS. LYMAN ABBOTT, ELIOT MCCORMICK AND HAMILTON W. MABIE,

but of the best literary talent in the country. Mr. Beecher's retirement from the Editorial Chair will only make him a more frequent contributor, while the large force of writers, editorial and otherwise, who have associated with the paper in past years will continue to enrich it with their choicest thought.

The subscription price is $3 per annum; Clergymen $2.50. Send one three-cent stamp for sample copy. Address

THE CHRISTIAN UNION,
2-37 22 Washington Square, New York.

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."

BOSTON, October 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, ESQ.—Dear Sir: You procured for me, in 1840, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, re-issues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you. Yours truly, GEORGE DRAPER.

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1882.

THE SUN for 1882 will make its fifteenth annual evolution under the present management, shining, as always, for all, big and little, mean and gracious, contented and unhappy, Republican and Democratic, depraved and virtuous, intelligent and obtuse. The SUN'S light is for mankind and womankind of every sort; but it's genial warmth is for the good, while it pours hot discomfort on the blistering backs of the persistently wicked.

The SUN of 1868 was a newspaper of a new kind. It discarded many of the forms, and a multitude of superfluous words and phrases of ancient journalism. It undertook to report in a fresh, succinct, unconventional way all the news of the world, omitting no event of human interest, and commenting upon affairs with the fearlessness of absolute independence. The success of this experiment was the success of the SUN. It effected a permanent change in the style of American newspapers. Every important journal established in this country in the dozen years past has been modeled after the SUN. Every important journal already existing has been modified and bettered by the force of the SUN'S example.

The SUN of 1882 will be the same outspoken, truth-telling, and interesting newspaper.

We shall print all the news, putting it into readable shape, and measuring its importance, not by the traditional yardstick, but by its real interest to the people. Whenever anything happens worth reporting we get the particulars, whether it happens in Brooklyn or Bokhara.

In politics we have decided opinions; and are accustomed to express them in language that can be understood. We say what we think about men and events. That habit is the only secret of the SUN'S political course.

The WEEKLY SUN gathers into eight pages the best matter of the seven daily issues. An agricultural department of unequaled merit, full market reports, and a liberal proportion of literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence complete the WEEKLY SUN, and make it the best newspaper for the farmer's household that was ever printed.

Who does not know and read and like the SUNDAY SUN, each number of which is a Golconda of interesting literature, with the best poetry of the day, prose every line worth reading, news, humor—matter enough to fill a good sized book, and infinitely more varied and entertaining than any book, big or little?

If our idea of what a newspaper should be pleases you, send for the SUN.

Our terms are as follows: For the daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post-paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cts. per month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of the SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 per year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

Daniel Gray.

DR. HOLLAND'S BEAUTIFUL PORTRAIT OF HIS FATHER.

If I shall ever win the home in Heaven,
For whose sweet rest I humbly hope and pray,
In the great company of the forgiven
I shall be sure to find old Daniel Gray.

I knew him well; in truth, few knew him better;
For my young eyes oft read for him the word,
And saw how meekly from the crystal letter
He drank the life of his beloved Lord.

Old Daniel Gray was not a man who lifted
On ready words his freight of gratitude;
Nor was he called among the gifted
In the prayer meetings of his neighborhood.

He had a few old-fashioned words and phrases,
Linked in with sacred texts and Sunday rhymes;
And I suppose that in his prayer and graces,
I've heard them all at least a thousand times.

I see him now,—his form, his face, his motions,
His homespun habit, and his silver hair,—
And hear the language of his trite devotions,
Rising behind the straight-backed kitchen chair.

I can remember how the sentence sounded,
"Help us, O Lord, to pray, and not to faint!"
And how the "conquering and to conquer" rounded
The loftier aspirations of the saint.

He had some notions that did not improve him:
He never kissed his children—so they say;
And finest scenes of rarest flowers would move him
Less than a horse-shoe picked up in the way.

He had a hearty hatred of oppression,
And righteous word for sin of every kind;
Alas that the transgressor and transgression
Were linked so closely in his honest mind!

He could see naught but vanity in beauty,
And naught but weakness in a fond caress,
And pitied men whose views of Christian duty
Allowed indulgence in such foolishness.

Yet there were love and tenderness within him;
And I am told that when his Charlie died,
Nor nature's need nor gentle word could win him
From his foul vigils at the sleeper's side.

And when they came to bury little Charlie,
They found fresh dewdrops sprinkled in his hair,
And on his breast a rosebud gathered early,
And guessed, but did not know who placed it there.

Honest and faithful, constant in his calling,
Strictly attendant on the means of grace,
Instant in prayer, and fearful most of falling,
Old Daniel Gray was always in his place.

A practical old man, and yet a dreamer:
He thought that in some strange, unlooked-for way
His mighty friend in Heaven, the great Redeemer,
Would honor him with wealth some golden day.

This dream he carried in a hopeful spirit
Until in death his patient eye grew dim,
And his Redeemer called him to inherit
The Heaven of wealth long garnered up for him.

So, if ever I win the home in Heaven,
For whose sweet rest I humbly hope and pray,
In the great company of the forgiven
I shall be sure to find old Daniel Gray.

THE DEACON'S TITHE.

They had a new minister at Seabrook. Old Parson Thornleigh, who had kept the flock for forty years, had gone to his long home; and in his place had come an honest, plain-spoken young divine, with an earnest, fearless eloquence of his own. And now the worn door-stone of the little gray church on the hill was once more trodden by feet which had long been strangers to it. The minister boarded, he having no family, at Deacon Larrabee's.

"He's the least bit uncertain on some points," said the deacon, leaning on his hoe-handle and talking across the fence to his neighbor Gray, who leaned on his hoe-handle to listen,—"a bit uncertain. But I like him—I do, no mistake; and I believe the Lord's going to bless us through him."

"Amen!" was neighbor Gray's hearty response.

They hoed a dozen hills in silence, their hoes keeping time to the merry songs of a bird in the orchard. Then Mr. Gray paused to wipe the perspiration from his face.

"This hot weather's liable to make sickness," said he. "I suppose you've heard that one of the Widow Sperrys' boys is down with a fever?"

"Sho! now you don't say so!" exclaimed the deacon commiseratingly. "Make it hard for her, won't it?"

"Yes, particularly when she's so lately lost her cow. I've been saying that we'd all ought to take hold and make it up to her. If I'd more than one cow on my place I wouldn't stand to talk long, now I tell you; but I lost my two best ones last spring. If I hadn't—"

It might have been unintentional, that sudden facing about as Mr. Gray threw his glance toward the hill pasture where his neighbor's cows were quietly feeding. At all events, the deacon could hardly help noticing the action. An uneasy flush mounted to his face as he struck vigorously into the next hill.

"She ought to have kept her cow out of the road. My cows never get into the mill-pond and drown. If they should, I wouldn't expect anybody to make 'em up to me. She'd no more call, had the widow, to let her cow run, than I have to let my whole drove out."

"It's a pretty hard case, nevertheless," said Mr. Gray.

And then the fragmentary conversation, tossed piecemeal back and forth across the fence as the neighbors went steadily on with their work, drifted into different channels.

There had been an interested listener to the colloquy narrated above. On the shady side of the wall which separated Deacon Larrabee's orchard and cornfield, sat, book in hand, the Rev. Mr. Weston. He arose, as the chat which floated to his hearing began to be of crops and haying, and walked away with a thoughtful smile on his face.

That night, when the deacon took the shining milk-pails from the dresser, and proceeded to the farm-yard, the young clergyman followed him. He stood leaning against the bars, watching the yellow stars come out in the sky, and looking abroad over the deacon's possessions, shadowy now, but substantial enough by daylight.

"You are a prosperous man, deacon."

A smile of satisfaction overspread the deacon's countenance as he stood for a moment patting the sleek neck of a favorite cow.

"Well, yes," said he; "but I've made myself. A pig and a pitchfork was all I had to begin with."

"How does your neighbor Gray get along?"

"Gray? Well, truth to tell, he'll never be forehanded if he lives to the age of Methuselah. He's a hard working man enough, but why 'tis I can't tell you; there's never a poor creature comes into town that doesn't head direct for John Gray's. Must be instinct teaches 'em; for he gives to 'em all, deserving or not. I believe he'd take the coat off his back if 'twas needed. He's a good neighbor—a good neighbor; but he'll never get anything to speak of ahead."

"'But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal,'" quoted the minister.

"Yes, yes; but, if my mind be right, the good book says something, too, about providing for one's own household,—eh?"

Mr. Weston smiled. "I believe there is a passage to that effect," said he.

"And," went on the deacon, a little triumphantly, "if neighbor Gray would give a certain portion—"

"A tithe?" interpolated the minister.

"And not go beyond that," continued Deacon Larrabee, "he'd be better off in one respect and no worse off in the other, to my thinking. I don't believe in indiscriminate giving.'

"Nor do I," was the quiet rejoinder. Then there was a silence while Deacon Larrabee filled another pail with snowy foam.

"How many cows have you, deacon?"

"Ten," answered the deacon, with a pardonable pride showing itself in voice and feature; "and its the finest herd in our county. They're grade Jerseys."

"Yes," returned Mr. Weston, a little absently. Then, after a slight pause, "Deacon Larrabee, I overheard the conversation between you and your neighbor Gray this morning, relating to Mrs.. Sperry and her misfortunes. Poor lady! She does need substantial sympathy. Can you not afford to lend a tithe of your cows to the Lord?"

"Which means that I give one of them to the widow," uttered the deacon, with a wry face. "No, sir, I'm afraid I can't. She wanted to buy one the other day, but I told her I'd none to spare. It was all owing to carelessness that she lost her cow, and I don't believe in upholding improvidence. Get to going on that way, and we'd all be on the town farm before we knew it."

Mr. Weston wore a thoughtful countenance, yet a gleam of something like amusement lighted up his eyes.

"Will you sell me one of your cows?" he asked.

"I—I have no need of the money now," replied the deacon, hesitatingly.

The minister continued: "I heard you say this morning that you would be glad to give a good man extra wages to help you through your haying, but that you were afraid it would be difficult to procure the needful assistance at any price. Will you take me, and let me pay for the cow in that way?"

A twinkle, both genial and quizzical, dawned in the deacon's gray eyes. For a moment he studied the young minister attentively. He was not at all what his neighbors would have denominated freehanded, yet he had a just appreciation of the quality of beneficence in other people. Neither was he a hard man at heart. It was only that the prosperity which had attended his every undertaking caused him to look upon the lack of it in a neighbor's affairs as an entirely unnecessary evil—one which prudence and forethought might overcome. Now he shook his petitioner's hand heartily.

"It's a bargain," said he. "When will you take the cow off my hands?"

"To-night, if you will lend me your assistance," was the ready response.

"Better take one of those I haven't milked," said the deacon, with a smile, "and save me that trouble."

Accordingly, a little later, the minister, accompanied by the deacon, led his recent acquisition down the farm house lane, and away along the thoroughfare of the sleepy little hamlet to the tiny cottage where dwelt Mrs. Sperry and her brood. There they fastened the animal to a convenient post, rapped softly, and departed, with the peaceful consciousness which attends upon a worthy deed resting upon one of them, at least, as a mantle.

Next morning when the deacon, hoe on his shoulder, was leaving his dooryard for his cornfield, he encountered Mrs. Sperry. Her eyes were red with long watching or weeping, and her thin lips trembled with the emotion which she vainly endeavored to conceal.

She put out both hands to him. "Deacon Larrabee," she said, "I have come to thank you, and to ask your forgiveness. Oh, I have had such hard thoughts of you!—how cruelly hard only God knows—and my own heart. Why, I almost came to pray that some dreadful misfortune might overtake you!—and all because you would not sell me the cow you meant to give me."

"I—really—I—" began the deacon. The situation was a most embarrassing one, and rendered doubly so by the knowledge that beside the open window of the room appropriated to his library the minister was sitting, no doubt enjoying the conversation in the fullest measure. "Really, Mrs. Sperry, I—"

"Now, don't try to deny it," laughed the widow, a little nervously. "I know the cow, Deacon Larabee, and—" she laughed again—"I am bowed down with contrition, to think of my unjust feelings towards you. But I shall always pray that you may prosper hereafter, deacon; for I am sure you will have a good account of your stewardship for the Master."

The deacon mopped his scarlet face in sore perplexity. How could he confess that the gift was none of his? Yet there really seemed no other way of escape from the one-horned dilemma in which he found himself, unless—

Well, the widow's generous thanks were very pleasant to hear; and after a momentary deliberation, the old deacon's good sense and genuine manliness came to the fore. He only wished that the happy thought had been his, the charity his own spontaneous deed.

"I am glad if the gift pleases you, Mrs. Sperry," shaking her proffered hand; "and now, please, say no more about it. Go into the house and see the woman. I'll warrant she has a glass of jelly for the sick boy."

To Mr. Weston, later on, he said with a laugh, and a jocular twinkle in his eye, "I've hired my man, and shall not need you; so we'll shake hands and call it square. I think that's what I meant to do all the while, though I wasn't really sensible of it. But I'll tell you one thing, Brother Weston, I don't believe the next tithe will come so hard."

Here is a man who has just stopped his paper. What a miserable looking creature he is. He looks as if he had been stealing sheep. How will he know what is going on, now that he has stopped his paper? He will borrow his neighbor's paper. One of these days he will break his leg, or be a candidate for office, and then the paper will say nothing about it. That will be treating him just right, will it not, little children?—Denver Tribune Primer.

A duel was lately fought in Texas, between Alexander Shott and John Nott. It was rumored that Nott was shot and Shott was not. (If so, it was better to be Shott than Nott.) But it was afterwards proved that the shot Shott shot at Nott shot Shott by accident, and the shot Nott shot at Shott shot past, and so shot him not. Thus the affair resolved itself into its original elements, and Shott was shot and Nott was not.

There is a great deal of sole-stirring music in a pair of squeaky boots.

Bird Song.

A little bonnie bird I know,
With breast more soft than eider down;
A dress she wears of dappled brown,
And sings with sweeter tones I trow—
Ah! sweeter this birdie sings
Than all the birds that Summer brings;
And yet her song is only this:
"I love you, papa! want a kiss."

Not tenderest song of nightingale,
Nor sparkling trill and gurgling gush
Of joy from velvet-throated thrush,
Or brilliant pipe of mottled quail,
Nor tuneful plaint of whip-poor-will
The measure of her song can fill;
And yet her song is only this:
"I love you, papa! want a kiss."

THE GREAT BRIDGE AT PORTAGE.

The mighty gorge of the Genesee river, which is the boundary line between Wyoming and Livingston counties, New York, is spanned by the celebrated Portage bridge, which was first built by the Buffalo & New York City railroad in 1851, under the direction of Col. Silas Seymour, who was on Nov. 8th for the second time elected State engineer. Originally the structure was of wood, placed upon massive stone piers fifty feet apart. The total length of the bridge was 850 feet, and its height above the stream 235 feet.

In 1875 it was consumed by fire, and the Erie railway company threw an iron bridge across the river at the same spot in 47 days. The towers were placed upon the same piers, and although at the time apprehension was had as to their stability, they having seriously suffered from heat at the fire, yet the consulting engineers declared them safe. For the past two years signs of distintegration have been noticed by railway authorities, and steps were taken to permanently secure them against further action of the elements and continued abrasion by ice in the winter season.

During the present summer the bed of the river, together with the rocky face of the falls, has been entirely covered with a coating of "beton coignot," a mixture composed of sand and cement, mixed with water to the point of saturation. The face of the falls was first encased in a wooden mould overlying the whole brink and distant from the vertical ledge about three feet. The cement was gradually introduced between the framework and the ledge by wooden spouts. The concrete was thoroughly impacted by means of rammers, and stone of suitable shape laid in courses were introduced, but not in close bond, thus allowing the cement to thoroughly permeate the whole mass. The work was put on in broken courses and a perfect joint at all times maintained. The vertical face of the river bed having thus been treated, the work was then extended upon the overlying horizontal river bed up to and under the bridge. The piers were also mined from below and a compact mass of cement introduced. This finished, the face of the wall was coated for one foot in thickness, encasing them in the beton coignot throughout.

In the accomplishment of the great work some thousands of barrels of cement and car-loads of sand were used. It is pronounced by eminent engineers to be a splendid piece of work, being the first of the kind ever attempted under the same circumstances and conditions. Fears had been entertained that the upper falls of the Genesee river directly below, which were rapidly receding towards the bridge, would ultimately cause the piers to be undermined. In the thirty years since the bridge was first built, the recrocession of the falls at this point measured two hundred and seventy-four feet, and had it not been protected a short time would have demanded heroic treatment to prevent the falling of the great bridge. To-day it is in better repair than ever before and bids fair to last for ages.

When the party of French and German visitors to the Yorktown Centennial passed over the New York, Lake Erie & Western railroad a few weeks since, a stop of thirty minutes was made at the bridge, that it might be thoroughly examined. Their admiration of the structure was unbounded. The scientific gentlemen of the party expressed great satisfaction at the "spider web span," its strength, and its great resistance to pressure. The railroad company are now instituting a series of electric signals, to be used for taking the speed of trains passing over it by means of the vibration of the bridge, if any. The devices are self-registering and will act as a complete telltale upon engineers who do not "obey orders."

A father who is more attentive in offering the small courtesies of life to other ladies than to his wife may expect his sons to be more polite to other boys' sisters than to his own. And the boy who at home passes in front of his mother and sister, fails to give them comfortable chairs, and at his home table cares first for his own plate, will sometimes slip and give his vanity a sad fall in company. Good manners that do not become habits are not to be depended on. It is hard for a mother to require of her boys a deferential courtesy, which should be the foundation of a gentlemanly behaviour. She should see to it that the children honor their father; it is the father's business to see that the mother is treated with attention. If the father does not do it, the mother must, for the sake of the future wife of her son, smother her sensitiveness and enforce politeness toward herself.

"You can't add different things together," said an Austin school-teacher. "If you add a sheep and a cow together, it does not make two sheep or two cows." A little boy, the son of an Austin avenue milkman, held up his hand, and said: "That may do with sheep and cows, but if you add a quart of milk and a quart of water it makes two quarts of milk. I've seen it tried."—Texas Siftings.

In a couple of hundred years from this, if the Bible is again revised to suit the times, the passage in the parable of the ten virgins, which reads thus, "Give us of your oil, for our lamps have gone out," will be changed to, "Give us of your electric lights, for our circuit is temporarily broken."—Somerville Journal.

Important definitions: Edith—Your question, "What are 'nightcaps' and 'eye openers'" received. "Nightcaps" are caps worn at night. "Eye openers" we have never seen, but suppose they must be some kind of automatic contrivances worked in connection with alarm clocks.—Burlington Hawkeye.

"I know where the dark goes when morning comes," said little Clare. "It goes down cellar; it's dark there all day."

It don't pay to have fifty workmen ragged, to have one saloon keeper dressed in broadcloth and flush of money.

THE WATER-SPIDER.

What a curious creature it is! I was reading about it the other day, and must tell you how it makes for itself a refuge down in the deep; something like a diving-bell, so that it can have dry quarters.

This spider's house is a cocoon, open at the bottom, and filled with air. The creature lines it with silk, and fastens it in every direction by threads to the surrounding plants. Within the retreat she sits, and watches for prey. When she has nearly exhausted the air she swims upon her back to the surface of the water to secure more.

If you stand by a pond and watch the still water, you will often see a little bubble that appears like a globe of quicksilver. This bubble is a bag of air that envelops the spider's abdomen. With it she descends to her house, and by it displaces the water, coming again and again to the surface for more, until she has sufficient to expel all the water from her cell. In the winter she closes the opening, and dwells there securely. The male spider does the same.

There is a species of water-spider that actually forms a raft, upon which it drifts for the purpose of getting its prey more easily. It puts together by silken threads a ball of weeds three or four inches in diameter; and upon this floating island it glides along until it sees a drowning insect, when it seizes it, and devours it at leisure. If alarmed by any danger, it gets under the raft for safety. Did you ever know such cunning and wisdom?

I am so astonished when I learn the curious things that belong to God's creatures, that I shut my book, and look up into the heavens with praises of my great Creator in my heart and upon my tongue. Only think! it took hundreds of years for the science of man to find some invention by which he could go down into the deep, taking air enough with him to keep him alive; and yet these little spiders, with no human reason or wisdom, have always, by a secret art, supplied themselves with atmospheric air while they dwelt in the water below.—Child at Home.

NEWSPAPER BORROWERS.

An exchange recently published a letter from a lady subscriber, in which she complained bitterly of the annoyance she experienced from the habit her female neighbors had of constantly borrowing her papers. The exchange offers the suffering lady, and all others similarly situated, an adequate means of succor. Here is the plan: Let the lady, immediately upon receiving the paper, carefully cut from it some item—most any item will do, only let it be neatly and carefully removed from the paper. Then the following procedure will be sure to ensue: In a few moments the neighbor's boy will come after the paper—he will take it home—within three minutes he will emerge from the house and scoot down the street and very soon return with a folded newspaper of the same date as the one just borrowed. By the time the clipped paper has circled around among the female borrowers, the streets will be lively with hurrying boys, and the revenue of the newspaper will be materially increased. Not one woman among them all would be able to sleep a wink without knowing just exactly what that cut-out item was. The next day the lady must pursue the same course, and similar results will surely follow. In an extremely obstinate neighborhood these proceedings have to be repeated three or four days, but no longer. By that time the lady will be able to read her paper in peace, and the newspaper's finances will be the gainer through several new subscribers. This rule is infallible where the borrowers are females, but it can't be vouched for in the case of men. There isn't that inherent curiosity to work upon, you know, and—and—but perhaps we are getting a little too deep.

A GENTLE REBUKE.

A lady riding in a car on the New York Central Railway was disturbed in her reading by the conversation of two gentlemen occupying the seat before her. One of them seemed to be a student of some college, on his way home for vacation.

He used much profane language, greatly to the annoyance of the lady.

She thought she would rebuke him, and, on begging pardon for interrupting them, asked the young student if he had studied the languages.

"Yes, madam, I have mastered the languages quite well."

"Do you read and speak Hebrew?"

"Quite fluently."

"Will you be so kind as to do me a small favor?"

"With great pleasure; I am at your service."

"Will you be so kind as to do your swearing in Hebrew?"

We may well suppose the lady was not annoyed any more by the ungentlemanly language of this would-be gentleman.

THE TRUE WIFE.—Oftentimes I have seen a tall ship glide by against the tide as if drawn by some invisible bowline, with a hundred strong arms pulling it. Her sails were unfilled, her streamers were drooping, she had neither side wheel nor stern wheel; still she moved on stately, in serene triumph as with her own life. But I knew that on the other side of the ship, hidden beneath the great bulk that swam so majestically, there was a little toilsome steam-tug, with a heart of fire and arms of iron, that was tugging it bravely on; and I knew that if the little steam-tug untwined her arm, and left the ship it would wallow and roll about and drift hither and thither, and go off with the refluent tide, no man knows whither. And so I have known more than one genius, high-decked, full-freighted, idle-sailed, gay-pennoned, but that for the bare, toiling arms and brave, warm beating heart of the faithful little wife that nestles so close to him, so that no wind or wave could part them, would have gone down with the stream, and have been heard of no more.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

"You have heard, my love, that Amanda is about to marry Arthur?" "I know it, but what I can't understand is that a woman as intelligent as she is can consent to marry a man stupid enough to marry her."

Prof. Dunders, the most distinguished oculist in Holland, said in a recent lecture that green must be reckoned with the primary colors. It is not possible to make it by the combination of pure yellow and blue.

"Tommy," said a mother to her seven-years-old boy, "you must not interrupt me when I am talking with ladies. You must wait till we stop, and then you can talk." "But you never stop," retorted the boy.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1881.

Special Notice!

All persons indebted to this office in any way are requested to call and settle before Jan. 1, 1882.

A RECOUNT of the vote for mayor in Holyoke last week shows that instead of Mayor Goodall being re-elected by a majority of four, R. P. Crafts was elected by two majority.

IN the Guiteau trial this week Dr. Spitzka, a New York expert, testified that in his opinion the prisoner is insane, while a number of witnesses have shown pretty conclusive reasons for believing him perfectly sane.

BOSTON elected Dr. Samuel A. Green mayor on Tuesday by a plurality of 734 over Albert Palmer, the Democratic candidate. "Poor Palmer" left the Republican fold a few years ago to pick up crumbs under Butler's table, but he hasn't yet found any crumbs to pick up.

EX-SENATOR FRELINGHUYSEN of New Jersey was nominated and promptly confirmed as secretary of state on Monday. Mr. Frelinghuysen will not perhaps make as "brilliant" a secretary as Mr. Blaine, but he will make a conservative and thoroughly safe one. Mr. Blaine retires next Monday.

THE advocates of woman suffrage are quite put out with President Arthur because he said not a word about them in his message. The President is also said to have decided not to appoint any more women to office. This is an unfortunate decision, if he has really come to it, though it will please the male office seekers, without doubt.

TWO of the six Massachusetts cities which held city elections on Tuesday voted against licensing the sale of liquor. This makes just a third of all the cities in the State which have voted this way, and a good opportunity will be afforded the coming year to observe the workings of the license and anti-license systems in the different cities.

ONE important matter to come before Congress at this session will be the question of renewing the charters of the national banks, many of which will expire next year. Many Democrats are in favor of abolishing the national banks and returning to the old system of State banks, but the advantages of the present system are so palpable it hardly seems probable that any attempt to destroy it can succeed.

POSTMASTER GENERAL JAMES has decided the question of how long he will remain in the cabinet by sending his resignation to the President, to take effect January 1, when he will enter upon his duties as president of the new Lincoln National Bank of New York. President Arthur will find it a difficult task to make his place good, and he will come a great way short of it if the report is true that Mr. Filley of St. Louis is to have the position.

SENATOR EDMUNDS has introduced a bill in the Senate authorizing the secretary of the treasury to audit and pay the bills incurred by President Garfield's sickness and funeral, if they do not exceed $100,000. In the House on motion of Mr. Taylor of Ohio, Gen. Garfield's successor in that body, a resolution has been adopted providing for a committee of 11 to audit the bills, and also consider what shall be done for Mrs. Garfield and family.

The Vienna theater disaster proves to be much more terrible than at first reported. The number of persons missing is now reported to be 805, but the exact number of lives lost will probably never be known. The calamity seems to have been the result of culpable negligence. Exit doors designed for just such an emergency were locked, with nobody to open them, and at the very beginning of the fire the gas was turned off, leaving the people to struggle through the blind passages of the building in the dark. An immense concourse of people attended the funeral of the victims on Monday, and the work of lowering the coffins into the large common grave lasted from noon until night.

Terrible storms have been raging on the Atlantic during the past few weeks, probably the worst experienced in 40 years. European steamships have been greatly delayed, and some of them a good deal damaged, while a good many lives have been lost. The steamer Neckar, from Bremen, lost everything portable on deck, had the wheel house smashed, and the boats and captain's bridge carried away. The waves broke over the deck almost continually, and once the cabin was flooded. Other ships fared about as badly.

An incident related by the Rev. William Herbert Smyth, of Port Austen, Michigan, a home missionary whose circuit embraces a part of the burnt district, forcibly illustrates the destitution which still exists there. Writing of the case of a woman to whom he gave $5, he adds: "In a moment she fell on her knees, held up the bill in her hand, saying, 'O God, this is too good of you;' then begged me to take half the amount and give it to a poor neighbor a mile away, but fortunately I had $5 for her too."

A railroad boarding house at Cut Rock, Pa., seven miles south of Pittsburg, was destroyed by fire early last Saturday morning, caused by a lamp explosion. Nearly 50 laborers were asleep in the loft, 13 of whom perished in the flames, while many others were seriously burned.

"Heller the Magician," who eloped last week with a 14-years-old Westfield girl, was arrested at Worcester Friday on the charge of seduction, and the girl was taken home. He had succeeded in procuring a license, but had not been married to the girl.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Just call and see the fine display of Holiday Slippers at W. R. Milligan's.

Do not forget to call at O. P. Allen's to see his fine display of Holiday Goods.

Call at E. S. Brooks' store and see a fine assortment of goods in his line for presents at any time, Holidays or any other days.

F. D. Barton, in order to be prepared for the Holidays, has this week added to his stock a full line of solid and silver-plated ware.

A general assortment of fresh Holiday Goods, too numerous to mention, and a fine line of Lamps at low prices. N. B.—We shall continue, until Jan. 1, to give presents ranging in value from five cents to $3 with each dollar's worth of goods sold for cash. E. J. Wood.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Only two weeks more of 1881.

Sleigh manufacturers and dealers look unhappy.

The ice men begin to think this is not an ice winter.

Dr. W. H. Stowe's residence is receiving a fresh coat of paint.

The painters are brightening up the Congregational parsonage.

The trees were handsomely coated with snow Thursday morning.

Rev. E. H. Perry of Quincy will preach at St. Paul's church to-morrow.

D. W. Northrop has become salesman in the store of W. P. French & Co.

It is time to be getting your new resolutions into shape for the coming year.

Jack Frost did some handsome work on the window panes yesterday morning.

The weather has been a good deal mixed this week, for the middle of December.

Rev. Wm. Crawford, D. D., of Roxbury, will preach again at the Congregational church to-morrow.

The strong winds of Tuesday night blew down several of the circus bill boards just out of the village.

H. T. Huntington, the painter, has this week hung out a very neat sign of his own workmanship on Walnut street.

The public library will be closed next week Saturday evening, so that the librarians can be looking after their Christmas stockings.

The shortest days of the year are now upon us, and for the next week we shall have only 9 hours and 4 minutes of sunshine each day.

Remember that the JOURNAL clubs with all the leading magazines and periodicals at very favorable rates, and send in your orders for 1882.

Herbert Davis of Belchertown will shortly open a billiard saloon in the rooms in Cross's Block formerly occupied by the late J. P. Murphy.

Winter begins his work next Wednesday, according to the almanac. It is high time for him to do so, if he proposes to do much at the business this year.

The locomotive "Brimfield" burst a flue just below Barre Plains on its up trip Wednesday night, and had to be sent to Springfield for repairs the next day.

People look at their full coal bins very complacently, though most of them agree that they would prefer to burn more anthracite and have the weather a little less variable.

Landlord Turner of the Tockwotton House is thinking of removing to Denver, Col., to go into business with his brother, and advertises his house and hotel furniture for sale in another column.

W. H. and J. W. Brainerd have bought for $3300 the standing timber on that portion of the Col. Knox farm situated in the north part of this village, back of Pine street, and will cut it off this winter.

The engine of the 11 a. m. train for Amherst got off the rails in leaving the turntable at the latter place last Saturday noon, making the train something over two hours late on its return trip.

E. Goodes, who for some years past has repaired the children's shoes at the State Primary School, has opened a new boot and shoe store on South Main street, next to Munger's tailoring establishment.

It has been suspected that the weather clerk is heavily interested in the roller skate business, and don't propose to furnish ice for any other kind of skating; but he now shows indications of a change of heart.

F. J. Wassum has put up a fine and somewhat lofty board fence on the south side of his Pleasant street lot, which will serve to ward off from his neighbors on that side a good deal of cold wind during the winter.

The personal property of the late Alvin Hastings, consisting of a number of cows and other live stock, hay, grain, farming tools and household goods, is to be sold at auction at 10 a. m. next Wednesday, at his late homestead.

Preparations are being made for Christmas trees at the Baptist and Universalist churches next week Saturday evening, and there will be Christmas concerts the Sunday evening following, at the Universalist and Congregational churches.

At the Farmers' Institute to be held at the Weeks House next Tuesday, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m., M. I. Wheeler of Great Barrington is expected to open the discussion on the question, "How to Make an Agricultural Fair Successful." Other speakers will also probably be present to participate in the discussion.

Christmas trees and stockings will be along in a week, and the children can hardly restrain their eager impatience as the time draws near for the annual distribution of Santa Claus' favors. They scan the store windows eagerly, and indulge in many a bright vision of the nice things in store for them a week hence. May their longing hopes be fully realized!

The annual meeting of Merrick Post No. 107, G. A. R., was held on Wednesday evening, when the following officers were elected: H. R. Stoughton, Com.; H. H. Paine, S. V. C.; D. W. Taft, J. V. C.; H. E. W. Clark, C.; W. Holbrook, S.; C. W. Cross, Q. M.; G. A. Randall, Officer of the Day. The Post now has a good number of members, and is in quite a flourishing condition.

Mr. Frost, the yeast peddler, left his horse in front of the post-office for a moment Thursday afternoon, when the animal started on a run for the depot platform, went around the tank house, and made for the platform of the old freight house at a rate which sent the beast sliding over the platform, leaving the wagon at its edge unharmed, though the yeast and pennies flew in every direction.

Mizpah Chapter, No. 23, of the Golden Rule Alliance made choice of the following officers Tuesday night; Judge, O. P. Allen; Assistant Judge, J. H. Haynes; Scribe, Mrs. O. P. Allen; Collector, G. F. Brown; Treas., Mrs. E. J. Wood; Chaplain, S. Edgerton; Guide, H. S. Ward; Warden, Mrs. H. Edgerton; Sentry, J. B. Calkins; Surgeon, Dr. J. K. Warren; Past Judge, E. J. Wood.

Advertisers crowd us sharply this week, but they furnish some interesting reading matter for those in search of Christmas presents—and that includes about everybody, of course. Read our columns carefully and see who advertises, and you will then know where to go and make your purchases. Our merchants show an unusually fine stock of holiday goods this year, and are ready to meet every want in this line.

The annual meeting of the Palmer Carpet Co. was held on Wednesday, and the stockholders were made glad by the declaration of a 7 per cent dividend, this being the first dividend since the company was organized in 1874. The mills are now in a prosperous condition, and will have a reserve fund of several thousand dollars on hand after paying the dividend. The old board of officers were re-elected, as follows: President, George Robinson; clerk, A. Pinney; treasurer, O. H. Sampson of Boston; directors, J. B. Shaw, H. P. Holden, A. J. Northrop, Geo. Robinson, O. H. Sampson.

Albert Dean of Wilbraham has this week been sentenced by the superior court at Springfield to two years in the house of correction, for larceny. Alexis Waid of Ludlow was given two months in the same place for being a common drunkard. Hiram and Ellen E. Rider of Palmer were proved guilty of adultery, and sentenced to 15 and 12 months respectively in the house of correction. Oscar E. Dix of Palmer was found guilty of the larceny of a watch from Patrick Watts, but the jury's verdict was pronounced useless, as it was not sealed before they separated, so Dix goes free. Peter Stanton of this town was given 10 months in the house of correction for assault on an officer.

Whitmore & Clark's celebrated minstrels will appear at Wales Hall next Wednesday evening. This is the only minstrel troupe which travels with four artistic solo performers; and, with a variety of other talent, a brass band of twelve pieces and an orchestra of seven, it makes up a combination of attractions which cannot fail to please. These minstrels are now on their twenty-third annual tour, and their long existence as an organization is pretty good proof of their excellence. They have been here on several occasions in the past, and so are well known to our citizens. Anybody who has seen "Hank" White's droll performances once, always wants to go again. The company as a whole is said to be better than ever before, some important changes having been made. All now appear in black faces, and their performances are awarded the highest praise. See advertisement.

"Hazel Kirke," the pathetic play which has had such an extraordinary run of almost 1200 nights, will be presented at Wales Hall next Thursday evening by a company with the same scenery and properties that brought it celebrity at the Madison Square theater, New York. The fame of the play has preceded it, and a crowded house is assured, the demand for tickets being very large already. The story of "Hazel Kirke" is one of remarkable strength and purity. Hazel is the daughter of a well-to-do miller, and has nursed back to life Lord Travers, whom her father saved from drowning. She is betrothed to Aaron Rodney, a wealthy neighbor, who nobly resigns her when he discovers the love which has grown up between her and Lord Travers. She marries the nobleman, and her father drives her from home. She is happy with her husband until his mother tells her that she is not his lawful wife, and that he must marry another woman, whose fortune his dead father had stolen. Hazel, believing that her husband has deceived her, flies from the place. Her father has lost his eyesight during her absence, and as she opens the window of the old room on a wild and stormy night, she hears him bewailing his misfortunes and charging them to her. She enters and meets Rodney, who again offers to marry her. The old man does not know of her presence, and when Rodney asks his consent he refuses, and says he would drive her from his door. Hazel leaves the house, and a moment later, a shout that Hazel is drowning is heard, and the old man in his helplessness can do nothing for her. His stubbornness and cruelty flashes upon him, and in his misery his senses leave him. Hazel is saved by Lord Travers, her husband, who has followed her. Her voice brings the old man back to the world again, and the play ends happily.

WALES.

E. Shaw and family, David Richardson and wife, and J. Spafford have gone to Atlanta, Ga.

Mrs. Hill gives music lessons on piano or organ. She will be glad to see any who wish her instruction, at her home in Hubbard's block.

The Baptist Sunday school will have a Christmas concert Sunday evening, the 25th, and their Christmas tree the Monday night following.

The Baptist ladies' aid society held a wrister party supper in the vestry Wednesday evening. Although stormy, it was well attended, and much enjoyed by all.

WILBRAHAM.

Presiding Elder Ela preached at the Memorial church last Sabbath morning.

Athena and Club hold a union open society next Friday evening at Fisk Hall.

The Farmers' Club held the second meeting of the season at the house of the president, M. F. Beede, Monday evening. The next meeting will be Dec. 26th, with J. C. Moody.

The Young Woman's Missionary Society of the Congregational church met with Miss Ella Clark on Maple street, Saturday afternoon and evening, and this afternoon and evening hold their weekly meeting with Misses Helen and Mary Beebe. The sewing society of the South church met with Mrs. Dr. Foskit Wednesday afternoon and evening.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The matter of a Christmas tree is being discussed, and will probably be acted upon at the Sunday school to-morrow.

The best yet! 337 pounds for an April pig raised by Henry Cutler. Abner E. Bell comes second, with 320 pounds. Next!

William Chapin, baggage master at the B. & A. station, has resigned, to take a position with Taylor, Nichols & Co., of Springfield.

The ladies' benevolent association are discussing the propriety of an open meeting, and we shall doubtless hear from them by the new year.

Station Agent Stebbins has taken the house usually occupied by the superintendent of the paper mill. Wm. G. McIntyre and wife, and several others, will take board with him.

E. B. Gates and Co. have been to New York and bought a stock of Christmas goods, and Stone & Co. have not been slow in this matter either, as any one will see by a personal call upon the gentlemen.

WARREN.

"HazelKirke" is to be played here on Monday evening.

The Congregational society are to have a Christmas tree.

Rev. Mr. Forbes preached on the subject of temperance last Sabbath.

The ladies' sociable met at Rev. Mr. Forbes' Wednesday evening.

The musical society are preparing to present "Esther" before the public.

The Methodist's sale comes off next week, commencing the 20th and ending the 23d.

The public library association hold a meeting next Monday to choose officers for the ensuing year.

HAMPDEN.

A. C. Burleigh, aged 75 years, had another attack of vertigo a few days since.

Rev. Mr. Root and wife have started an evening school at his house three evenings each week, for primary and advanced pupils.

The Winter term of the public schools, with most of the old teachers retained, has been running a little over a week, and the committee report them well started.

A Mr. and Mrs. Burlingame drove against a post in front of the dwelling house of Lyman Smith, some weeks since, breaking both shafts and throwing them upon the ground. They claim no personal damages, but have demanded damages of the town for injuries to their vehicle, and it is understood the selectmen have agreed upon a satisfactory settlement of the matter.

There has been some commotion for a few weeks relating to a change of postmaster in the village. Mr. Stanton, the present postmaster, has held the office for many years, and in the earlier part of his term kept the office in the store where the new applicant will have it, if successful. Many citizens became dissatisfied with having the office in a country store, and Mr. Stanton, after corresponding with the department, removed it to his dwelling house, fitting up a room exclusively for the same, free from noise or commotion, easy of access, and centrally located. No one in the county has given his personal attention to the office to the extent that Mr. Stanton has, and we hope the department will be slow to remove so faithful, honest and efficient an official.

MONSON.

The Rufus Pease farm, on the road to Hampden, is to be sold at auction next Tuesday, with the stock and farming tools.

The store of W. N. Flynt & Co. is attracting many visitors these days, and anybody who makes a tour of the establishment will be surprised at its completeness and the extensive variety of goods displayed. The new dry goods department is greatly appreciated by the ladies, being practically separate from the rest of the store, and stocked with a choice variety of dress goods, etc. On the same floor are found the gentlemen's furnishing goods, crockery, hardware and grocery departments, and up stairs are carpets and oil cloths, curtains, boots and shoes, and paper hangings. Stepping into the basement, the visitor finds meal and feed, vegetables, sugars and other heavy groceries, paints and oils, etc., with an ingenious arrangement for keeping butter hard and nice at all seasons in a large cooler surrounded by water. The store covers some 10,000 feet of floor space, and its departments are so varied and well stocked that the establishment as a whole is undoubtedly the largest and most comprehensive one in this part of the State, outside the cities, while everything is arranged as conveniently as possible for the transaction of business and the convenience of patrons. In the rear of the store are the private offices of the firm and also a commodious drafting room, for the preparation of plans for stone work from their extensive quarries. The store is under the direct charge of W. K. Flynt, who is assisted by an efficient corps of clerks. Just now the show windows, as well as the counters, are filled with holiday goods of great variety, making the store a big center of attraction for purchasers of Christmas presents.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. C. H. Ricketts of Thorndike will supply the Union pulpit next Sunday.

Mrs. M. A. Squier has fitted up her store with a fine lot of Christmas goods, consisting of toys, notions, etc.

Rev. Mr. Smith of Vermont, who recently supplied the Baptist pulpits in this village and at Palmer, will preach here again on Sunday.

Both Sunday schools are arranging for Christmas concerts and trees, and the children are all looking forward, expecting a merry Christmas.

Willie Allen and two other boys were skating on the Quaboag last Sunday, when the ice broke and young Allen was drowned before assistance could reach him.

A slight fire in the spinning room of the Palmer Mill one day last week caused considerable excitement among the operatives in the room for a few moments, but the fire was speedily extinguished and no serious damage was done.

J. H. Thayer has added meat to his other articles of merchandise, and his business has increased so much that he has been obliged to employ another clerk. Dea. O. S. Thayer, for the past four years employed in the finishing room of the Palmer Mill, has taken the position.

The first lecture in the Y. M. C. A. course was delivered Friday evenieg of last week by Gen. John L. Swift, on "Tadpoles, or the Coming Yankee," to a full house. The next lecture in the course will be delivered next Wednesday evening, by William I. Marshall, subject: "An Evening in Wonderland, or the Yellowstone National Park." Mr. Marshall is perfectly familiar with his subject, and his lecture is spoken of as intelligent and entertaining, and as giving much information about a region with which most Americans are not familiar. Other lectures to follow will be by Prof. T. H. Kimpton of Boston, Prof. R. H. Mather of Amherst and Col. R. H. Conwell of Boston, while the course will close with a concert by the Amherst College Glee Club.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The reading room connected with the library rooms is to be open afternoons for the use of ladies.

The installation of the officers of Washington council of Masons is to take place next Tuesday evening.

There is to be a public installation of the officers of King Solomon's Royal Arch Chapter the first week in January. The following lodges have been invited: Mt. Zion of Barre; Hayden, Brookfield; Quaboag, Warren; Bethel, Enfield.

At the annual meeting of J. W. Lawton Post 85, G. A. R., held Dec. 8, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Chas. E. Woodward, P. C.; John Lashua, S. V. C.; M. G. Miller, J. V. C.; George S. Marsh, Q. M.; Aram Warburton, S.; J. A. Cushman, Chap.; George E. Fairbank, O. D.; Henry Connell, O. G.; Delegate to Dep't Convention, George S. Marsh; Alternate, Mark Hennebry. The installation of officers is to take place the first regular meeting next month.

REPRESENTATIVE PECK EXPLAINS.

Editor of the Palmer Journal:—In a late issue of the JOURNAL you have offered me the use of your columns to explain my vote on the question of compensation of the Legislature for the extra session, and I accept your invitation.

If the extra session had been called to act on new business, the amount reported by the committee ($100) would have been ample; but the matter of the revision of the statutes was partly acted upon at the regular session, to such good effect that the expense of the present revision will be about half what it was in 1860. The revision was matter entirely foreign to the usual business of the session, and took considerable time, while no additional compensation was voted. The pay for the regular session was about $4 a day, or at the rate of $1200 a year, about the same as the third grade of clerks receive in the state offices. Now, as the extra session was practically a continuation of the regular one, I considered it perfectly fair and right, in voting on the question of compensation, to take into account the time previously spent on the revision. With this view of the subject, and without being under any pledges or obligations, I voted for the increase, without the slightest expectation of receiving a dollar of it, for before my name was reached on the roll-call it was evident to the dullest comprehension that the increase would not be carried. Very respectfully yours, CHAUNCEY E. PECK.

Wilbraham, Dec. 13th, 1881.

The New York Tribune has attained a vast and growing circulation, which clearly demonstrates its popularity with people of intelligence and culture. It stands to-day in the very front rank of American newspapers. This position has been won, in the teeth of the sharpest newspaper rivalry, by its enterprise in its news department, by the able and brilliant character of its editorials, and by its unwavering devotion to Republican principles. Its prospectus for 1882, and its great premium offers, will be found in another column.

The first regular passenger train from Fishkill Landing, N. Y., to Boston over the New York and New England Railroad left Fishkill Monday morning, and the first carload of freight was transported across the Hudson River from Newburg to Fishkill Landing on Monday, without breaking bulk.

The old Washington Hotel, on Broadway, New York, was closed on Tuesday, and will soon be demolished. The building was erected about 140 years ago, and in one room was a sofa and five chairs used by Gen. Washington.

S. V. Holloway, paying teller of the Poughkeepsie National Bank, N. J., has been arrested on the charge of stealing $40,000. Wine and women did it.

You would do well to notice the special offer for holiday goods by Smith and Murray, Springfield. Sunday schools especially.

If you are nervous or dyspeptic try Carter's Little Nerve Pills. Dyspepsia makes you nervous, and nervousness makes you dyspeptic; either one renders you miserable, and these little pills cure both. 2-39

Santa Claus confidentially informs us that he "gets his finest watches and jewelry at Davison's (George Hunt's successor) 354 Main street, Springfield. Can do the best there, you know." We knew his prices were very low.

When you are in Springfield buying Christmas presents just step in to Metcalf & Luther's and see their new styles of easy chairs and their elegant chamber sets and parlor suites. They will make a Christmas present that will be useful.

L. S. Stowe & Co., Springfield, have the finest store, and the largest stock in New England out of Boston from which to select Holiday Goods. They have new and choice designs for this season in Jewelry, Diamonds, Fine Gold Chains, Watches, Clocks and Silverware. They are agents for the "Hampden," "Waltham," "Elgin," American and Patek "Phillippe" Watches.

Purchasers of Christmas presents should look into the crockery rooms of Charles Hall of Springfield. His store is full of the choicest goods of his own importation, and he offers them at such extremely low prices as to guarantee satisfaction. He has on display the largest and finest assortment of china and fancy goods ever shown in New England outside of Boston.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, offer of their own importation: Real Duchess lace, $2.25, $2.50, $2.75, $3, up to $7.50 per yard. Real Duchess Gilets and fichus, $9, $10, $12.50, $13.50, up to $25 each. Real Duchess handkerchiefs, $3.50, $4.50, $5.50, $6, $6.50, $7, up to $15 each. Hand-run Spanish laces, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75, $2.50, $2.75, $3 per yard. Black and cream hand-run Spanish lace scarfs, $2.25, $2.75, $3.25, $4.50, $5, $6, up to $15 each. Hand-run Spanish fichus, $4, $5, $6, $7, $8, up to $20. These will make great attractions for the holidays.

Temperance is attracting much attention, showing itself in local option laws, societies, crusades and restrictions upon liquor production; but with all these efforts, the consumption is enormous, and, undoubtedly, the reason is, because there is nothing strenuously advocated to relieve and destroy the craving for stimulants. But, if the disease was treated rationally, by arousing the torpid liver with Simmons Liver Regulator, the dispirited drunkard would find his cravings soon dissipated, and with cleared head and active liver, he would not need liquor.

The ladies and the boys in our New England families want to have something to say when it is decided what paper to take next year. On Monday, January 2d, a new story by Oliver Optic will be begun in THE BOSTON DAILY GLOBE and will be given in addition to all the news of the day. Oliver Optic's new story will be entitled "Beau Gray; or, Getting His Living," and will be a very powerful and thrilling romance, founded on real life, but healthy and elevating in tone. All the boys and girls, and ladies too, will want to read it. It will be continued several weeks. THE GLOBE is only 2 cents per copy of any newsdealer, or 50 cents per month by mail. Address the Globe Newspaper Company, Boston.

WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE has been proved to be a positive antidote for Catarrh at any stage. Catarrh being a constitutional infection as well as a local inflammation, the elements of the Cure are absorbed by the purulent mucous. Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth whe e it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

The New York Tribune.

"The Leading American Newspaper."

During the year 1882, the Tribune hopes to employ with increasing success the work and the methods which have won for it so large a measure of popular approval. It has attained, and means never to lose, the high standard of success which was aimed at by its founder, the largest circulation among the best people. So large a circulation and one so widely distributed over the entire territory of the nation has never been attained by any other newspaper in the United States. We accept this fact as the verdict of the American people upon the conduct and character of the Tribune. The position it occupies could never have been gained nor retained but by pre-eminent merits as a newspaper, as an organ of sound opinion, and an advocate of just public measures.

In short, the Tribune will, as heretofore, continue to be the medium of the best thought and the voice of the best conscience of the time; will keep abreast of the highest progress, favor the freest discussion, hear all sides, appeal always to the most enlightened intelligence and the purest morality, and refuse peremptorily to cater to the tastes of the vile or the prejudices of the ignorant.

The well-known special features of the Tribune will be carefully maintained. Its Agricultural Department will remain as it is, the fullest and best. The Household and Young Folks' Departments, the literary, scientific and religious features, the standard market reports, will all be kept up and extended as opportunity may serve.

VALUABLE PREMIUMS.—The Tribune never has been equaled by any other paper in the permanent and substantial value of its premiums, and the extraordinary liberality of the terms upon which it has offered them to the public. We take pleasure in calling the attention of all intelligent readers to the following offers:

THE LIBRARY OF UNIVERSAL KNOWLEDGE,

embracing Chambers' Encyclopædia complete, omitting only some of the cuts, with extensive additions by an able corps of American editors, treating about 15,000 additional topics, thoroughly Americanizing the entire work, adding to it over 25 per cent of the latest, freshest and most valuable matter, the whole making 15 handsome octavo volumes of 6x9½ inches in size, averaging nearly 900 pages to the volume, printed in large type, and neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

CHARLES DICKENS'S COMPLETE WORKS.

An entirely new edition of the complete works of Charles Dickens, printed from new electrotype plates, large clear type, on fine calendered paper, in 15 volumes, 5½ x 7½ inches in size, containing over 800 pages each, beautifully bound in cloth, gilt. This is one of the handsomest editions of Dickens's works ever issued. The price of the set of 15 volumes is $22.50. We can send either Dickens's works or the Library of Universal Knowledge, as above described, on the following terms:

For $15.—The Library of Universal Knowledge, or Dickens's Complete Works, as above described, and the Weekly Tribune 5 years to one subscriber.

For $20.—The Library of Universal Knowledge, or Dickens's Complete Works, as above described, and the Semi-Weekly Tribune 5 years to one subscriber.

For $19.—The Library of Universal Knowledge, or Dickens's Complete Works, as above described, and ten copies of the Weekly Tribune one year.

For $28.—The Library of Universal Knowledge, or Dickens's Complete Works, as above described, and twenty copies of the Weekly Tribune one year.

The postage on the Library of Universal Knowledge, if sent by mail, will be 21 cents per volume; on Dickens's Works 15 cents per volume, which the subscriber will remit if wishing them thus sent. In packages, by express, they can be had much cheaper.

THE GREAT BIBLE CONCORDANCE.

ANALYTICAL CONCORDANCE TO THE BIBLE, on an entirely new plan, containing every word in alphabetical order, arranged under its Hebrew or Greek original, with the literal meaning of each and its pronunciation; exhibiting 311,000 references, 118,000 beyond Cruden; marking 30,000 various readings in the New Testament; with the latest information on Biblical Geography and Antiquities, etc., etc. By Robert Young, LL. D., author of a new literal translation of the Hebrew and Greek Scriptures; Concise Critical Comments on the same; a Grammatical Analysis of the minor Prophets in Hebrew; Biblical Notes and Queries; Hebrew Grammar, etc.

This great work is comprised in one handsome quarto volume, containing 1160 three-column pages, neatly and substantially bound in cloth.

It is at once a Concordance, a Greek, Hebrew, and English Lexicon of Bible words, and a Scriptural Gazetteer, and will be as valuable to students of the Holy Word as an Unabridged Dictionary is to the general reader. In fact, every home that has a Bible in it ought also to have this great help to Bible reading and study. It is as well adapted to the use of the common reader as to that of the scholarly clergyman.

We offer it, in connection with the Tribune, at the following low rates:

For $6 the Concordance and one copy of the Weekly Tribune five years, or five copies one year, to different addresses.

For $11 the Concordance and one copy of the semi-Weekly Tribune five years, or five copies one year, or ten copies of the Weekly Tribune one year, to different addresses.

For $20 the Concordance and twenty copies of the Weekly Tribune 1 year, to different addresses.

The postage on the Concordance is 40 cents, which the subscriber will remit if wishing it sent by mail. Except for short distances, the mail will be cheaper than the express.

UNABRIDGED DICTIONARIES.—We can furnish the new revised and enlarged edition of either Webster's or Worcester's Quarto Unabridged Dictionary and the Weekly Tribune five years for $12; or the Semi Weekly for $17. Remember that these are the new and enlarged editions of these great works.

A BEAUTIFUL GIFT.

There ought to be in every home and every office in the land good portraits of Jame A. Garfield and his heroic wife. To enable every one to possess them, every subscriber to the Tribune who, with his subscription, will send 10 cents additional to pay for packing and postage, will receive as a present from the Tribune an elegant life-like portrait of the late President Garfield or his wife, whichever may be preferred, or for 20 cents additional we will send them both. These portraits the Tribune has had engraved in the best style, and they are perfect fac-similes of the best crayon likenesses ever taken of the martyr President and his noble wife. They are beautifully printed on fine plate paper, 22 by 28 inches in size, and will be an ornament to any parlor, library or office.

WOOD AND LUMBERMEN ATTENTION!

This is to call attention to a valuable Wood and Timber Lot soon to be thrown into market.

Said lot belongs to the estate of the late John Ward, situated in Palmer, Mass., and contains 100 acres (more or less). Every square rod of this tract is accessible to horse teams, slopes toward the shipping points on the B. & A. R. R., one-half mile north of Blanchardville lower crossing, one-third of a mile northeast from Tenneyville crossing, and one mile east from Palmer Depot, a shipping point in six directions.

The present growth (which is mostly of handsome chestnuts) has been growing from 30 to 40 years, and portions are now ready for cutting.

Taking into consideration the size and situation of the lot, its accessibility and nearness to market, with the present and prospective demand and high prices for telegraph and telephone poles, railroad ties, lumber and wood, this is undoubtedly the most desirable tract of woodland to be found within many miles.

The time and conditions of sale will be made public in a few days. Till then all interested are referred to HIRAM CONVERSE, near the premises, or to C. H. PLUMLEY, Palmer Depot, and are invited to examine the lot and surroundings, or to correspond with Just So.

HOW SWEET IT WAS.

He and she sat close together,
O, O! how sweet it was!
One cold night of wintry weather—
O, O! how sweet it was!
Up the chimney roared the fire,
And he drew his chair still nigher,
With a glance of fond desire—
O, O! how sweet it was!

She was winsome in her beauty,
O, O! how sweet it was!
And he blushed in modest duty—
O, O! how sweet it was!
With a timid sort of haste,
And a beating heart he placed
One long arm around her waist,
O, O! how sweet it was!

—Hawkeye.

HOW SAD IT WAS.

Softly crept the old man nigh,
O, O! how mad he was!
Anger flashing in his eye—
O, O! how mad he was!
Slowly drawing back one boot
He elevated that galoot
Up the chimney 'mongst the soot—
O, O! how mad he was!

Then oh how that girl did sigh,
O, O! how sad she was!
Declared vehemently she'd die,
O, O! how sad she was!
Then tenderly she was led
By her mamma up stairs to bed
Where hot tears alone she shed,
And O, O! how sad she was!

—Sweet Singer of Hartford.

WARMTH FROM NEWSPAPERS.

Many years ago, in one of the severe winters when there was much hardship among the poor, a city paper suggested that old newspapers, spread over the bed, would form an excellent substitute for blankets and coverlets. This brought upon the journal a great deal of harmless ridicule from other papers, but it brought comfort to many a poor family. In the matter of bedclothing, especially, we are apt to associate warmth with weight, and do not consider that there is no warmth in the coverings themselves, but that they merely prevent the heat of the body from passing off. Whatever is a poor conductor of heat will make a warm covering. Paper itself is a poor conductor, but still poorer are the thin layers of air that are confined when two or three newspapers are laid one upon another. A few newspapers laid over the bed will keep one much warmer than some of the heavy, close-woven blankets. We do not propose newspapers as a substitute for blankets and comforters, but it is one of those make-shifts that it is well to know. In traveling one may, by the aid of a few papers, secure a comfortable rest in a thinly-clad bed, and if we can not afford to give a destitute family a blanket or comforter, we may show them how to increase the usefulness of their thin coverings by stitching a few layers of newspapers between them. It may be well to remind those who grow window-plants, that by removing them away from the window, and arranging a cover of newspapers over them, they may be preserved from harm in severely cold nights. With the plants as with ourselves, it is not so much that cold comes in, as that heat goes off, and often a slight protection will prevent the escape of heat.—American Agriculturist.

DOLLARS AND SENSE.

The Larmarie Boomerang says:—Sometimes an advertising agency in the east sends us a proposition which shows a style of wild, rash liberality which cannot be conducive to thrift and prosperity.

One of these concerns the other day made a proposition to us to run a quarter column ad. of a preparation which would make whiskers grow on a meerschaum pipe. The ad. was to run in the daily and weekly one year, and copies of both papers were to be sent to the agent. During that time $250 worth of local notices were to be inserted also.

The whole thing at our rates would have figured up about $400, and the princely sum of $30, less 33½ per cent, the charges of the agency, was lavishly offered.

Of course we want to encourage the healthy growth of new and attractive styles of whiskers in Wyoming. We want to see a whisker industry spring up here on the frontier that will rival the crops of older and more civilized countries, but we cannot herald the glad tidings of whisker balm all over the United States and southern New Jersey just for the pure and innocent pleasure of seeing a picture in our paper day after day with a beard on him like a buffalo overcoat.

Whatever will forward the interests of our young territory in any way we hope to assist as long as we can do so, and still obtain enough to pay freight on sight drafts and lead pencils. But we cannot wear out our young life trying to inaugurate a tropical growth of whiskers, just for the satisfaction of being called a philanthropist, with our toes sticking through our boots.

Synopsized opinion by the Court—"These defendants are dismissed. The court finds they stole a large amount—enough to entitle them to respect. Call the next case."—Cincinnati Inquirer.

A greenback with a hole in it will be received where a silver dollar having a hole would be refused. This is an Iowa argument in favor of greenbacks.

Any coward can fight a battle when he's sure of winning; but give me the man that has pluck to fight when he's sure of losing.—George Eliot.

Having been troubled with a very bad cough for about two years and having tried almost every cough mixture that was ever made, I have found none that has given me such great relief as Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, and I earnestly recommend it to all afflicted. Benj. F. Duggan, 14 Park Pl. N.Y.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into their graves when, by using Parker's Ginger Tonic, they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength surely coming back to them. See other column. 6

TO GRATIFY HIS WIFE.

AN INTERESTING STORY—A HOPELESS CASE CURED—A GOOD REASON FOR HAPPINESS.

Statement of Mr. Washington Monroe, of Catskill, Green County, New York.

"For many years I had suffered from a complaint which the physicians called Gravel. I had employed some of the most noted doctors without obtaining any permanent relief, and for a long time my case was regarded as hopeless. All who knew the circumstances said I must die. Finally, my wife induced me to try a bottle of Dr. Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy,' which she had somewhere heard of or seen advertised. Without the slightest faith in it, but solely to gratify her, I bought a bottle of a druggist in our village. I used that and two or three bottles more, and—to make a long story short—I am now as healthy a man as there is in the country.

"Since then I have recommended 'Favorite Remedy' to others whom I knew to have suffered from Kidney and Liver Complaints; and I assure the public that the 'Favorite Remedy' has done its work with a similar completeness in every single instance, and I trust some other sick and discouraged mortal may hear of it and try the 'Favorite Remedy' as I did." 4w39

BACK ACHE
POSITIVELY CURED BY
BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.
Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.
SECOND.
Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.
THIRD.
Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain at once.
FOURTH.
Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.
FIFTH
Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.
SIXTH.
Because the manufacturers have received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

Keeping the Holidays.

It is the children's time o' the year;
Their faces, radiant with delight,
Fill even the poorest home with cheer,
And make the happiest still more bright;
The gravest eyes put on a smile
To watch their pranks and merry ways,
And mark how glad the world is, while
With gifts and laughter, songs and plays,
The children keep the holidays.

But how shall we, whom years have taught
The bitter truths of toil and care,
Whose soberer grown up hearts are not
Like theirs, as light as summer air—
We, who have learned that time beguiles,
That youth departs, that joy decays,
That fortune's frown outlasts her smiles,
And life deceives and age betrays,
How shall we keep the holidays?

We cannot dance in cap and bells;
We cannot blind ourselves to truth—
For Time, the oculist, dispels
The glamour from the eyes of youth;
We know life's cheats and mockery,
And Hope's sweet lies and soft decays;
And ghosts which children do not see
Sit at our feasts and haunt our ways,
And help us keep our holidays.

But selfish grief is vain and weak;
Those souls are ever happiest
Which through this devious journey seek
Their bliss in making others blest.
If we but shed one helpful gleam
Along the world's bewildering ways,
And make one sad heart brighter seem,
More warmly shall our home-fires blaze,
And happier be our holidays.

Ah! he whose tender thought gives heed
To poverty and wretchedness,
Who hears the cry of woe and need,
The plaint of hunger and distress—
Whose heart with pure compassion burns
For those who walk in thorny ways,
Who dries the mourner's eyes, and turns
The orphan's tears to songs of praise,
Most fitly keeps the holidays.

AFTER MANY DAYS.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

"Never, so long as I live, will I forgive her, and when I am dead not a single penny of my money shall ever benefit her or any one belonging to her."

For the thousandth time old Job Grey uttered the some threat—the same in spirit if not in words. It had become almost part of his daily life, and appeared to intensify as the years passed. One would have thought, as the grave yawned more closely, he would have softened. But it was not so. His purpose remained unchanged and his will unbent.

"Why, Job," exclaimed his wife, pausing in making the mince pies that were ever the crowning effort of the Christmas table, "what on earth is the matter now?"

And it would have been a wonder to those more deeply versed in the mystery of the human soul than Susan Grey. Her husband had waxed rich; the world had gone well with him, his acres had increased, he was the owner of bank and railroad stock, his cattle and horses and sheep were many, and he was not without worldly honors. Yes, business had gone well with him, and why, upon that golden morning, he should have turned back the ledger of life for nearly twenty years to look upon one dark, haunting page, could have been accounted for by none but himself.

"I was thinking, Susan," he said, and despite all the gall of bitterness within his heart he could not entirely keep his voice from trembling and something like mist from gathering in his eyes, "I was thinking of the day when our only child forsook her home to go away with a scoundrel."

The poor mother, who had never ceased to love their offending daughter, drew her apron over her tear-laden lashes and sobbed:

"He loved our child dearly and was very poor, Job, but always treated her kindly—always as long as he lived."

"He stole her away. She disobeyed her parents, and I could—"

"Don't, Job—don't curse her. Poor child, she has suffered enough, and we have all wandered like sheep from the right path. But what could make you think of her to-day of all others?"

"I had to do so. We are growing old without any one to care for us, and when we die all our wealth will go to strangers, unless—"

"You leave it to some society."

"To have it fought over and squandered. No; never a cent will any of them finger and grow fat upon."

"But, our daughter?"

"Hush! As she made her bed even so shall she lie in it. Didn't she steal hundreds of dollars from me?"

"Thank heaven, they were married. Oh! the consolation that has been to me. But I wouldn't think of it to-day, Job; to-morrow is the blessed Christmas, and we ought to prepare ourselves to meet it in a proper spirit. Certainly we have very much to be thankful for."

"Well," he continued, "this picture of our Mary—take it away, or it will drive me mad."

The woman raised it from the floor, where it had fallen, tenderly brushed away the dust, kissed it, and having laid it safely away again between the leaves of the Bible, he continued:

"Happening to come across the face once so dear to us, I thought of what our home might have been had she married as we wished; how she and her husband, and bright-eyed, laughing children, would have made the old house ring to-morrow. But it will never be, never be."

His wife had sunk into the rocking-chair, sobbing aloud, and even he was moved as she had never seen him before, as he went on:

"It can never be now, Susan, but you might yet have somebody to save your old footsteps—one who would, perhaps, grow into our hearts, become as a child to us, and to whom we could leave our property when we are called beyond the dark river."

"Job!" she gasped in astonishment, "what do you mean?"

"I mean," he said, hastily, and as one uncertain even of himself, "we might adopt some girl."

"Gracious! But old Martha? She has been with us these many years, and, like ourselves, is about worn out. You could not have the heart to turn her out now."

"No, Susan. She shall be cared for even unto death. But she is failing fast. You cannot but have noticed it, and if I am not deceived she has something heavy upon her mind."

"It must be her son."

"No, he is dead. But yesterday I brought her the news—blessed news I should say—though ever since she has wandered around muttering strangely and weeping and wringing her hands. No; she shall be taken care of. But how about the child, Susan?"

"I don't know what to say, Job, it has come upon me so sudden. I will think it over, and we will talk of it again this evening. I haven't time now. As you say, Martha has become useless, and I have so much to do to get ready for dinner to-morrow. You know you invited the Dominie and his wife to come home with us after church."

"Yes, yes, and I've got a considerable amount of choring around to do myself."

All that day there was great stewing, cooking, and baking in the home of Grey, but his wife went around with a lighter step, pleasanter face and brighter eyes than usual, and ever and anon her old lips bubbled over with song, while Martha sat moping in the chimney corner, working her hands nervously, or wandering up and down stairs.

"Poor Martha," said Mrs. Grey to the woman she had summoned to assist her in the lavish preparations, "she takes the death of her son hard. I fear it has upset her reason."

"He was never a good son to her; always caused her trouble and disgrace. Dear knows she ought to be thankful he has gone," was the almost unfeeling remark.

"But still he was her child," said the good dame, thinking of her own wandering, home-denied one, and tears trickled down her face. "I wonder where he died and what was the matter. I forgot to ask Job. But we must hurry up. I declare to goodness it is almost noon, and I've got so much to do and so much to think about."

"What is all this fuss about?" questioned Martha, suddenly raising her head from between her hands and apparently noticing for the first time the unusual disturbance in the domestic arrangements.

"Have you forgotten that to-morrow is Christmas, and the Dominie and his wife are to be here?" asked her mistress. "But don't fret about it, Martha. You are not well and we'll manage to get along without you."

"I shall never be well until I am in my grave," replied the old woman, solemnly.

"I know, I know, Martha—you are thinking of your poor boy. But you must remember that he is—"

"In the pit of fire and brimstone where I —" she glared around defiantly for a moment and then continued—"where I soon shall be. Oh! heaven, that I should have—"

The rest of the sentence was inaudible, and she flung herself back in the chair, bent down her head, and sobbed aloud, as she rocked uneasily backward and forward.

The mistress soothed her and hastened on the work. And early in the afternoon the pantry shelves were loaded with the most delicious looking pumpkin pies, a great fat turkey, prepared for the spit, a massive bowl of ruby cranberry jelly, a huge chicken-pie, waiting the oven; a cake crowned with the most delicate frosting—in fact, everything in as much forwardness as could be, and a hungry soul would have rejoiced even in expectation of the feast. Then the house was made tidy, swept and dusted, fresh asparagras sprays hung in the corners, vases filled with bright-colored chrysanthemums, and the mistress, giving over the rest to her "help," announced her determination to run in and see the Dominie's wife a bit.

But she saw the Dominie as well, and they had a long and earnest consultation. The trouble which old Martha was in was discussed at length, and then they drifted into other matters, until at last warned by the lateness of the hour, Mrs. Grey thrust her needles into the ball of yarn, rolled up the half-finished stocking, put it in her spacious pocket, and said she must go and get tea.

"You won't forget what I said, and be sure to come," she said at parting, with a strange combination of smiles upon her face and tears glistening in her eyes.

"Never fear," answered the Dominie warmly, "and I will pray for a blessing."

"Oh! it would make the day one of such fervent and holy thanksgiving, Dominie."

"Yes, a soul saved; a lost sheep gathered again within the fold would be as a benediction. No, I shall not fail to remember, and I will add works to faith. Strange what can be the matter of Martha."

An hour later Job Grey came in from his work and found a loaded table waiting, lamps lighted, and a hickory fire blazing and crackling cheerily upon the sitting-room hearth.

"Bless me, Susan, you are beginning Christmas early," he said.

"I thought that you'd be tired and hungry, Job, and we might as well be comfortable."

"So I am. What, waffles!" he exclaimed, as his wife placed upon the table a huge dish of the delicious preparation, crisp, golden-brown, rich, and covered with the freshest of butter, whitest of sugar and daintily sprinkled with nutmeg.

"Yes, I knew you liked them, Job," replied his wife quietly, though her old eyes sparkled with pleasure and the red flush on her cheeks could scarcely have been accounted for by the heat of the fire.

"Like them, you dear old soul? There is nothing I like better. And such nice ones! I don't believe you ever made better in all your life, and I know no woman who can beat you, Susan."

Pleased with praise, Mrs. Grey told of her visit to the parsonage; that the minister said he would try and find out what was the trouble with Martha, and comfort her, and that they had also talked about their proposal to adopt a girl.

"And what did the Dominie say?" questioned the husband.

"Oh, he approved the plan, and wondered why we had not thought of it before."

"Thinking was easy enough; the right kind of a girl is the trouble."

"The Dominie believes he knows one that will suit us—the child of a widow—and he will drive over and see about it."

"That accounts for his being on the road so late. I saw him going alone as I came in, and feared some one might be dying. When will he let us know?"

"To-morrow."

"I wonder who it can be? Oh! I guess I know. It's that Smith child, and a smart youngster. Well, whatever the Dominie does is always about right, but we needn't have anything to do with the girl unless she suits us."

"Of course not. It is not every one I would be willing to take into my house, much less my heart."

"Early to bed and early to rise," was with them the custom of a lifetime, and as the next day would be an uncommonly busy one they acted upon it, and the house soon became quiet, save as now and then could be heard the walking and groaning of old Martha.

The husband slumbered heavily, but the good wife scarcely closed her eyes. The anxiety for the morrow, the disturbance caused by the old servant, the responsibility attached to the adoption and bringing up of a child, and the conversation had with the minister combined to drive away slumber, and before the day she was astir.

But Martha had arisen even earlier. As her mistress entered the kitchen she found her bending over the fire, shivering, bonneted, shawled, and her drabbled dress telling that she had been abroad.

"Land sakes!" she exclaimed; "where have you been,—are you sick?"

The woman looked at her sharply, even fiercely, but made no direct reply, though her mistress caught a muttered threat about doing something even if killed for it, and, looking upon her as one bordering upon insanity, refrained from further questioning, and was careful not to cross her.

But as the morning progressed Martha appeared her former self, though more reticent. She took her usual interest in what was going on, attended to the household duties, and never gave a sign of the cause of her recent trouble, save it might have been in a casual word dropped about her not being "wanted very long."

That was the ray of light that solved the mystery of her actions for Job Grey and his wife. She must have learned their purpose, and presumed she would be discharged.

"Poor old Martha," said the husband, "go and comfort her, Susan; tell her she shall never want a home as long as I have a room over my head. She has been too good and faithful a servant."

Mrs. Grey did as her husband requested. The woman stared at her defiantly for an instant, and then broke down entirely and sobbed bitterly.

"The good news was too much for her," said Mrs. Grey to her husband when she returned. "If I had only known the cause of her trouble at first, how much suffering I might have saved her."

Certainly Martha seemed cheered, and as soon as the breakfast things were out of the way and her master gone to his out-of-door employment, she sought her mistress and said:

"So you are going to adopt a child in your old age?"

"Yes, Martha, we are talking about it."

"Who?"

"Dominie Armstrong says he knows a girl that will suit us."

"And he is right. Listen to him."

Martha turned away again, and even more earnestly than before did up the work.

"I have everything in order," she said, when called to go to church, "but have got to stay to attend to the dinner."

"What, not going, Martha?"

"No, not to-day. I am not well, and there is too much to be done."

She retreated within, carefully closed up the house, and went up stairs, remaining there for a long time; in fact going and returning until dinner absolutely required her attention. And Job Grey and his Susan, and the Dominie and his wife found everything ready when the long service at church was over.

The table was set and garnished, the great chicken pie steamed appetizing odors, the pumpkin pies as flaked gold, and the turkey dripping unctiousness from its well-browned sides. Had the mistress of the mansion attended to every matter personally there could have been no improvement. But one thing a trifle surprised her. There were two more plates and two more chairs than the number warranted, and she questioned Martha as to the reason.

"I didn't know who you might bring home. Somebody is always being asked, and this being Christmas I thought very likely the table might be crowded, especially as there was so much cooked."

"And you were right, Martha," said the Dominie, approvingly. "There is indeed plenty, and room for more. Oh, that all the sorrowing stricken children of the earth could partake of such bounty; that every wandering son and daughter of earth could gather around their parents' board, and forgiveness, love and happiness reign in every heart."

Job Gray looked up at his wife uneasily, and his wife was forced to wipe away the tears. His words had touched the hidden fount of feeling within their hearts, far more than his labored sermon upon charity had done, and for a moment the silence was painful.

To Job Grey his oft-repeated prayer arose accusingly. It was known to all present, and for the first time he felt not only its absurdity but its sin. Yet he was the first to rally, and commanded Martha to remove the extra plates and chairs.

The old servant looked questioningly at the minister. He came to her relief, saying:

"Now that they are placed, you might as well permit them to remain, my old friend. Blessed are they that give, and—"

"You promised the girl should be here," interrupted Mrs. Gray.

"So I did, and if present she would fill one place."

"And her mother the other," said old Martha.

She flung the door wide open and revealed a woman in the prime of life, holding a beautiful girl by the hand and both looking through tears, shrinking and afraid.

"Mary! Oh! God be praised, my daughter!" exclaimed Mrs. Grey, springing forward and clasping the elder one in her arms, and covering her face with kisses. "My daughter and your daughter! Father in heaven, I thank Thee!"

Job Grey stood as a lion at bay and glared fiercely around. He saw that a trap had been sprung upon him; that the minister he revered, the wife he loved, the old servant he felt kindly toward, had all conspired against him. But his almost daily oath stared him in the face, and he put an iron heel upon all of natural affection and ground it into the dust.

"Go hence," he said, "vagabond and wanderer that you are. Go, and take your child with you. No daughter of mine are you. Go and quickly, before I turn you out of doors."

It was a terrible moment for all. The old, silver-haired minister stood with hands upraised to heaven; Susan Grey clung to her child and grandchild as one clinging to life; the wife of the minister sobbed pitifully; the daughter, driven from the home of her childhood, grew pale as death, and old Martha stood firm and waving her hands as if addressing unseen spirits.

"Go!" continued Job Grey. "The homestead won by honest toil shall never shelter you nor yours."

"For the sake of mercy, remember the day; remember it is the holy Christmas. As you hope for forgiveness, show it to others," pleaded the minister, trembling before the storm he had raised.

"Be still!" commanded Job Grey, himself whiter than snow. "Had she only disobeyed me, I might have forgiven; but a thief, never!"

"Father," said the poor, heart-broken widow, breaking silence for the first time, as she rushed forward and threw herself a supplicant at his feet, "I never took aught from you—not a single penny. I only followed my heart."

"You speak falsely; the very night you fled hundreds of dollars went also. Go! you beg in vain."

"Not one step!" exclaimed Martha, springing forward and confronting the angry man. "Hear me! Your child is as innocent as the babe unborn. It was I who stole your money! My son had to fly to escape prison. I stole your dollars to save him."

"Martha!"

"I speak the truth—can prove it. Now, Job Grey, work your will with me; send me to prison and let me rot there. I care not what becomes of me. I had hoped to save and repay it, but that wretched boy took all—all. I had prayed to be spared this. The thought of proclaiming myself a thief in my old age nearly drove me mad. But for the sake of her whom I carried in my arms, for her child, I have told all—told the truth."

Job Grey looked around as one dazed by a sudden and vivid flash of lightning. Many things before misunderstood were plain now. Then human nature and a parent's love could no longer be restrained.

"Mary, my daughter, God forgive me," and opening his arms his long and sternly condemned child was clasped within one of his arms and lay sobbing upon his breast, her daughter within the other, and the wife and mother hanging upon all.

For a little time heavy sobbing alone could be heard; then silence settled upon all. They felt that any ordinary speech would be sacrilege, and it was a millstone lifted from every heart when the minister kneeled and said, in a trembling voice:

"Let us pray."

It was a simple, loving petition he offered, and acted as oil poured upon trembling waters; it accomplished what nothing else could have done, and when finished joy lighted every face like sunshine breaking through black clouds, and the angels of Peace and Love hovered with white wings and songs of rejoicing around the hearthstone of Job Grey.

There was the widest forgiveness for all, even poor old Martha, and around no board was gathered a more happy, loving family, and from no home went up as glad a hallelujah and triumphant song of praise.

HOW TO FEED A TAPE-WORM.

"Hafe you got some of dot kind of oysters what hafe been shpiled?"

"Spoiled oysters? Yes, we have a few cans left over from last week that I think will fit you."

"How you sold 'em?"

"Oh, I'll sell 'em right; you may have all you want for a nickel."

"Vell, den, mein good frent, vill you be so kind as to pring me four tozen from dot damaget lot?

The oysters were brought and the customer quietly put them down into the pit of his stomach, and having finished the job, he said to the restaurateur, "Now, my goot frent, you have got some goot oysters, ain't it?"

"You're mighty right I have."

"Vell, me takes a half a tozen raw und some bickles."

These were in turn served and quietly put on top of those gone before. But the restaurateur was troubled, and when the patron came to settle the bill, he said to him:

"Look here, pard, I don't like to be too inquisitive, but blowed if I wouldn't like to know why you took a fancy for so many spoiled oysters and to so few good ones."

"Vell, you haf peen a good frent to me, und so I told you somedings. You see I haf got a tape-worm, und efery dime dot is the vay I haf to do. You see, dot lasht haf a tozen, dem was for mineself. You know I ain't dot kind of a Commodore Vanderpilt dot I can afford to preak up my whole peezness to feed a tam tape-worm on good oysters!"—St. Louis Republican.

Of paper mills the United States has nearly fifty per cent more than any other country in the world, and what is more, we consume about as much paper as the mills make. The exact number of mills is 960, while England, Ireland and Scotland between them have but 650. Germany has 545, and France comes close behind with 539. Italy has 206, and the vast Austrian and Russian Empires have but 160 each. Paper mills, with some exceptions, seem to be a fair index to the taste for reading in a country. The American ratio of production is about an eighth of a pound for each man, woman and child; in Russia the ratio is but one-hundredth part of a pound, and in Roumania it sinks to an almost infinitesimal fraction. In the more backward countries, however, all the finer grades of paper are imported, so that it would hardly be fair to estimate their literary requirements by the paper production.

A veteran watchmaker in Vouvay, Switzerland, claims to have invented a process by which watches will run for years without winding up. He seems to have good ground for his claim, too, for a sealed box, containing two watches, intrusted by him to the municipal authorities in January, 1879, has just been opened by them, and both time-pieces were found to be still running.

The highest rate of tax in Massachusetts on each $1000, is $32, in the town of Monroe, county of Franklin; and the lowest, $3, in the town of Groton. The rate in Nahant is $4.50 and in Milton $5. Ten cities and 122 towns report an increase in rates; 2 cities and 35 towns report the same rates as last year.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 24 1881.

Special Notice!

All persons indebted to this office in any way are requested to call and settle before Jan. 1, 1882.

EX-SECRETARY BLAINE has accepted the invitation to deliver the eulogy upon President Garfield before both branches of Congress, at the forthcoming memorial services.

SPEAKER KEIFER announced the House committees on Wednesday. The Massachusetts members fare pretty well, and the committees are thought to be very fairly made up, though some of them are not as strong as they ought to be. Congress has adjourned to January 5, for the holiday recess.

CHIEF JUSTICE GRAY of this State was on Monday nominated by the President as a judge of the United States Supreme Court, and was confirmed by the Senate on Tuesday. Judge Gray will be 54 years of age next March, and is a jurist of conspicuous ability, whose elevation to the bench of the U. S. Supreme Court is not only well deserved, but will add materially to the strength and character of the court.

GUITEAU'S trial was resumed on Wednesday, after an adjournment for two days on account of the death of a juror's wife, and several experts have testified that they consider the prisoner sane. Guiteau's former wife visited him in jail last Saturday, to bid him good-by. The prisoner's vanity has been gratified by the taking of a plaster cast of his face, copies of which are to be sold to provide funds for Mr. Scoville.

THE publication of Mr. Blaine's vigorous letter of instruction to Minister Lowell in regard to the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850, has raised quite a breeze in England. By this treaty it was agreed that neither government would seek or maintain exclusive control over the then-proposed Nicaraguan canal, nor have any fortification in its vicinity, and the Britishers do not take kindly to the American eagle's proposal now to take any such canal under the protection of his own wing exclusively. But they will probably have to come to it eventually.

IT seems that by some singular oversight the laws of this State do not make a legal holiday of the following Monday, when Christmas comes on Sunday, as it does this year. Other holidays falling on Sunday are followed by a legal holiday on Monday, but this provision was carelessly overlooked in the case of Christmas. Now that attention has been called to the matter, the next Legislature will doubtless correct this error, while we presume next Monday will be observed quite as faithfully as though it were really the legal holiday people have supposed it would be.

COL. STRACHAN of the Ninth regiment reported to the Governor last week Friday, as the result of his investigation into the conduct of his men at Richmond, that twenty of them were guilty of various minor offenses, but that the graver charges were not substantiated. Gov. Long at once ordered the summary discharge of the offenders, with a hint that they must not be allowed to re-enlist in the future, and also forbade the regiment to parade outside its armory until after the spring drills. Col. Strachan thinks very few organizations would have behaved better "under similar circumstances," but some regiments seem to have done so. The Ninth may consider itself fortunate in getting out of the scrape so easily, and it ought to learn a good lesson from this experience.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR is gradually making over his cabinet, and during the past week has added two new members to his official family by nominating Benjamin H. Brewster of Pennsylvania for attorney general, and ex-Senator Timothy O. Howe of Wisconsin for postmaster general, both of whom have been confirmed. Mr. Brewster's appointment is considered an indication of the President's purpose to have the star route prosecutions go on, and the work will be in good hands. Mr. Howe is a man of excellent character, but nobody supposes him to have any special fitness for the office of postmaster general, and his weakness will be especially noticeable, following such an admirable official as Mr. James. It is noticeable that both men are from the Grant wing of the party.

THE mystery concerning the fate of the steamer Jeannette, which sailed from San Francisco July 8, 1879, to explore the Arctic regions, has at last been solved, though three United States vessels searched in vain for traces of her this year. The Jeannette intended to proceed eastward, but was instead carried far westward by the strong currents, and on the 11th of last June was crushed in the ice. The crew embarked in three boats, became separated, and after three months of great suffering one of the boats reached the mouth of the river Lena, in Eastern Siberia, Sept. 29, another arriving subsequently. The third boat has not been heard from. Some of the men were in a pitiable condition, with frozen limbs, but the Russians appear to have done everything in their power to relieve them.

It is reported that a party of New York and Boston capitalists have arrangements nearly completed for the construction of a new railroad between Boston and New York, connecting at Mount Vernon, N. Y., with the Harlem road, and making the distance between the cities 189.33 miles.

The thirty-seventh annual meeting of the Massachusetts Teachers' Association will be held in Boston next week Thursday, Friday and Saturday, in the Montgomery street high school building.

LOCAL NOTICES.

What makes a neater present for a gentleman than a pair of Holiday Slippers from Milligan's?

Don't forget that a general closing-out sale of our entire stock of Christmas goods will be made Saturday evening, regardless of cost.

G. L. Hitchcock & Co.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The banks will be closed on Monday.

Get out your biggest stockings, children.

It looks very much like a "green Christmas" this year.

A. P. Loomis of Peotone, Ill., is, with his wife, visiting his brothers in this place.

Edgerton & Davis have engaged the services of F. Olney, of Worcester, as bookkeeper at their foundry.

Yesterday's wind indicated that the rain of the past two days is to be followed by fair and colder weather to-day.

Geo. E. Davis has put out a new street lamp on State Avenue, which is appreciated by benighted travelers in that vicinity.

Fine weather for the doctors. 'Most everybody has a severe cold, and the victims may think themselves fortunate if they escape with nothing worse.

Some of those new street crossings which the improvement association are expected to put in would have been fully appreciated in the mud of Thursday and Friday.

Rev. W. W. Parker of West Boylston will preach to-morrow at the Congregational church. Rev. John Willard of Newtonville preaches the following Sunday.

The charming weather the first of the week made a lively Christmas trade for our merchants, whose tempting display of goods has been duly admired by large numbers of purchasers.

Work is brisk at the Hampden Hat Mills these days, where some 60 hands are engaged in pressing and turning out 1200 dozen hats a day. Over 400 cases of hats were shipped from the mills on Tuesday.

The usual Christmas services will be held at St. Thomas' Catholic church to-morrow. Mass will be celebrated at 7 and 11 o'clock a. m., and in the evening there will be vespers and preaching at 7 o'clock.

The fame of our expected new union station seems to have reached the outside world. A letter was received at the post office the other day addressed to the "architect of the new depot." It hadn't been delivered, at last accounts.

We have had only 63 hours and 28 minutes of daylight this week, against 104 hours and 32 minutes of night-time. The days will begin to lengthen on Monday, and the cold should begin to strengthen, according to the tradition of the elders.

A fair-sized audience witnessed the presentation of "Hazel Kirke" at Wales Hall Thursday evening. The piece was put on the stage in very good shape, considering the limited space, and the company is unquestionably one of the best which has visited the town.

A few venturesome lads have courted death the past week by trying their skates on the thin ice which covered some of the ponds for a few days. But even this thin covering has been spoiled by the warm sunshine and the rain, and now the skates must be hung up for a time.

Maurice Moynahan, who was indicted by the grand jury at its recent session for manslaughter, in killing Reuben S. Cadwell in a pasture at Monson last summer, has been adjudged insane by Judge Wells of Springfield, and has been taken to the asylum at Northampton.

We have received from the author, Mrs. Nellie K. Bradford, formerly of Monson, a touching little poem entitled, "Elberon, or The Ride for Life," the subject being our dead President's journey to Long Branch. It will well repay perusal. For sale at Allen's book store.

Miss Kate Howe, who for so many years has been the faithful telegraph operator in this place, has resigned, and Walter C. Gamwell, her assistant for some years past, has been appointed to the position. Michael Dawson takes the latter's place in carrying the mails between the depot and the post office.

Butterflies are not often found disporting themselves in the middle of our New England December, but the bright sunshine of the past few days has lured even these lovers of a warm sun from their hiding places, and H. M. Stacy shows us a fine specimen which he found fluttering around his house at Tenneyville one day this week.

The selectmen have notified the liquor dealers in town that all screens, partitions, etc., interfering with a view of their bars from the street, must be removed, in accordance with the law. Some of the bars in this village are in back rooms where nothing can be seen of them from the street, and they will have to be brought into the front rooms, or the partitions taken down.

The public schools will have a Christmas recess from Dec. 23d to Jan. 2d. Mr. Doubleday, principal of the high school, has resigned his position, and the school committee have secured as his successor F. W. Whitney, at present instructor of chemistry in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Boston, and late principal of Kingston Academy, an experienced teacher in all grades of high school work.

The president and directors of the Vermont Central Railroad went to New London Tuesday and spent the day following there, returning north by special train Thursday forenoon. During their sojourn by the seashore they made arrangements for the construction of a new steamer to run from New London to Block Island, work upon which will be begun at once, in order to have the boat ready for use next summer.

An unusually small audience greeted Whitmore & Clark's minstrels Thursday night, but those who were there laughed to their heart's content. The Delmaniins and Favors were excellent in their specialties. W. A. Huntley showed himself a skillful banjoist, and the company as a whole has been enlarged and improved since last here. Hank White was there too, of course, and was just as "immense" as usual.

There was an attendance of some 500 or 600 people at the auction sale of the personal property of the late Alvin Hastings on Wednesday, and as a general thing the articles were disposed of at very fair prices. This sale has put an end to the daily appearance on our streets of Mr. Hastings's milk cart, which has for many years been regularly seen in the village every morning and evening, Mr. Hastings being the first to establish a milk route here.

There will be Christmas trees and a supper for the children at the Baptist and Universalist churches this evening. On Sunday morning there will be services appropriate to the day at the Universalist church, conducted by Rev. J. H. Amies, and Rev. O. B. Hunt will preach a Christmas sermon at the Baptist church in the afternoon. In the evening there will be Christmas concerts at the Congregational and Universalist churches. At the Congregational church on Monday evening the ladies are arranging for an entertainment for the children of the Sunday school, consisting of pantomimes, singing, etc., and followed by a supper.

The 1.24 p. m. express for New York has for a few days been drawn by a new locomotive, "No. 129," which is designed for fast traveling, and is the largest passenger engine on the road. It weighs 40 tons, has a boiler 52 inches in diameter, with 221 two-inch flues, and 18 by 24 cylinders. The engine carries from 160 to 170 pounds of steam—30 or 40 more than is usually carried—and has a device for throwing the weight of the tender upon the driving wheels, to prevent slipping. On Wednesday the engine drew the train of seven cars from Boston to Worcester, 48 miles, in 58 minutes, making allowance for an extra stop at Wellesley. The usual time for the run is 70 minutes.

A change has been made in the time table of the Ware River Railroad this week, for the better accommodation of the freight business of the road. Instead of putting on a regular freight train, however, as has been hoped would be done, one of the passenger trains is slowed up so as to give it time to pick up freight and do the switching along the road. Conductor Sedgwick's afternoon train down from Winchendon, which has heretofore left that place at 3.30, arriving at Palmer at 5.38, now leaves Winchendon at 1.30 and arrives here at 5.35, making the 48 miles at the perilous rate of about 12 miles an hour. The noon train down from Ware is put back 10 minutes, and now arrives here at 1 p. m., instead of at 12.50.

The jury in the case of Montraville Ackert, charged with burning his buildings at Brimfield, brought in a verdict of guilty last week Friday, after being out over night and until nearly noon, but recommended him to the mercy of the court. Lawyer Barker was found guilty of breaking jail, but appealed to the supreme court on exceptions. On Wednesday John C. Dunn of Three Rivers was found guilty of selling liquor to Frank Rivers, a minor, and will probably have to lose his license in consequence. Jerry Downey of this town was found guilty of an assault on Lizzie Hemmel, by putting a cat under her clothes which scratched her severely. Luther E. Bridge of East Longmeadow, charged with killing Smith Ransom, has pleaded nolo contendere to the charge, and has been released on $100 bail.

The initial farmers' institute of the season called out an attendance of about fifty at the Weeks House on Tuesday. In speaking of "How to Make an Agricultural Fair Successful" M. S. Wheeler of Great Barrington gave an interesting account of the Housatonic Agricultural Society and its very successful exhibitions, due to some extent to its geographical location, which is such as to give it freedom from the competing influences of other societies, while the attendance at its fairs reaches as high as 12,000. Various suggestions were made by other speakers, and the institute was considered a profitable one. In addition to Mr. Wheeler, three other members of the board of agriculture were present, V. Taft of Upton, Dr. H. P. Wakefield of Leicester and W. R. Sessions of Hampden. The next institute will be held the third Tuesday in January, when dairy matters will be discussed.

Richard Rogers of this place was before the district court for drunkenness last week Friday, and paid $8.85, this being his third conviction within a year. Patrick Ferris of Bondville paid $7.40 the same day for overdriving a horse. John Driscoll, an impecunious tramp, was put off Conductor Fay's train twice Monday, and when an attempt was made by a railroad official to arrest him he made hot work for him and one or two others. Sheriff Palmer came along soon and succeeded in getting him into the lock-up. He was taken before the court on Tuesday and sentenced to two years in the Bridgewater workhouse, but appealed. He was unable to furnish the $300 bonds required, and so went to the State street boarding house in Springfield, where he must tarry until next May, and will then doubtless get two years at Bridgewater from that time. Dennis Sugrue of Three Rivers was fined $7 for malicious trespass; John Kneeland of the same place was charged $5.65 for drunkenness; and Frank Dunleavy for disturbing the peace was asked to pay $9.65, but not having the filthy lucre he was committed.

The Christmas festivities at the State Primary school commenced last evening with a panoramic exhibition by H. M. Hitchcock of Ware. To-day will be devoted to general recreation. On Sunday morning there will be special Christmas services in the chapel, with the following music: "We march to the merry chimes," (processional) Tucker; "While their flocks the shepherds guarded," Main; "Merrily coming we haste away," Smith; "Hail, thou new-born King," Lowry. Sunday evening "The Advent Night," a service of scripture and song, 22 numbers, by Rev. Robert Lowry, will be given by the choir and members of the several schools. Monday morning, Christmas tree, Santa Claus and distribution of gifts for the smaller children; in the afternoon for the larger children. Monday's dinner will consist of roast turkey, vegetables and mince pies. The gifts to be distributed are a large donation from the school of Miss Catherine L. Howard of Springfield, numbering over 600, and including nicely dressed dolls for the girls, and knives and games in variety for the boys; a large contribution from Milton Bradley & Co., Springfield, and cards from Hospital Newspaper society of Boston; also monogram cards, collars, neckties, ribbons, mittens, figs, toy watches, knives, raisins and confectionery provided by the school.

HOLLAND.

The ladies of this town hold their annual festival at the town hall next Wednesday evening, when they will furnish a good supper, in addition to other attractions, besides confectionery, ice cream, etc.

WILBRAHAM.

The farmers' club will discuss "Fertilizers" at J. C. Moody's next Tuesday evening.

The school in district No. 4 has been closed on account of scarlet fever.

The Methodists will have a Christmas tree next Monday night, with the cantata "Catching Kriss Kringle."

THREE RIVERS.

The Palmer mills will not run Monday.

The Union Sunday school elect officers for 1882 next Sunday.

State Inspector Buxton paid a visit to the Palmer mills last Monday, looking after the interests of the women and children employes.

The Union Sunday school will have a Christmas tree and concert on Monday evening, and the Baptists are to have their tree and concert Tuesday evening. Each school has raised quite a sum of money for purchasing presents.

BONDVILLE.

The number of 'coons captured this season by S. Collis is 29, instead of 16, as recently stated.

Silas Collis has bought for $200 a lot of Timothy Fuller, adjoining the highway near the residence of James Fuller, and ploughed it on the 15th inst.—quite an unusual thing for this season of the year.

O. H. Hamilton, a Springfield music teacher, was in this place doing some work a while ago, and "slid out" without paying his board bill, concerning which S. Collis would be glad to interview him.

WARREN.

The Sabbath schools reorganize next Sabbath.

The Methodist fair has had a good attendance during their three evenings, and has been a success financially.

The Congregationalists have a Christmas tree and the children a supper this evening; also a concert Sunday evening.

The library association held their annual meeting Monday evening, and re-elected the officers who have served the past year.

A piano tuner from Springfield received some bruises and a broken rib the other day by missing his step and falling under the cars at this station.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

To-morrow will occur the annual election of officers for the Sunday school.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society met with Mrs. Henry Cutler last Wednesday afternoon and evening, with a large attendance.

On Monday the wood train on the Athol branch ran into a hand car loaded with steel rails, near Collins station, derailing and slightly injuring the engine. The wrecker came out and cleared the track after a delay of three hours.

At a public meeting at Grace chapel Monday evening it was unanimously agreed to have a Christmas tree for the whole village next Monday, and necessary steps were taken to carry out the programme. All are invited to attend and have the family presents distributed from the tree.

THORNDIKE.

The machinery in the new mill is being put up, and a part is already in operation.

The annual series of social entertainments has been commenced at the Congregational church vestry, with a large attendance.

The friends and relatives of Henry Lamberton gave him a birthday surprise a few evenings since. The northern part of the town was well represented.

Preparations are being made at both the Methodist and Congregational churches for Christmas entertainments. At the latter church the entertainment will be held in the vestry this evening. The Methodists hold theirs on Monday evening at Four Corners.

A large number of parishioners and friends of Rev. Mr. Ricketts, outside the village, entertained him at the parsonage last week Wednesday evening, with various tokens of good will. A fine repast was served, and the evening very pleasantly and socially spent. In many respects the party resembled the one which his friends in the village kindly gave him a week previous.

WALES.

There is to be a New Year's ball at Royce's Hall next Friday evening, with music by Webster Bros.' band.

John Ricketts has sold his house to E. C. Sherman, and is building a new one a short distance east of the one sold.

Mrs. A. E. Pettee, of Brattleboro, Vt., has hired the rooms in Shaw's block recently occupied by Dr. Sawtelle, and will open dressmaking rooms about the 1st of January.

There is to be a Christmas tree at the Methodist church this evening, and on Sunday evening there will be an interesting Sunday school concert, the subject being "The Magi and the Messiah."

A couple of our citizens have been trying their skill at wrestling recently. Victory perched on the banners of the younger of the two in the two matches already had, but the elder party thinks he could floor his opponent if he should try once more.

The Methodists have removed the old steps from the front of their church, and are building a portico in their place, with a stairway on each side, which will make a great improvement. They are also finishing off their vestry for use, making a very comfortable room.

The following officers of Anchor Lodge were recently installed by Judge Robinson of Palmer, Acting D. D. G. M.: James A. Johnson, W. M.; Charles Green, S. W.; Willie J. Thompson, J. W.; Willis White, Sec.; A. B. Johnson, Tr.; Loren H. Clark, S. D.; J. M. Wright, J. D.; Carlos Greene, S. S.; Willie White, J. S.; John J. Shaw, Chap.; R. R. Parker, M.; C. M. Thompson, tyler.

MONSON.

How is your cold?

J. L. Bradway bought the Rufus Pease homestead at auction Tuesday for $4000.

"Hazel Kirke" drew a full house Wednesday night, and was highly satisfactory.

Congressman Robinson has presented the library with nine volumes the present week.

Those of our people who cannot be satisfied with the display of Christmas goods at Flynt & Co.'s, Chas. Fowler's and G. L. Keeney's, must be hard to please.

The choice of W. M. Tucker of this place as president of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural society is a wise selection for the society, and a deserved compliment to the man.

Last Sunday evening, at the Methodist church, Miss Chapin, a returned missionary from South America, gave a public address, under the auspices of the Women's Missionary Society.

The Lyon library building nears completion, and will be finished in about two months. The illuminated clock is in position, and a fine curbing has been placed along the entire front of the lot.

E. A. Aldrich, a wide-awake young farmer on "East Hill," last fall built and filled a silo, and is now feeding from it with the best of results. He is quite sanguine as to the advantages of this system, and says it is of more value to New England farmers than anything that has been developed within 25 years.

The next entertainment in the Star Course will be on Dec. 30th, and includes Miss Du Ruisseau of England, reader; Miss Chapin of Springfield, soprano; Henry F. Trask, tenor; Miss Ida Webster, pianist. These artists will present a very popular and artistic entertainment, and will include operatic selections from the "Chimes of Normandy," in costume.

The following officers were elected at the annual meeting of the Congregational church on Monday evening: Clerk, G. W. Andrews; treasurer, E. F. Morris; auditor, C. W. Holmes, Jr.; superintendent of Sunday school, George J. Cummings; deacon for six years, E. F. Morris, re-elected. Seven have been received into the membership of the church during the year, and there have been the same number of deaths. The contributions of the church amount to $2100.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Hampden council, American Legion of Honor, elects its new officers next Monday night.

Father Charland curate at St. Aloysius church, is soon to return to his old charge at Three Rivers, Canada.

There will be a Christmas tree at St. Matthew's church Sunday evening. The parish will hold a fair in January.

A man endeavored to ride a frisky horse last Sunday, but it kicked and threw him overboard, injuring him somewhat. He was lucky, however, to escape with a few bruises, and considerably soiled.

One of our young men went to see his best girl, who lives just out of the village, the other night, and as the two sat on the sofa a piece of plastering fell and hit him just where he parts his hair. He don't like to hear court plaster mentioned now.

The young ladies of Dr. S. F. Smith's class gave a pound party and entertainment in Wight's Hall last week Friday night, consisting of music, tableaux and a drama, and best of all a supper. Not the least pleasant part was the singing by the "Softly Sighing Sweetly Singing Coquette Quartette." About $25 was realized from the entertainment. This sum, with $21 contributed by Mrs. H. K. Wight's class of girls, and the sums to be given by other classes, will be expended on an entertainment for the school New Year's eve. The entertainment will consist of a Christmas tree and New Year's supper, with appropriate exercises.

The evangelical Sunday school has changed the time of reorganizing from May to December, and accordingly reorganized last Sunday. Dr. S. F. Smith, for seven years superintendent, declined to serve longer. The doctor has been a faithful officer, teaching a class of young ladies the while, and the school deeply regrets his loss. George W. M. Miller was elected, but declined to serve, and Dwight Clark was then chosen, but has the matter of acceptance under consideration, and will announce his decision Sunday. A committee was then chosen to appoint the other officers and report next Sunday. The librarian's report showed thirty-four new books added since May 1st, and an average distribution of sixty per Sunday. The treasurer's report showed all bills paid, with a round sum in the treasury, and the papers and lesson books for 1882 purchased.

BRIMFIELD.

Last Sunday Rev. S. E. Lane of South Framingham supplied at the Congregational church, Rev. Mr. Pierce preaching at the town hall as usual.

Although no notice has been given, it is understood that Christmas will be observed at the Congregational church and at the town hall on Monday evening.

Prof. Porter, whose advance agent advertised an entertainment at the town hall for Thursday evening, the 15th, in sleight-of-hand, ventriloquism, etc., having only about 30 persons present, did not perform.

Owing to the calls for Christmas and New Year's festivities, or other causes, the lecture of E. H. Rice, Ph. D., was not as well patronized as it deserved. Those who attended were well paid for their time and expense.

As the secretary of state has given notice that there is no statute provision for the observance of Christmas when it comes on Sunday, the committee of the high school have named next Monday for its observance, and school will be suspended for that day.

Capt. F. D. Lincoln, president of the trustees of the Hitchcock Free High School, entertained the teachers and senior class of the school at his house last Saturday evening, and on Monday evening the teachers were entertained at the residence of D. L. Griggs. Verily, our teachers are anticipating Christmas and the New Year.

On Friday of last week, G. A. Walton, agent of the Board of Education, visited the schools in town, and in the evening gave an address at the high school hall on educational subjects. On Saturday he met the teachers of the high and town schools and gave teaching exercises in numbers, language and other branches. As heretofore when here, the exercises were of interest, and calculated to inspire increased interest in the cause of education.

On Tuesday evening a mock court took the place of the usual exercises of the Hitchcock school lyceum, the court being organized with C. H. Cooper as justice, Ernest Bent clerk, A. A. Upham crier, A. M. Coolbroth sheriff, E. P. Lincoln and G. D. Gleason deputies. The commonwealth vs. G. N. Tucker, for larceny of three turkeys, November 22d, E. P. Brown complainant, was the first case called, C. J. Sugrue and G. S. Clarke for the government, and F. A. Charles and M. H. Davis for the defense. A large number of witnesses were examined, and although the evidence was mainly circumstantial and contradictory, after the full and elaborate arguments of the counsel the jury had no difficulty in bringing in a verdict of guilty. The court, after calling attention to the enormity of the offense in depriving three families of their usual annual Thanksgiving, sentenced the prisoner to two years' confinement in the bel fry of the court house. As notice of exceptions was given, a stay of sentence was entered until the full court passes upon the case. The "gate fees" at five cents each amounted to $3.80. All who attended expressed themselves as well pleased, and District Attorney C. J. Sugrue was highly complimented for his ingenious and forcible presentation of the case.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Mrs. McGuire, top of Ware, retired early Wednesday night, and has not been seen since.

James Cregan fell from a staging in the Otis Company's shops the other day, and was quite severely injured.

The Unitarian society met on Wednesday evening, but postponed any action in reference to securing permanent preaching.

Zenas Marsh a few days since had three chickens hatched out of a dozen eggs he had placed in a closet so near the furnace pipe as to receive warmth therefrom.

Patsey Fahee, who accidently took rat poison recently, seems to be insane, and was taken to the Northampton asylum on Tuesday, but was returned to be given further treatment here before being taken there to remain.

The reference room at the library has the past week had placed in it one of Kendall's Lunar-tellurians, with a 12-inch globe. It is said that it will answer 36 puzzling astronomical questions, and explain the phenomena of the eclipses, etc.

Miss Louisa Demond left a lamp burning while she went out on Monday evening, and during her absence, it in some way exploded. But little damage, however, was done, as the neighbors entered and put out the fire, only the furniture, etc., being injured.

An attempt was made by burglars to enter the house of Elbridge Dunbar, on South street, on Friday night of last week. They had nearly succeeded in effecting an entrance, when they were heard by the occupants of the house, and made their escape.

Crusade lodge of Good Templars celebrated their first anniversary on Monday evening. About 100 were present, the exercises consisting of readings, speaking and singing by members of the club, after which a social time was enjoyed. There are now 89 members, and it is one of the most flourishing lodges in this vicinity.

The Massachusetts Central commenced Monday running four trains each way daily between Boston and Jefferson, which is 48 miles from Boston, and only 27 miles from Ware. There is activity all along the line, quite a gang being at work just below the village. Samuel Morse has sold the portion of his farm west of the Ware River railroad to the Central.

Seven tramps were lodged in the lock-up one night the past week. They are getting so thick as to become a nuisance. One of them admitted that he was offered $1.75 per day to go to work, but would not accept. The law in reference to tramps has been printed and posted about town, and it is thought a few arrests would cause the fraternity to steer clear of this town.

The first passenger train from Boston to Holden on the Mass. Central Railroad ran through on Monday.

The United States Supreme Court decides that the failure to pay a life insurance premium promptly when due forfeits the whole policy.

A "green Christmas" is threatened not alone in this country. In some parts of England the season is unusually open, primroses are in bloom, violets perfume the dells, and the song-birds have not lost their summer notes, while on the commons the heather is purple, and the furze resplendent with golden bloom.

The rigid enforcement of the liquor law at St. Albans, Vt., has virtually closed the town to outsiders, for the hotels have closed, and the livery stable men refuse to accommodate teams coming in from the country. Great excitement prevails in the community, but the citizens' committee is determined not to back down.

The action of the Illinois railroad commissioners in requiring railroads to charge large patrons the same price per car as small ones, is arousing the business men of the State, who protest against the decision and say if carried out it will drive twenty millions of business from the State.

The fate of the steamer Bath City, long overdue at New York, has been settled. She sunk off Newfoundland, Dec. 3. The crew took to their boats, one of which was capsized, and four men drowned, while six died afterwards from exposure. The survivors were picked up and taken to Liverpool.

The examination of David D. McMillen for the murder of Father McCarthy at Greenfield on the night of the 3d inst., was held in the jail at that place last week Friday, and resulted in his being recommitted to await the action of the grand jury in March.

Fay, the shoe dealer, Springfield, offers gum rubber boots at $2.50, and ladies' side-lace boots in French and American kid; straight and pebble goat, the best fitting boot made. The ladies should see these boots.

One of the largest and most astonishing mark-down sales has been made by the Opera House Clothing Company that was ever known in the history of the clothing trade, and no one should fail to visit their sale. The stock must be sold and price has been made accordingly.

Don't spend your money for useless presents, but buy something substantial, such as a fine parlor suite, a desk, a library table, a sideboard, or an elegant black walnut chamber set, at Metcalf & Luther's, Springfield. They keep a complete stock of housekeeping goods, and you will be sure to find a present that will be serviceable.

"I have used several bottles of Simmons Liver Regulator, and you may record the fact that my feelings are so far changed that I can eat hearty, and am more like a well man than I have been for years past. I have suffered four years and am grateful for relief. J. RAFFERTY, Periodical Store, 1806 Market St., Philadelphia."

C. N. Stimpson, of Springfield, has the largest assortment of first-class pianos of any one dealer in this part of the country. It is rare that one agent has the exclusive agency of Steinway & Sons, Wm. Knabe, A. Weber, and Hazelton Bros. Pianos, but Mr. Stimpson has them all, and also a great variety of medium and cheaper pianos. He is thus able to give parties a better chance to compare the merits of the different instruments. He has also a large wholesale trade, and is supplying agencies elsewhere, especially in the West. The Smith American organ, perhaps the leading organ of the country, is sold by him. During the holidays many will no doubt visit his warerooms, which just now are unusually well stocked and afford special bargains.

All the boys in town will be eager to get the BOSTON DAILY GLOBE one week from next Monday (on January 2) and get the new story by "Oliver Optic," which will be begun in that issue. Oliver Optic's new story is entitled "Beau Gray; or, Getting his Living," and will be published only in the GLOBE. The manager of the GLOBE has secured Oliver Optic to write this story exclusively for that paper, and it will give this splendid feature from week to week, and other popular stories from the same writer. This is in addition to all the news of the day. The GLOBE is only 2 cents a copy, of all newsdealers, or 50 cents a month, or $6 a year by mail. The GLOBE spent hundreds of dollars on its Garfield Memorial number and spares no expense to make a good paper. Address Globe Newspaper Company, Boston.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitalizer is a positive cure. For sale by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE has been proved to be a positive antidote for Catarrh at any stage. Catarrh being a constitutional infection as well as a local inflammation, the elements of the Cure are absorbed by the purulent mucous. It is unquestionably the most important medical discovery since vaccination. Supplied by all druggists, or DELIVERED by D. B. DEWEY & CO., 46 DEY ST., NEW YORK, at $1 a package. Pamphlets, with full explanations and overwhelming proofs, mailed free.

The only place in Springfield where those life-size solar photographs are taken is at Hardy's studio, 310 Main street.

For the holidays, A. G. Taylor, opposite the post office, Springfield, offers Diamonds, Watches, Bracelets, Gold Chains, French Clocks, Solid Silver and Plated Table Ware, and novelties in fine Gold Jewelry.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 1y19

A NASAL INJECTOR free with each bottle of Shiloh's Catarrh Remedy. Price 50 cents. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. In ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it, Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston. wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Phiadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

WOOD AND LUMBERMEN ATTENTION!

This is to call attention to a valuable Wood and Timber Lot soon to be thrown into market.

Said lot belongs to the estate of the late John Ward, situated in Palmer, Mass., and contains 100 acres (more or less). Every square rod of this tract is accessible to horse teams, slopes toward the shipping points on the B. & A. R. R., one-half mile north of Blanchardville lower crossing, one-third of a mile northeast from Tenneyville crossing, and one mile east from Palmer Depot, a shipping point in six directions.

The present growth (which is mostly of handsome chestnuts) has been growing from 30 to 40 years, and portions are now ready for cutting.

Taking into consideration the size and situation of the lot, its accessibility and nearness to market, with the present and prospective demand and high prices for telegraph and telephone poles, railroad ties, lumber and wood, this is undoubtedly the most desirable tract of woodland to be found within many miles.

The time and conditions of sale will be made public in a few days. Till then all interested are referred to HIRAM CONVERSE, near the premises, or to C. H. PLUMLEY, Palmer Depot, and are invited to examine the lot and surroundings, or to correspond with

EDWIN B. LYON, New Britain, Ct.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPSHIRE ss. PROBATE COURT. To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of John S. Green, late of Belchertown, in said county, deceased,

Greeting:

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said court, for probate, by Arminda Green, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to her, the executrix therein named,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Amherst, in said county of Hampshire on the 10th day of January next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said Arminda Green is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said court.

Witness, WILLIAM G. BASSETT, Esquire, Judge of said Court this 6th day of Dec., in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

The Night After Christmas.

'Twas the night after Christmas, and all through the house
Not a creature was sleeping, excepting the mouse;
The stockings were flung in haste o'er the chair,
For hopes of St. Nicholas no longer were there.
The children were restlessly tossing in bed,
For the pie and the candy were heavy as lead,
While mamma in her kerchief, and I in my gown,
Had just made up our minds that we would not lie down,
When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from my chair to see what was the matter;
Away to the window I went with a dash,
Flung open the shutter, and threw up the sash.
The moon, on the breast of the new-fallen snow,
Gave a lustre of noon-day to objects below,
When what to my long-anxious eyes should appear,
But a horse and a sleigh, both old-fashioned and queer;
With a little old driver, so solemn and slow,
I knew at a glance it must be Doctor Brough.
I drew in my head, and was turning around,
When up-stairs came the doctor, with scarcely a sound.
He wore a thick overcoat, made long ago,
And the beard on his chin was white with the snow;
He spoke a few words, and went straight to his work.
He felt all the pulses—then turned with a jerk,
And laying his finger aside of his nose,
With a nod of his head, to the chimney he goes—
"A spoonful of oil ma'am, if you have it handy,
No nuts and raisins; no pies and no candy;
These tender young stomachs cannot well digest
All the sweets that they get; toys and books are the best.
But I know my advice will not find many friends,
For the custom of Christmas the other way tends.
The father and mother, and Santa Claus, too,
Are exceedingly blind. Well, a good night to you."
And I heard him exclaim, as he drove out of sight,
"These feastings and candies make doctor's bills right."

A BUSY PUBLISHING HOUSE.

We make the following extract from "Hampshire's" letter in one of our exchanges:

One of the busiest book-making hives in Boston is that of D. Lothrop & Co., at the corner of Franklin and Hawley streets. If there ever were any drones about they have been killed off long ago, to make room for workers. One can imagine that the boy who discovered that one of the definitions of work is to ferment, and illustrated his mastery of the new acquisition by saying "I love to ferment in the garden," was familiar with Lothrop's business. There, if anywhere, work does mean to ferment. And the result of the fermentation is remarkable in both quantity and quality.

Lothrop publishes about a hundred new books a year, and about a million volumes. This does not include the issues of his magazines in their monthly numbers, but does include them when bound in volumes. Any one who knows or can guess what the selecting, printing, binding (not to say the naming) of one hundred new books a year, imply of work and executive ability, will readily believe that Lothrop's is a very busy place. One is sometimes tempted to believe that Lothrop keeps a magician who has but to wave his hand and from a host of books stories come forth and find their mates and group themselves in series and libraries, with bewilderingly pretty covers, and ask the world to buy them—and the world does buy them. The Wide Awake, Babyland, Little Folks' Reader and Pansy are his quartet; the Wide Awake, for boys and girls from eight to eighteen, (no, from four to eighty would be accurate); Babyland, for wee folk just large enough to look with great eyes of wonder at pictures, while mamma or nurse reads the simple story; the Little Folks' Reader, for older little people, for primary school children, who find great enjoyment in reading its excellent original stories and studying its equally excellent original pictures; and Pansy, designed for Sunday-school reading. The first three are edited by Ella Farman, and are exceedingly creditable to her good judgment, taste, ingenuity and care for the moral tone of the boys and girls who are so fortunate as to read her magazines.

You have not room for any adequate description and full enumeration of the long list of books Lothrop has prepared for the fall campaign, most of which are already in the field. Your readers will easily and inevitably find them before Christmas. Some of them are so "taking" that they clamor to be mentioned. For instance, "King Grimalkun and Pussyanita; or, the Cats' Arabian Nights," a delightful, grotesque, and healthfully amusing book of stories, by Mrs. Diaz, and pictures of cats and kittens in the most irresistibly funny combinations and performances; the "Wide Awake Pleasure Book, L," includes the volume of the magazine for the first half of 1881, a treasury of good things, with a prize cover which will set young eyes dancing with delight; "A Family Flight through France, Germany, Switzerland and Norway," told by Rev. Edward E. Hale and his sister, Miss Susan B. Hale, and illustrated with many pictures; the volumes of "The Little Folks' Reader," and "Babyland," which are so thoroughly good, interesting and attractive, outside and inside, that they are no less a source of entertainment to parents than to children; the "Autograph Birthday Book," the "Little Folks' Every Day Book,"—a sort of Kate Greenaway volume, with colored pictures, with a little picture and a verse for every day in the year; and a vast array besides.

Two special holiday books prepared by Lothrop are: "The Old Oaken Bucket," with its picturesque suggestions embodied in graceful and artistic pictures by Miss L. B. Humphrey; and "The Kingdom of Home," a book of domestic poems, selected by Arthur Gilman, and quite lavishly illustrated. All this is but a mere hint of what Lothrop is doing.

The druggist who hesitates now is lost for the winter. He should sling together some sweet oil and liquorice and bring out his cough cure at once. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup does not pay him enough profit.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into their graves when, by using Parker's Ginger Tonic, they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength surely coming back to them. See other column. d

TO GRATIFY HIS WIFE.

AN INTERESTING STORY—A HOPELESS CASE CURED—A GOOD REASON FOR HAPPINESS.

Statement of Mr. Washington Monroe, of Catskill, Green County, New York.

"For many years I had suffered from a complaint which the physicians called Gravel. I had employed some of the most noted doctors without obtaining any permanent relief, and for a long time my case was regarded as hopeless. All who knew the circumstances said I must die. Finally, my wife induced me to try a bottle of Dr. Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy,' which she had somewhere heard of or seen advertised. Without the slightest faith in it, but solely to gratify her, I bought a bottle of a druggist in our village. I used that and two or three bottles more, and—to make a long story short—I am now as healthy a man as there is in the country.

"Since then I have recommended 'Favorite Remedy' to others whom I knew to have suffered from Kidney and Liver Complaints; and I assure the public that the 'Favorite Remedy' has done its work with a similar completeness in every single instance, and I trust some other sick and discouraged mortal may hear of it and try the 'Favorite Remedy' as I did." 4w39

SMITH & MURRAY,

THE SUN.

NEW YORK, 1882.

THE SUN for 1882 will make its fifteenth annual revolution under the present management, shining, as always, for all, big and little, mean and gracious, contented and unhappy, Republican and Democratic, depraved and virtuous, intelligent and obuse. The SUN'S light is for mankind and womankind of every sort; but it's genial warmth is for the good, while it pours hot discomfort on the blistering backs of the persistently wicked.

The SUN of 1883 was a newspaper of a new kind. It discarded many of the forms, and a multitude of superfluous words and phrases of ancient journalism. It undertook to report in a fresh, succinct, unconventional way all the news of the world, omitting no event of human interest, and commenting upon affairs with the fearlessness of absolute independence. The success of this experiment was the success of the SUN. It effected a permanent change in the style of American newspapers. Every important journal established in this country in the dozen years past has been modeled after the SUN. Every important journal already existing has been modified and bettered by the force of the SUN'S example.

The SUN of 1882 will be the same outspoken, truth-telling, and interesting newspaper.

We shall print all the news, putting it into readable shape, and measuring its importance, not by the traditional yardstick, but by its real interest to the people. Whenever anything happens worth reporting we get the particulars, whether it happens in Brooklyn or Bokhara.

In politics we have decided opinions; and are accustomed to express them in language that can be understood. We say what we think about men and events. That habit is the only secret of the SUN'S political course.

The WEEKLY SUN gathers into eight pages the best matter of the seven daily issues. An agricultural department of unequaled merit, full market reports, and a liberal proportion of literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence complete the WEEKLY SUN, and make it the best newspaper for the farmer's household that was ever printed.

Who does not know and read and like the SUNDAY SUN, each number of which is a Golconda of interesting literature, with the best poetry of the day, prose every line worth reading, news, humor—matter enough to fill a good sized book, and infinitely more varied and entertaining than any book, big or little?

If our idea of what a newspaper should be pleases you, send for the SUN.

Our terms are as follows: For the daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post-paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cts. per month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of the SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 per year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

POSITIVELY CURED BY

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.

Because the manufacturers haue received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the husband, next of kin, creditors, and all other persons interested in the estate of Juliette A. Gardner, late of Brimfield, in said County, deceased, intestate:

Whereas, application has been made to said court to grant a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased, to George F. Chamberlain of said Brimfield, you are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of January next, at 9 o'clock before noon, that the husband and next of kin may take or renounce administration of said estate, and that you may show cause, if any you have, against granting said petition.

And the applicant is hereby directed to give public notice thereof by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said court, also to deliver a copy hereof to each the said husband and next of kin who may reside within the County, and to mail a like copy to such of them as do not reside therein, fourteen days, at least, before such court.

Two Visions.

Where close the curving mountains drew
To clasp the stream in their embrace,
With every outline, curve, and hue
Reflected in its placid face,

The plowman stopped his team to watch
The train, as swift it thundered by;
Some distant glimpse of life to catch,
He strains his eager, wistful eye.

The morning freshness lies on him,
Just wakened from his balmy dreams;
The travelers, begrimed and dim,
Think longingly of mountain streams.

Oh, for the joyous mountain air,
The fresh, delightful Autumn day
Among the hills! The plowman there
Must have perpetual holiday!

And he, as all day long he guides
His steady plow, with patient hand,
Thinks of the flying train that glides
Into some new, enchanted land,

Where, day by day, no plodding round
Wearies the frame and dulls the mind—
Where life thrills sweet to sight and sound,
With plows and furrows left behind.

Even so, to each, the untrod ways
Of life are touched by fancy's glow,
That ever sheds its brightest rays
Upon the path we do not know!

KELPIE.

She stood in the stormy twilight, the swollen waters running swiftly beneath her bare feet; her dusk-eyes fixed intently upon some object lower down the stream; a stray lamb closely clasped in her arms.

They called her Kelpie; nothing else, for the slim, lithe-limbed, lustrous-eyed maiden had no claim to any other name.

One mid-winter night, when the snow lay white and heavy on the surrounding hills, and a bitter blast whistled through the valley in which Maplethorp nestled, the Widow Buckstone, sitting comfortably in her chimney corner, was startled by a sharp rap at the door.

"Why, who can it be on such a night?" cried the widow, pushing her spectacles up on her forehead. "Run to the door, Tom!"

Tom obeyed.

"Who's there?" he demanded.

Only the hoarse roar of the wintry blast answered him.

"There's some one lurking about," said Tom. "I'll see what they're after."

But he stumbled over something at his feet. A basket, covered with a colored blanket.

"What's this?" he cried.

The colored blanket was removed, and underneath, all folded in flannel, they found a little mite of a baby.

Tom's mother held up two deprecating hands.

"It's a shame," she cried, "and I a lone widow. I won't keep it; I won't; it shall go the poorhouse in the morning; now there."

Tom was silent.

But when the morrow came, and the news got abroad, and all Maplethorp came flocking in to have a look at the little foundling, Tom got behind his mother's chair and pinched her arm.

"Mother," he whispered, when she turned round, "don't send the midget away; I shall be a big fellow soon, and I'll work for you both."

His mother nodded and smiled, but tears rose to her eyes. And when Mr. Thorndyke, the minister, came with the rest, and offered to make some provision for the child, she answered with curt decision:

"I intend to keep it myself."

So the little waif remained at the small cottage, in the sunny pine woods, beyond the village of Maplethorp; and when spring came on, in beauty, Mrs. Buckstone carried her little charge to the village church, and the baby was christened, the minister's wife standing godmother. Only Rose! And the sweet name suited her well; for the bloom on her dusky cheeks, and the dewy carnation of her young lips, were as bright as the heart of that queenly flower.

Rose was her name, but as she grew into a slim slip of a girl, everybody called her Kelpie. Because she was such a wild, bright, defiant thing, perhaps, and had such a fondness for the water.

While other girls of her age were playing at baby house, Rose might be found on the shore of Cedar creek; launching her miniature boats amid the shallows, wading in the cool water with bare, brown feet as exquisite in form as a sculptor's model, or swinging in the fork of an overhanging willow, watching the wild ducks as they sailed down the stream.

"She's an out-an'-out Kelpie," said old Hawks, the Maplethorp miller, and from that hour the name clung to her.

Tom made good his promise, and worked hard and willingly for his mother and her adopted child; but there came a time when the little slumbering town was too small for Tom. His growing capacities called for some wider field of action. Where there is a will, a way is generally opened. A fine opportunity came up, and Tom availed himself of it at once. But it required a severe wrench to tear himself away from Maplethorp, and the little cottage under the shelter of the pine woods.

"Kelpie, I'm going," he said, when he had parted with his mother.

The girl was driving her lambs into their fold, but turned round and faced him.

"I'm going," repeated Tom, standing up straight and handsome, a wistful expression in his resolute gray eyes, "but I shall come back, Kelpie."

Kelpie stood like a statue.

"Shall I find you here at the old cottage?" he went on. "Will you wait, Kelpie, and have a welcome for me?"

A slight quiver stirred her red lips, but she looked at him with shy, almost defiant eyes.

"I cannot promise," was all she said.

A shadow of pain crossed the young man's eager face. He made a step forward and caught her two hands.

"You are cruel," he cried. "You know how I love you——"

"Stop," she commanded, freeing herself of his grasp; "I will not hear another word. You have been kind and good to me all my life, and I am not ungrateful; let that suffice. Go your way and leave me to mine."

Tom drew a deep breath; his eyes flashed.

"You prefer some one else," he said, bitterly. "If it were young Doctor Talcott asking you for your promise, you would answer him quite differently, I'll warrant."

"If you think so, well and good," she made answer, and turning from him, followed her lambs to pasture.

Years came and went. Kelpie grew up to womanhood, straight as a dart, and graceful as a young willow.

There was not a man in Maplethorp who would not have risked life and limb for a smile from her shy, red lips, or a glance of favor from her luminous, dark eyes. But she kept them all at a distance, even young Talcott.

There came, as time sped on, a spring afternoon, wild with storm and rain. The valley was deluged, and the mad winds tossed and bent the pines, and tore off the branches of the maples.

"I must see that the lambs are folded," said Kelpie, as the twilight drew near.

"You'd better stay in doors, and let the creatures shift for themselves," said the widow, from the chimney corner.

But Kelpie had a will of her own, and went out into the storm. A little later she looked in.

"The house lamb is missing," she said; "I'm going to find it."

"Nay, nay!" cried the widow, "you must not think of it. Ten to one it has strayed beyond the creek. Let it alone."

"The water is rising rapidly, and it may perish. It is a poor, little stray lamb, too," said the girl, her eyes softening. "I raised it myself; I cannot leave it to die."

Maplethorp was fast closed against the storm, not a creature to be seen in the streets. Beyond, in the ravine, through which the creek ran, the gale had been fearful. Trees were uprooted, and broken boughs tossed about, and the swollen stream dashed over the rocks at a mad rate.

Kelpie went resolutely on, calling her lost lamb in a clear, high voice, that rang even above the clamor of the storm. And at last, away up amid the laurel cliffs, a plaintive cry answered her; and at the foot of an old pine she found her lamb.

She caught it up with a hushed cry of delight, and turned her face homeward. Twilight was falling, and the rising waters were all about her feet. She went on carefully, picking her way, leaping lightly from rock to rock, the wind tossing her unbound hair.

A sound of tramping hoofs, and directly a man's voice in imperative command reached her from below. Standing on the slippery rocks, the swift-flowing waters beneath her, one hand resting upon a rough bowlder, the other grasping her lamb, she peered down the surging stream.

There was a horseman at the lower ford making vain efforts to cross.

The horse reared and backed, evidently frightened at the swollen stream. But his rider urged him on with whip and spur, and at last he went in with a wild leap. Plunging furiously, he gained the opposite shore, but with such a frantic bound that his rider was thrown from the saddle. The horse galloped off in the direction of Maplethorp, but his master lay motionless.

Kelpie looked on breathlessly, uttered a low cry, and still clasping her lamb, darted over the rocks and down the shore of the creek. Before she reached him, or looked into his death-like face, some subtle voice within told her it was Tom.

There he lay, his right arm doubled under him, the sharp edge of a rock piercing his temple.

Kelpie raised his head to her bosom and held it there for an instant, as a fond mother might hold her babe; then, with an unspoken prayer on her ashen lips, she caught up her lamb, and darted off through the falling darkness with the speed of a swallow.

Help came in a very short time, and the injured man was placed on a litter and borne across the valley to his mother's cottage.

"He is not dead?" said Kelpie, confronting Doctor Talcott, when the brief examination was over.

The young man looked at the lovely, dusky face, pallid with suspense and agony; and in that moment, he understood why it was that Kelpie had turned a deaf ear to all his ardent wooing.

"No, he is not dead," he answered, his eyes softening with pity. "I will save his life for your sake."

It was after midnight when Tom recovered consciousness.

"Where is Kelpie?" were his first words.

"You musn't talk," said the mother. But he silenced her with a gesture.

"Call Kelpie!"

And the girl came. He took her hand in his left one; his right lay bandaged and disabled by his side.

"I was coming to bring you good news," he said, and a slight quiver stirred his firm lips; "that's what brought me Kelpie. I have found your friends. You are no longer a waif. The man who put you at my mother's door is dead. I saw him die, and heard his confession. You stood between him and a great fortune, and he wanted you out of the way. He is dead, and the fortune is yours, and your mother will be in Maplethorp to-morrow to claim you."

The dark, southern face grew fairly dazzling in its exceeding joy.

"Oh! thank God! thank God!" she said. A shadow of intense pain filled Tom's eyes.

"How glad you are!" he said.

"Yes, I'm glad, very glad, Tom."

"Then I'll try to be glad for your sake," he answered hoarsely, and turned his face away.

Silence fell. The clock ticked on the mantel, and the cat purred before the hearth. Kelpie stood irresolute, great tears standing in her eyes. At last she stole to the bedside, and her slender, brown hand, which had never touched Tom's only with the shy, coy touch of a bird, fell softly upon his bandaged head.

He opened his eyes with a great start.

"Kelpie!"

"Yes, Tom!"

Again there was silence.

"Tom," the girl began, at last, her starry eyes downcast, her red lips quivering, "Tom, you remember that morning we parted, out yonder by the sheep-fold!"

"Yes, I remember."

"You asked me for a promise then—"

"And you refused it wisely enough."

"Tom," and the soft, fluttering hand touched his forehead again, "if you have not changed your mind, ask me again, ask me now!"

All bruised and bandaged as he was, the young fellow struggled up.

"Why, Kelpie, you don't mean—"

"Ask me, and you shall see, Tom."

Something in her downcast face gave him courage. He caught the fluttering hand and held it fast.

"Ask you now, Rose? Oh, you know how I love you. I have loved you my whole life long. I shall love you to my dying day. But, Rose—"

"Do you want my promise, Tom?"

"Want it! I would die for it, Kelpie!"

She extended her other hand, and looked up at him, all her woman's heart in her shy eyes.

"Then it is yours, Tom. When you asked me before, I was nameless. I couldn't bear to think I might bring shame some day—but, thank God, that is past—and I am—"

"You are what you always have been to me, Rose, the sweetest, purest creature God ever made; but you forget, child, your mother comes to-morrow, and you are an heiress—"

"I forget nothing, Tom; if I were the queen on her throne, I should say the same thing. I am yours if you really want me."

MUTILATED COIN AND CURRENCY.

"I can't take that nickel," said a horse car conductor to a man who got in at the City Hall.

"Vat vos de matter mit dot goin?" asked the passenger blandly.

"It's no good. It's got a hole in it," replied the conductor gruffly.

"Is dot so? Off you please you show me dot holes."

"Look at it. We can't take any such money as that."

"Oxcuse me," smiled the passenger, and he handed over a dime.

"That's worse yet," growled the conductor.

"Vas dat dime full of holes too?" asked the passenger, looking up innocently.

"Here's a whole side chipped out. We ain't allowed to take mutilated money," and the conductor handed it back.

"So?" inquired the passenger, "haf you got changes for heluf a dollar?" and he passed over another coin.

"What's this?" asked the conductor, contemptuously.

"It's as bald as a deacon. There ain't a scratch on it to show whether it is an overcoat button or a skating rink. Haven't you got any money?"

"Vell I should make smiles!" said the passenger, good humoredly. "Here is a tollar, and you can baste it together when you got some leisures. Haf you got changes off dot fife dollars?" and he handed over a bill torn in four or eight pieces.

"I don't want any more fooling," said the conductor. "If you can't pay your fare, get off."

"Vell, don't make so many droubles. I vill bay you," and he pulled out a Mexican quarter. "Gif me bennies," he suggested.

"Look here, are you going to pay your fare or not?"

"Of gourse. Maybe you vas vating for dat moneys," and he took back his quarter and substituted an English sixpence.

"Now you get off this car!" roared the conductor.

"Vere has dose cars got by!" asked the passenger, rising to obey.

"Fulton Ferry," said the conductor.

"Den I may as well get owit. You dell dem gompanies dot some dimes dey make more money as oder dimes off dey dook vot-effer dey got instead of going mitout nodings, don't it?"

And the smiling passenger, having ridden to the end of the line, crossed the ferry, observing to himself:—

"Dot vas petter off I safe such moneys, und some dimes I go owit to East Nyarick und it don'd gost me no more as nodings at all."—Brooklyn Eagle.

BURNING CORN FOR FUEL.

The frontiersman has a rough-and-ready way of solving such economical problems as his circumstances suggest. It isn't here meant to be said that it is the general custom in Nebraska and Kansas to burn corn, but when corn is superabundant the surplus of the crib, in thousands of homes, finds its way to the kitchen stove and to the heating stove, when the farmer can afford the second luxury. Burn food! Oh, outrage on the gifts of Providence, say the farmers in the East. But is the prairie farmer, who burns his corn in his stove, right? This is an economical question—nothing more and nothing less. There is no religion in an ear of corn that should taboo it from any reasonable use. It is no more sacred than the trunk of a 1000-year oak. Though the plains are emerging from them, there are yet conditions in which to burn corn is one of the best uses to which it can be put. Thirty-eight bushels of corn equals in combustible matter one ton of bituminous coal. Each yield 1700 pounds of such matter. At the stations on the lines of the Burlington & Missouri Railroad company in Nebraska, the farmer will obtain his coal for $7 per ton. Corn costs the grower 12 1-3 cents per bushel, which pays for labor and seed, and interest on investment and taxes. The 1700 pounds of combustible matter in corn will cost the farmer $4.75, and out of this he pays himself wages; the 1700 pounds in coal cost him $7.

A WORD TO GUNNERS.—Don't point your gun at yourself. Don't point your gun at any one else. Don't carry your gun so that its range includes your hunting companions. Don't try to find out whether your gun is loaded or not by shutting one eye and looking down the barrel with the other. Don't use your gun for a walking stick. Don't climb over a fence, and pull your gun through muzzle foremost. Don't throw your gun into a boat so that the trigger will catch in the seat and the charge be deposited in your stomach. Don't use your gun for a sledge hammer. Don't carry your gun with the hammer down. Don't be a fool. Don't you forget it.—Forest and Stream.

Modern innovations are depriving Venice of the romantic charm which has clung to it for many centuries. The song of the gondolier is heard no more. The introduction of small steamers, which make periodical trips along the chief canals, has caused the famous boatmen to retaliate, in an extremely unpoetic sort of way, by striking; and now one has to apply to the custom house or to the military authorities if he wishes to take the historic ride in the approved fashion. The gondoliers number about 700, and this is the first time that they have indulged in the luxury of a strike.

A monster octopus, or devil fish, has been captured near one of the wharves at St. Johns, N. F., where it ran ashore. It is 35 feet in length from its tail to the termination of the long tentacles. This is said to be the first complete and unmutilated specimen of this monstrous fish that has been secured and landed.

A mother advised her daughter to oil her hair, and fainted away when that candid damsel replied: "Oh, no, ma; it spoils the gentlemen's vests."

Of all the lights that you carry in your face, joy is the one that will reach furthest out to sea.—Anon.

The Christmas Tree.

A flash of light, a merry hum,
And peals of rippling laughter sweet,
And pattering of tiny feet,
And, lo, the little children come.

A stately fir tree rears its head,
With stars and tapers all ablaze;
And quivering in the fairy rays,
The glittering, loaded branches spread.

The childish eyes are sparkling bright,
And childish hearts with joys o'erflow,
And on the birthday long ago
They ponder with a grave delight.

Then to their gifts they turn once more,
And in the present sunshine lost,
They fear no future tempest-tost,
But unto fairy regions soar.

No cares, no fears, a happy time
Of laughter; tears that cannot stay;
An April day, a year of May,
Pealed in and out with Christmas chime.

A CHICAGO ROMANCE.

The Tribune tells the following story of love-making in Chicago: "I am very rich, my darling," she said softly, punctuating her sentences with soft, warm kisses. "Already I have $100,000 worth of 4 per cents, registered in my name, and when the leaves are turning red in the golden October days, and the fields are laughing in the rich abundance of a bountiful harvest, I shall cut off the coupons. And when papa dies he will leave me nearly $200,000 more. Yes, my sweetheart, I am a very happy girl," and a fair young girl nestled confidingly on the shoulder of the strong-limbed, hazel-eyed young man to whom this avowal was made. He looked tenderly down at the brown tresses and the invisible net that bound them to the fair forehead. Gently lifting the beautiful face to his, he pressed a passionate kiss on the full, red lips that seemed only made for osculation. Turning his head away, Herbert Ainsleigh appeared for a moment to be wrapped in thought. Then kissing Miriam with a rich, warm, two-for-a-quarter kiss, he said: "Do you love me, Birdie?" She gave answer by placing her white arms around his neck and throwing herself madly on his shirt front. "Do not hug so hard, darling, if you love me, or my collar button will raise a carbuncle on the back of my neck," he said in low, mellow tones. "It is only the deep, passionate longing of my love, Herbert. It racks not of carbuncles. But you are right. Too much pressure on the cervical vertebra will cause anostosis. My professor of anatomy told me that." "And we will be married in the fall, my sweet?" "Yes, Herbert, in the rich, sensuous days of Indian summer, when the low note of the farmer's boy seeking the lost cow is heard as he sits on the vine-embowered stile and blasphemes until the firefly leaves for a cooler spot. You must take all my money, Herbert; it must be yours to do as you will with it; to attain the glorious fame that awaits you; for I know that my love's name will some day be known through the length and breadth of the land. Surely, you have an ambition?" "I have," said Herbert, kissing her while she caught her breath. "And you will not let any false pride stand in the way of using my money to attain the height you fain would reach?" "No, darling, I will not. You say you have $100,000 in 4 per cents. It is enough. To-morrow I will act, and in less than a day my name will be as familiar throughout the world as that of England's proud queen." "Oh, Herbert, what will you do?" "I shall purchase Maud S." * * * Two minutes later a human form fell with a dull thud on the front porch of the haughty pork packer's residence. It was Herbert Ainsleigh. The old man had fired him out.

SHE HAD TRUSTED HIM.

It was Saturday night, and Mr. and Mrs. Smith were shutting up the house preparatory to retiring, when there came a loud ring at the front door bell that startled them both, as it was too late for either business or callers. Who could it be? Mrs. Smith declared that she would not open the door for the world, and begged Mr. Smith to arm himself with the umbrella stand or the hat rack, for it might be masked robbers or something of that sort. At which Mr. Smith pooh-poohed rather faintly and nervously, and marching valiantly to the door threw it wide open and next fell back over Mrs. Smith, who had kept cautiously behind. Then the two reconnoitered the situation. There was no human being in sight, but on the doorstep there was some kind of a mysterious-looking object. Mrs. Smith looked at it a moment, then she burst into tears. "It's a-a-covered basket. Oh! S S-mith, you wretch, how could you? And I-I-I trusted you so!" "Mercy on me, Maria, what are you crying about? Maybe it's an infernal machine, to blow us up," gasped Smith. "Oh, you know well enough, Mr. Smith. Don't add falsehood to your other baseness. Oh, Smith, Smith, how could you deceive me so?" and she wiped away another flood of tears. "I'll throw the thing into the middle of next week," shouted Smith in a fury. "I'll"— "Stop, stop, wretched man!" cried his wife, grasping his coat-tails. "Don't add murder to your other accomplishments; and to think I have tr-tr-trusted you"— "Maria," said Mr. Smith, with the calmness of desperation, "unhand me! I will find out what this means. That's our old market basket," he exclaimed suddenly, and the next moment he had dragged it into the hall. "Why, it's our dinner for to-morrow. I forgot all about it and left it at the butcher's, and he has sent it home, then. I hope you're satisfied." "I never saw such a careless man in my life," said his wife, in a relieved voice. "We might have had to go without our dinner, for all of you." Smith says it was the narrowest escape he ever had.—Detroit Post.

Some men will not shave on Sunday, and yet they spend all the week in shaving their fellow-men; and many folks think it very wicked to black their boots on Sunday morning, yet they do not hesitate to black their neighbor's reputation on week-days.—Beecher.

Stonehenge, in England, has been generally supposed to be a relic of the Druids, but one eminent antiquary gives it as his opinion that it dates still farther back and was a temple of the fire-worshipers, belonging to the Bronze Period of Northern archæologists.

Said Mrs. Smith, who had come to spend the day, to little Edith: "Are you glad to see me again, Edith?" Edith—"Yes, m'm, and mamma's glad, too!" Mrs. Smith—"Is she?" Edith—"Yes, m'm; she said she hoped you'd come to-day, and have it over with."

"America," says an Englishman, "is a country where a man's statement is not worth two cents unless backed up with an offer to bet you ten dollars." Hit us that time.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1881.

Special Notice!

All persons indebted to this office in any way are requested to call and settle before Jan. 1, 1882.

WILLIAM G. RUSSELL declines Gov. Long's tender of the chief-justiceship of the supreme court, to succeed Judge Gray.

THE Massachusetts Legislature will meet next Wednesday, and the old list of officers will in all probability be re-elected in both branches without opposition.

REV. LEONARD BACON, D. D., for 41 years pastor of the Center church at New Haven, and one of the foremost divines in the Congregational church, died of heart disease last Saturday, at the age of 79 years and 10 months.

FOR a man just out of a $50,000 office, and it is supposed with a pretty good nest-egg laid aside, it does look a little queer for him to decline contributing to either the Garfield fund or monument, on account of financial inability, as ex-President Hayes has done.

GUITEAU'S trial is still running on, with no indication of ending, and expert after expert is testifying to a conviction of the prisoner's sanity. Charles H. Reed of Chicago has entered the case as counsel for the defense, and on Wednesday Guiteau was removed from the place he has occupied at the table with his counsel, to the prisoner's dock.

OUR recently revised statutes will hardly be out of the press before the new Legislature will be at work upon them, cutting off, adding to, and making them over with perfect disregard of the perfection they ought to have attained after the labor that has been expended upon them. If, now, the Legislature only held biennial sessions, we might have had one year's enjoyment of the revision pure and simple.

ONE thing demanding attention at the hands of the Legislature this Winter is the amendment of an act passed last year, "to compel a more careful registration of births." This act makes it the duty of every physician to report monthly to the town or city clerk the births at which he has been present, with the date and parents' names. But it does not say anything about the nationality of the parents, nor even require the sex of the child to be given. The reports thus obtained are utterly worthless, and the work has to be all done over again by the town and city clerks. The Legislature should amend this bungling law so that it will be of some practical value.

POSTMASTER GENERAL JAMES told an interviewer the other day that official life is disappointing, and expressed his regret that he had not had time to carry out the reforms he had planned for improving the postal service. The public will feel a deeper regret at the retirement of Mr. James from his position than he can. He is the one man in the country preeminently qualified for the office he has occupied since last March. If he could have been retained during President Arthur's administration, he would have made the postal service of the country a model one. As it is, the people will not expect much improvement under his successor, and will even be glad if the service is not allowed to retrograde.

BRIEF BITS OF NEWS.—Justice Gray is expected to take his seat on the bench of the U. S. Supreme Court next week.——Officious friends keep private detectives near President Arthur when traveling.——Gov. Churchill of Arkansas is charged with an apparent deficit of $164,000 in his accounts as late treasurer of the State.——New York is alarmed by the rapid spread of scarlet fever; 82 deaths last week.——A prosperous German at College Point, L. I., killed himself and wife last Sunday.——Product of the Pennsylvania coal mines this year, 28,500,000 tons; next year probably 30,000,000.——A telegram from China reached Yale college, 19,000 miles, the day after it was sent.——A lively riot among railroad laborers at Cornwall, N. Y., last Saturday night, ended in calling out the militia to make arrests.——A pickpocket in a church at Warsaw, Poland, to escape arrest, last Sunday, cried "fire," causing a panic in which 40 were killed and 60 injured.——A large steamer was seen to sink in the Atlantic on the 20th inst. during a gale, with probably all on board.——The village of Durand, Wis., was wiped out by fire on Sunday.——Telegraph and telephone wires in Boston are to be carried under ground.——A Boston clerk shot his sweetheart and himself dead at Biddeford, Me., on Wednesday.——John H. Murray, the circus manager, died in New York Tuesday.

Rev. John W. Olmstead, D. D., for many years the editor and proprietor of the Watchman, the Boston organ of the Baptist denomination, has again assumed the ownership and direction of that paper. Dr. Olmstead has the journalistic "knack" in a much larger measure than it has been exhibited by those who followed him on the Watchman, and with the promised improvements the paper will be one which should be in every Baptist family. The price, to advance subscribers, is reduced to $2 50.

The New York & New England and the Erie railroads are reported to have concluded a new traffic arrangement by which the Erie is to take its business for Boston and New England points over the New York and New England line, and the latter will give its business for the West to the Erie.

The steamer C. H. Northam, which plies between New Haven and New York, ran on a ledge in East River Tuesday during an impenetrable fog. The passengers were safely taken off, and the boat will probably be saved.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Milligan is closing out his Holiday Slippers at cost, and says that is way below cheap.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Got your diary for '82?

Quite a spell of wet wetness.

Was it the equinoctial, belated?

Pretty good growing weather this week.

The schools will resume again next Monday.

Good resolutions are in active demand just now.

Our readers have had 53 JOURNALS this year.

Wish you A HAPPY NEW YEAR, everybody.

Begins to look as though we might have an ice famine, don't it?

Rev. T. B. Thayer, D. D., will preach at St. Paul's church to-morrow.

Communion services will be held in the various churches to-morrow.

W. R. Milligan has been appointed agent of the Anchor line of steamers.

No more killing of quail, partridges, ruffled grouse or woodcock after to-day, under the game law.

Rubber boots and overcoats are of more service this winter, so far, than ulsters and overshoes.

What fine weather we will have in '82, if the "almanac days" we have been having are any criterion!

Frank L. Eager has gone to New York this week, where he takes a position as violinist in a theater orchestra.

The cross-walk from the Nassowanno House to the depot has received a fresh coating of ashes this week.

The pulpit of the Congregational church will be supplied to-morrow by Rev. John W. Willard of Newtonville.

The clouds finally broke up yesterday, after five days of almost constant rain. Now for a few days of colder weather.

Good advice for everybody, free of charge: Begin the New Year well by attending church to-morrow—and then keep it up right through the year.

Now just listen for the rustling of the "new leaves" everybody is turning over. But don't forget to turn over your own, while listening for the rest.

Dr. Liston, of the Albany Eye and Ear Infirmary, advertises to be at the Weeks House Jan. 12th and 13th, for the treatment of eye, ear, throat and lung diseases.

The trustees of the savings bank will hold a meeting at the banking rooms at 10 o'clock this forenoon, for the purpose of declaring the semi-annual dividend.

Next year will give the clergymen a benefit, as they can have both the first and last word. The year begins and ends on Sunday, and there are 53 of 'em, too.

The baggage and smoking car on Conductor Francis's train, on the Ware River Railroad, is just out from the shops, as bright as a new dollar, in a fresh coat of paint.

Engineer Kenerson came in from Brattleboro Wednesday morning with the connecting rod off from one pair of drivers, the crank pin having broken. No damage was done.

It is reported that some of our physicians do not make any return of births at which they are present, as required by law. The penalty for each neglect is a sum not exceeding $20.

There seems to be a general impression abroad that we are not in any imminent danger of a dry spell, and that wells and springs will not be squeezed dry for some weeks to come.

Those were fortunate housewives whose washing was out early enough to dry Monday forenoon, before the long rain. A good many washings were still in the rinsing water yesterday morning.

A number of friends and neighbors of Mrs. George Keyes made her a surprise visit on the occasion of her birthday, last week Friday, and presented her with a camp chair, some silver ware, and other tokens of their regard.

It is understood that the Boston & Albany Railroad will at once construct several locomotives similar to its new "No. 129," for use upon its express trains, and with a view to making the run between Boston and New York in six hours, as well as shortening up the time to Albany by an hour or so.

The bills for dog damages approved by the county commissioners amount to $781, besides the fees and expenses, $91. Of this sum Palmer takes more than half, the bills from the various towns being as follows: Palmer, $459; Westfield, $132; Wales, $93; Holland, $61; Holyoke, $91; Ludlow, $52; Montgomery, $9; Granville, $17; Holland, $11; Chester, $37; Blandford, $56.

For the past term the following scholars have been perfect in attendance at the intermediate school: Lillian Bostock, Winnie Cross, Nellie Crofton, John Delahanty, Katy Lynch, John McManamy and Mary Thompson. Second intermediate—Mabel Holbrook, Effie Moffatt, Edith Stedman, Edna Stedman, Freddie Braman, Freddie Coleman, James McGuier, Michael McCarthy, Frank Roach.

Poor Vennor! This was his prediction for December: "It looks ugly, and smacks of cold—bitter, biting cold, north and south, east and west. This cold may be somewhat proportionate to the heat of the past summer, and extend to extreme southern and western points. The entry of the month is likely to bring in winter abruptly in most sections where winter is usually expected or experienced."

The new lock-up was used last week for the first time, and is so neat and comfortable that the habitues of the old one will hardly feel at home in the new cells, but will doubtless be quite gratified with the change. The walls of both the new and the old lock-up have been whitened, and the latter has been fitted up with benches for use as a tramp room, and the town has now a better tramp room and lock-up than ever before.

To-day is one of the "last" kind of days. It is the last day of the week, the last day of the month, and the last day of the last month in the year; while if the fabled Mother Shipton's prophecy should prove true it would also be the last day of the world. In view of the possibility of the fulfillment of this prophecy, we venture to suggest to some of our delinquent subscribers the advisability of making themselves square with the printer, if they expect any consideration in the next world.

A report has been current that an attempt was made recently to set fire to the exhibition building of the agricultural society, on the park. One of the shutters was found open, with the lower sash of the window broken in, and a pile of ashes on the floor of the lower hall showed where somebody had burned some paper. It is probable that a tramp broke into the building for a night's lodging, and set fire to what papers he could lay hold of, to light or warm up the room, but there is no evidence of an intention to destroy the building.

The morning modoc train going east last Saturday morning was derailed near Cottage Farm station, by running into a hand car loaded with rails, the engineer failing to see the red flag which had been put out, on account of steam escaping from a locomotive near by. The air brakes were promptly applied, and but little damage was done. Had the engine swerved a foot or two more from the track it took, the results would have been much more serious, as the train passed under a bridge after leaving the rails, and just missed one of the abutments.

Mary Sullivan of Palmer, insane, was sent to the lunatic hospital at Worcester last week Friday by Judge Robinson. On the same day Frederick Hanks of Monson paid $7.05 for larceny of an overcoat from a wagon in front of White, Hellyar & Co.'s store, and in default of $200 bail was committed to await the action of the grand jury in May, for the larceny of goods from the store of the above-named firm. On Monday Edward Dean paid $4.35 and Marble Ferry $4.65 for drunkenness, and the next day Michael Daly paid $5.60 for the same offense, while Patrick Sullivan, Dennis Shea and Thomas Ryan were committed for inability to pay their dollar fines and costs.

CHRISTMAS OBSERVANCES.

As Christmas came on Sunday this year, its observance practically extended over three days, many taking Saturday for the distribution of gifts and good wishes among their friends, while others postponed their observance of the day until Monday. The Christmas trees at the Universalist and Baptist churches Saturday evening were heavily loaded with gifts for the Sunday school children, who were also treated to a free supper, a privilege which was likewise accorded to the adult members of the school at the Baptist church, where the children gave a very pleasant entertainment after the supper, consisting of recitations, dialogues, music, etc. A few families in the village had Christmas trees at their homes, one of the most notable ones being at the residence of Col. H. R. Stoughton, where there were two trees heavily laden with presents and brilliantly lighted with tapers, while around them was a fringe of happy faces, young and old, all awaiting with more or less eagerness the plucking of the fruit.

The Sunday school concerts on Sunday evening at the Congregational and Universalist churches passed off successfully, though the sickness and consequent absence of several children who were expected to take part in the concert at the former church, necessitated its abridgement somewhat.

Monday was a red-letter day for the children at the State Primary School this year. The Christmas observances were carried out according to the programme published last week, the hearts of the little ones being gladdened by appropriate gifts Monday forenoon; and after a turkey dinner the older scholars assembled in the large school rooms, where an immense tree, and numerous lines radiating from it, were hung with dolls, toys, knives, books, and gifts of various descriptions, which were scattered among the children by a masked Santa Claus, and the generous donors would have felt more than repaid, to see the faces beaming with delight, and hear the hundreds of voices joyfully telling of their presents. Some of the prettiest things were reserved for the disabled and invalid children, and at the hospital the few sick ones might have been seen playing with their new possessions. Mrs. Leonard was out from Springfield with Mrs. Dr. Calkins and some other ladies, to witness the distribution of gifts, and they were much pleased with the condition of the institution and of the children. Never before has the institution been so much like an own home for the State's wards as it is at the present time, under the judicious and careful superintendence of Col. Tufts, who is untiring in his work for their welfare.

WEST BRIMFIELD.

Willie Shaw and W. H. Allen captured three foxes one day this week.

BELCHERTOWN.

Mr. Shaw's house, on the road to Enfield, was destroyed by fire early yesterday morning.

THORNDIKE.

The communion service will be observed at the Congregational and Methodist churches to-morrow afternoon.

The entertainment at the Methodist church was very interesting. In spite of the hard traveling the attendance was good. The tableaux showed much pains in preparation, and the duet singing was very fine.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Henry Cutler has purchased the house and lot formerly owned by James W. Bennett.

The Christmas gathering at the Chapel Monday evening was very enjoyable, with a large attendance. The choir of the South church furnished the singing.

At the Sabbath school last Sunday a short constitution was adopted, and under its provisions the annual meeting for election of officers occurred last evening.

HAMPDEN.

An outrageous piece of vandalism was perpetrated in the old cemetery on the hill last Sunday, nearly 50 of the best headstones being overturned, and many of them broken and strewed around. An investigation was held by the selectmen which resulted in the arrest of a young fellow named Hugh McManus. He says he knows nothing about it, and the evidence against him is circumstantial, but he is known to have been drunk and in the vicinity of the cemetery. It is believed that others were implicated with him, and other arrests are likely to follow. The affair has caused a good deal of excitement in the community.

LUDLOW.

A fellowship meeting, comprising the Congregational churches of Palmer, Monson, Wilbraham, Hampden and Ludlow will be held with the latter church next Wednesday, at 11 o'clock a. m. Subject, "How Shall we Fill our Vacant Churches?" opened by Rev. Mr. Root of Hampden. At 12.30 there will be a collation. At 2 p. m. Rev. Mr. Ricketts of Thorndike will open the discussion on "Our Individual Duty to the Prayer Meeting."

The Congregational Sabbath school reorganized last Sabbath with these officers: Supt., Deacon George R. Clark; ass't. superintendent, H. E. Miller; librarians, Eva Severance, Robert Jones, Cyril A. Southworth, Jr.; chorister, B. F. Burr; organist, Mrs. Sarah Fisher. Whole number connected with the school the past year, 131; average attendance, 71. The treasurer's report showed a balance of $18 58 in favor of the school.

WARREN.

The Methodist fair netted about $200.

The Ladies' Temperance Union met with Mrs. Earl Friday afternoon.

The ladies' sociable met with Mrs. William E. Lincoln Wednesday evening.

Rev. Mr. Barrows preached for Rev. Mr. Sanderson last Sabbath morning.

The Warren Musical Association meet next Tuesday evening in the Grand Army hall.

J. H. Chadsey was chosen superintendent of the Congregational Sabbath school last Sunday.

Seven persons are to unite with the Congregational church to-morrow, three by letter and four on profession of faith.

A number of the men employed in the boot shop have left for Brookfield to work in the large shop now being opened there.

Rev. Mr. Forbes was the recipient. Christmas eve, of $40, from friends of the public library, to show their appreciation of his services.

WALES.

John L. Bacon has a dancing school every Wednesday evening in Royce's Hall.

It is reported that Jasper H. Lyon has given the refusal of his farm to Hynes Bros., who will decide this week whether they take it or not.

The Christmas trees at the Baptist vestry Monday night were enjoyed by about 400 people. The trees were loaded, and some valuable presents were distributed, among which was $300 in gold given to the church by F. C. Smith.

The many friends of George O. Henry will be glad to learn that he will continue his business in Wales, instead of going away as he intended. He has a blacksmith shop in full blast in a building attached to Wm. G. Parker's livery stable, and will do shoeing at greatly reduced prices.

The Christmas trees at the Methodist church Saturday evening drew a crowded house. The presents were numerous, and some elegant and costly gifts were distributed. The Christmas exercises at the same place Sunday evening drew a full house, and proved very interesting and pleasant.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. Mr. Ricketts of Wales will preach at the Baptist church to-morrow.

The next lecture in the Y. M. C. A. course will be delivered Friday evening, Jan. 6th, by Prof. T. H. Kimpton of Boston. Subject: "Eyes that See."

John Rivers is soon to build a fine hotel on the lot just east of the post office. Workmen are now at work on the foundation. Three Rivers has no hotel at present, and there is no reason why a good one should not do well here.

The Otis Co. have just put 12 new spinning frames of the Saco Water Power company make into the Palmer mill, and they are all running. The 72 new looms put in a few weeks since will all be making cloth within a few days.

The annual meeting of the Union Sunday school was held last Sunday. The officers for 1882 are: J. I. Milliken, Supt.; J. H. Thayer, Asst. Supt.; Miss Emma Buell, Secy.; Frank H. Upham, Treas.; Henry W. Randall, Librarian. The school numbers at present 109 members. The average attendance during the past year was 65. Largest number present at one time, 92; smallest, 36. It is out of debt and has about $28 in the treasury.

A young man of this village took a young lady from the "hill" to Prof. Marshall's entertainment the other evening, and started to accompany her home, but when half way up the hill they were met by the girl's mother, who informed the young man that she would see the young lady home, and he might as well go back, as the hill was long, and the night was dark, and he might be lonely. He "went back," but his thoughts were not pleasant, and he don't like to talk much about it. He won't go there any more.

WILBRAHAM.

There was an oyster supper at the Congregational church Thursday evening.

The postponed union open society of Athena and Club will be held next Friday evening.

The Young Woman's Missionary Society of the Congregational church met with Miss Carrie Moody last Saturday afternoon.

The students of Wesleyan Academy held a social interview in Fisk Hall, last Friday evening. They were allowed Monday for a holiday.

The Jennings brothers of Jenksville, after being admitted into fellowship with Newton Lodge, F. & A. M., next Wednesday evening, will treat the lodge to an oyster supper at the Allis House.

The Methodist Sabbath school entertainment Monday evening called out a large audience. The cantata "Catching Kriss Kringle," the broom drill, and a dialogue, with the Christmas tree, were the principal features of the evening.

The Farmers' Club met with J. C. Moody Tuesday evening, and discussed fertilizers. Phineas Stedman was present and read an essay. The next meeting will be with E. H Brewer, this being the annual meeting for the choice of officers.

Mrs. Allis, of the Allis House, was presented last Friday evening with a silver cake basket and pair of silver vases by the South church society, in token of their gratitude to her for keeping the church decorated with flowers for the past year.

The body of Mrs. Lamb, wife of Watson F. Lamb, formerly professor in the academy, was brought here for burial yesterday afternoon, from her late residence in New York. Mrs. Lamb was an active member of the Methodist church in this place till her removal to New York two months ago, and was respected and loved by all with whom she came in contact.

MONSON.

The "Picket Pullers" are again organized, and doing work in their line.

Hiram Moulton has sold his newly-built dwelling house on Hampden Avenue to Philip Lambert.

Jesse Pierce, in Barton's Block, has a traveling boot and shoe emporium in connection with his store.

Gage Bros. contemplate putting on an addition to their store, their increased business demanding more room.

Principal Cummings has been elected superintendent of the Congregational Sabbath school for the year ensuing.

Arba Squier and Joel H. Thompson are putting in the foundations for a dwelling house on Hampden Avenue.

Both the straw shops are running full blast, and there is not an idle man in town, who wants to and is able to work.

A. A. Ball has sold the two houses he built last Summer on Hampden Avenue, one to Mrs. W. H. Rogers, and one to B. Donovan.

The dial to the clock in the H. Lyon memorial library building has been put in place, and soon that, like the stores and markets, will begin to go on tick.

Repairs and alterations in the south store in Central Block indicate that it may soon be occupied, and rumor has it that Norcross Brothers will stock it with choice family groceries.

No entertainments the past week. Central Hall none, Green's Hall none, and Andrew Hall not stirred up enough to make any excitement; while no haul of note is reported by the semi-occasional fishermen.

E. F. Willis, the clothier, has been furnishing substantial and useful holiday goods in the shape of everything in gents' wear, and the big bundles going out of his store seem to denote that his prices win many customers.

W. N. Flynt & Co. are presenting their customers with a calendar for 1882, with a picture of their store, and the announcement that the remaining brothers, Rufus, Lyman C. and George C. Flynt, have been taken into the firm.

Theopholus Jedowin has gradually worked up a freight line between Monson and Palmer, and our merchants and manufacturers find it a saving as well as an accommodation to ship via "Jedowin's fast freight line," twice daily.

The stage route between Monson and Palmer is being patronized to a much greater extent than was anticipated by the projector and proprietor, Mr. Noble, and it is now one of the institutions of the town which the public would be at an inconvenience without.

John Clapp of Abington, Ct., writes to friends here that Mr. Baker, the hunter in that locality, has during the past four months killed 15 foxes, 5 'coons, and squirrels by the hundred, besides a large number of rabbits, woodcock and quail. It would seem quite worth the while for our Monson sportsmen to visit that locality and bring a few samples to this vicinity.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Grasshoppers are quite common in the fields about the village, and lively, too.

There is an effort being made to start a Knight Templar commandery in Ware.

The Unitarian society have succeeded in raising $400 of the $500 needed to secure preaching half the time.

The rum shops of Ware were closed on Christmas day by order of the police; so it seems they know where they are.

G. C. Fenn has bought the lot adjoining the Methodist church on Church street, from Henry M. and Julia M. Hitchcock.

It is reported that J. H. Storrs is soon to put up another store next to the one occupied by Bonin & Deslauriers, to be used as a first-class restaurant.

Games of base and foot ball were played on Monday. There has not been a game of foot ball in town before for many years. The result of this was a goal for both sides.

At a Masonic fair at Ipswich, the fine Parisian doll put up to be voted to the daughter of some Master Mason in the State was voted to the little daughter of Prof. Merrill of Ware.

O. W. Roberts, M. D., has received his commission as District Deputy Grand Commander of the American Legion of Honor, and will install the officers of Nenemeseck council next Tuesday evening.

An alarm of fire was given Monday evening, considerably disturbing several Christmas gatherings. It was caused by the burning of the house of James Sheehy, about a mile north of the village. Loss $750, insured for $500. There was nothing saved. The fire probably caught from the chimney, as there was where it was first discovered.

The officers of the East Congregational Sunday school for the ensuing year are: Marvin L. Snow, superintendent; Geo. E. Tucker, 1st assistant; A. W. Bowen, 2d assistant. These with the pastor, Dr. Perkins, Mrs. Ellen M. Bond and Miss Esther Hitchcock, constitute the board of directors, who are to appoint the teachers and librarian.

Nothing has yet been learned concerning the whereabouts of Mrs. Ellen Maguire, who disappeared on Wednesday evening of last week. She retired early, complaining of severe earache, leaving her money with her daughter, with directions to pay bills and collect money due from the boarders. When her daughter entered her room at half-past nine she was missing, and since that time not the slightest trace can be found of her, although much time and money have been spent in the search.

The new chapel of the East Congregational society is so nearly completed that the audience room is to be dedicated to-morrow (Sunday) evening with appropriate religious exercises and sermon by A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., while the parlors, dining rooms, etc., will not be furnished ready for occupancy for some little time to come. The building, which is a model of beauty and convenience, is in what may be called Gothic and English style of architecture, and has been most thoroughly built under the immediate supervision of the building committee, consisting of Messrs. Calvin Hitchcock, J. H. Grenville Gilbert and E. H. Baker. The underpinning or basement walls are a splendid piece of work in broken ashler, pointed with red mortar. The building is of selected brick, from the yard of Wm. B. Lawton, with freestone and black brick trimmings. The audience room proper is entered from the porch, or from a vestibule on the right, and is 40 by 40 feet, but in case it is needed, the parlor, which is 21 by 47 feet, may be thrown into the audience room by raising the ground glass partition which separates them. The audience room has a seating capacity of 275, and is furnished with individual chairs, one half of them folding for convenience in moving and packing away in case of social gatherings. The interior is finished in pine, the natural color of the wood, the audience room being finished into the roof, showing the trusses with panelings between, which are tastefully frescoed. The windows are of cathedral glass in colors to blend and harmonize with the interior finish. In the front gable, directly over the speaker's stand, there is an elegant stained glass window. Under this window is the inscription, "On earth peace, good will toward men." The parlor, which is for social gatherings and for the meetings of the ladies' societies, will be appropriately furnished. On the same floor are the most complete toilet arrangements for both ladies and gentlemen, with running water. In the basement, reached from the outside or by stairway from the parlor, is the dining room, about the same size of the parlor, with ample kitchen and coat room, with boxes numbered for convenience in rapidly packing away large amounts of clothing. There are also convenient china closets and linen drawers. The whole building is warmed by a furnace, for which there is plenty of room, as well as the necessary fuel, as the basement extends under the whole building. The plans and specifications were furnished by E. C. Gardner, architect, of Springfield. The stone work was done by the Messrs. Flynt of Monson; the brick and mason work by Benjamin Manly of Hardwick; the wood work by our own townsman H. P. Cummings; the frescoing by Brazier of Boston. The total cost of lot, building and furnishing will be between $11,000 and $12,000.

Some coal barges were sunk during a gale in Oyster Bay Harbor, Long Island, last week Friday night. One man was drowned and 3000 tons of coal carried to the bottom.

An explosion of kerosene on board a steamer at West Point, Va., on Monday, destroyed the vessel and killed 19 persons. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

Editor Williams of the Amherst Record sends out a handsome almanac for 1882 with his paper this week.

There was a $2,000,000 fire in a warehouse on South street, New York, last Saturday night.

Clergymen, bankers, book-keepers, editors, and others that lead sedentary lives, will find much relief from the frequent headaches, nervousness and constipation engendered from want of exercise, by taking Simmons Liver Regulator. It is a harmless vegetable compound; it can do no injury; and numbers who have tried it will confidently assert that it is the best remedy that can be used.

CROUP, WHOOPING COUGH and Bronchitis immediately relieved by Shiloh's Cure. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

DR. LISTON IS COMING.—This distinguished Physician and Surgeon to the Albany Eye and Ear Infirmary for some time, will be in Palmer, Jan. 12th and 13th, at the Weeks House. While he makes a specialty of the diseases of the eye, ear, throat, lungs and catarrh, he is celebrated for his wonderful success in curing chronic diseases of all sorts. He examines free of charge, cures promptly, charges reasonably, and if sufferers are beyond hope tells them so and saves them expense. Remember the dates and call early, as his rooms are usually crowded.

THAT HACKING COUGH can be so quickly cured by Shiloh's Cure. We guarantee it. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

All the boys will rush next Monday morning (January 2) for the BOSTON DAILY GLOBE, which will contain the beginning of Oliver Optic's new story, entitled "Beau Gray; or, Getting His Living," which was written expressly for the GLOBE, and will not appear anywhere else. It will run several weeks. If you do not leave your order ahead with your newsdealers there will be such a rush you may not be able to get one. If you order by mail send in early to get the beginning. Price of newsdealers or by mail, 50 cents a month. This story will be given in addition to all the news, and will be begun next Monday, January 2. The GLOBE will have several stories for boys during the year, and is only $6 per annum. It spent hundreds of dollars on its Garfield memorial number, and spares no expense to make a good paper. Address Globe Newspaper Company, Boston.

SHILOH'S COUGH and Consumption Cure is sold by us on a guarantee. It cures consumption. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE has been proved to be a positive antidote for Catarrh at any stage. Catarrh being a constitutional infection as well as a local inflammation, the elements of the Cure are absorbed by the purulent mucous. It is unquestionably the most important medical discovery since vaccination. Supplied by all druggists, or DELIVERED by D. B. DEWEY & CO., 46 DEY ST., NEW YORK, at $1 a package. Pamphlets, with full explanations and overwhelming proofs, mailed free. d

THE Peruvian Syrup has cured thousands who were suffering from Dyspepsia, Debility, Liver Complaint, Boils, Humors, Female Complaints, etc. Pamphlets sent free to any address. Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston. †

SHILOH'S VITALIZER is what you need for constipation, loss of appetite, dizziness, and all symptoms of dyspepsia. Price 10 and 75 cents per bottle. Sold by O. P. Allen, Palmer.

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.—It seems strange that any one will suffer from derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the BEST BLOOD PURIFIER ever discovered, effectually curing scrofula, syphylitic disorders, weakness of the kidneys, erysipelas, malaria; all nervous disorders and debility, bilious complaints and all diseases indicating an impure condition of the blood, liver, kidneys, stomach, skin, etc. It corrects digestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it ACTS LIKE A CHARM, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

BAKER'S PAIN PANACEA cures pain in man and beast. For use externally and internally.

DR. ROGER'S VEGETABLE WORM SYRUP instantly destroys worms and removes the secretions which cause them.

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

Walnut Leaf Hair Restorer.

It is entirely different from all others. It is as clear as water, and, as its name implies, is a perfect Vegetable Hair Restorer. It will immediately free the head from all dandruff, restore gray hair to its natural color, and produce a new growth where it has fallen off. It does not in any manner affect the health, which sulphur, sugar of lead, and nitrate of silver preparations have done. It will change light or faded hair in a few days to a beautiful glossy brown. Ask your druggist for it. Each bottle is warranted. Chas. N. Crittenton, New York, and Geo. C. Goodwin & Co., Boston, wholesale agents. 1y32

The symptoms of Itching Piles are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, most at night, seems as if pin worms were crawling in or about the rectum. The more you scratch the worse they itch; very distressing. The private parts are often affected. DR. SWAYNE'S OINTMENT is the most effective remedy extant for this tormenting complaint. Gives rest at night without that desire to scratch. Also has no equal in quickly eradicating Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Pimples, all Scaly, Crusty, Itchy Skin Eruptions. Here is the proof: "Certainly the best remedy ever used in my practice," Dr. Cotton, Woodstock, Vt.; "Troubled with Itching Piles for over twenty years, it cured me completely," L. S. Messer, Enfield, Me. Sent for 50 cts. (in three-cent stamps), 3 boxes $1.25, by Dr. Swayne & Son, Philadelphia, Pa. Sold by all druggists. 1y43

The great rush of trade the past week at Stimpson's, the Springfield piano and organ dealer, is owing to the fact that he has the exclusive agency of four first-class pianos—Steinway, Knabe, Weber and Hazelton—and is giving special prices for the holidays on his pianos and the popular Smith American organs.

WOOD AND LUMBERMEN ATTENTION!

This is to call attention to a valuable Wood and Timber Lot soon to be thrown into market.

Said lot belongs to the estate of the late John Ward, situated in Palmer, Mass., and contains 100 acres (more or less). Every square rod of this tract is accessible to horse teams, slopes toward the shipping points on the B. & A. R. R., one-half mile north of Blanchardville lower crossing, one-third of a mile northeast from Tenneyville crossing, and one mile east from Palmer Depot, a shipping point in six directions.

The present growth (which is mostly of handsome chestnuts) has been growing from 30 to 40 years, and portions are now ready for cutting.

Taking into consideration the size and situation of the lot, its accessibility and nearness to market, with the present and prospective demand and high prices for telegraph and telephone poles, railroad ties, lumber and wood, this is undoubtedly the most desirable tract of woodland to be found within many miles.

The time and conditions of sale will be made public in a few days. Till then all interested are referred to HIRAM CONVERSE, near the premises, or to C. H. PLUMLEY, Palmer Depot, and are invited to examine the lot and surroundings, or to correspond with

EDWIN B. LYON, New Britain, Ct.

The Ideal Young Man.

An independent young man;
A right-kind of-stuff young man;
A deep, comprehensible,
Plain spoken, sensible,
Thoroughly self-made young man.

A not-to-be-beaten young man;
An up to-the-front young man;
A genuine plucky,
Happy-go-lucky,
Try-it-again young man.

A knowledge-seeking young man;
A real wide awake young man;
A working-in-season,
Find-out-the-reason,
Not too-smart-to-learn young man.

A look-out for-others young man;
A practice-not preach young man;
Kind, sympathetic,
Not all-theoretic,
One-in-a-thousand young man.

An affable, courteous young man;
A know-what-to-say young man;
A knight of true chivalry,
Frank in delivery,
Making-his-mark young man.

A now-a-days scarce young man;
A hard-to-be-found young man;
A perfectly self-possessed,
Not always over-dressed,
Kind-that I-like young man.

A GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION.

One of the best short descriptions of the Michigan fire comes in a letter from a little girl to a New Haven lady who had sent her a winter coat. The young correspondent writes: "The fire was terrible. It got dark at noon, and so hot that the window panes were as hot as lamp chimneys, and the wind was so strong that it blew the building over forty acres. The fire sparks blew as big as fists, and so thick; thicker than snow flakes. It was hard to save the lives. There were two of our neighbors who got burnt to a crisp on the road as they were escaping. The fire overtook them, each mother with five children, and the father was left. There was one family of six children, with their parents, all in a group. The whole number of lives lost was thirty-one in our town. It got so dark that everybody was running, and they did not know where to save their lives. Some had to tear their clothes from them to save their lives, for they were burning on them, and some children suffocated in their mothers' arms. One girl's clothes caught fire on her, and she was burnt before she could tear them off. She ain't well yet. Next morning you could see cattle, horses, hogs, sheep and human bodies all around lying burnt. This fire was a great deal worse than the fire in 1871, but I do not remember that one."

BOY SMOKERS.

Whatever may be the ultimate verdict of the physiologists as to the effect of the tobacco habit on the average adult man, there is absolutely no room for debate, and probably no difference of opinion in respect to its evil results when indulged in by growing boys. Without an exception, every medical writer of any eminence, who expresses himself at all on the subject, gives warning against the use of tobacco in any form by those of immature years; and observation sufficiently confirms what the faculty proclaims. Dr. Richardson remarks that the effects of tobacco "are especially injurious to the young who are still in the stage of adolescence. In these the habit of smoking causes impairment of growth, premature manhood, and physical prostration. * * * If a community of youths of both sexes, whose projenitors were finely formed and powerful, were to be trained to the early practice of smoking, and if marriage were to be confined to the smokers, an apparently new and physically inferior race of men and women would be bred."—Philadelphia Times.

A matter-of-fact young man from New York during a recent visit in Boston received an invitation from a lady—an old acquaintance—who has just blossomed out into a typical specimen of the Boston æsthete, requesting his presence at her house on a certain evening "to meet two minds." It happened that he had just accepted an invitation to dine elsewhere on the same evening, and so he replied, expressing his regrets that he could not avail himself of the opportunity "to meet two minds" owing to a previous engagement "to meet four stomachs."

A New England writer asserts that cider is both meat and drink. Those who have stood by the old-time cider mill and seen the apples punctured with worn holes going into the machine, will readily agree with him.

A Posey county justice concluded a recent marriage ceremony thusly: "Them as this court has jined together let no man put asunder; but suffer little children to come unto them, so help you God!"

Preacher (arriving drenched): "What shall I do, Mrs. McGregor? I am wet through and through." Old Scotch woman: "Get into the pulpit as sune as ye can. Ye'll be dry eno' there."

"No," said the bank cashier, "I didn't need the money. I wasn't speculating. I had no necessity for stealing it. But, hang it, I didn't want to be called eccentric."

"Jane," said he, "I think if you lift your feet away from the fire we might have some heat in the room." And they hadn't been married two years either.

Time and the mule should always be taken by the forelock, never by the fetlock.

The happiest women are those who can lead the ordinary life.

An effort existing without a cause is an impossibility; tickling in the throat, huskness of the voice, violent coughing, etc., are the effects of a severe cold. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup cures the cold at once, and removes its serious effects.

Many miserable people drag themselves about with failing strength, feeling that they are steadily sinking into their graves when, by using Parker's Ginger Tonic, they would find a cure commencing with the first dose, and vitality and strength surely coming back to them. See other column. 8

TO GRATIFY HIS WIFE.

AN INTERESTING STORY—A HOPELESS CASE CURED—A GOOD REASON FOR HAPPINESS.

Statement of Mr. Washington Monroe, of Catskill, Green County, New York.

"For many years I had suffered from a complaint which the physicians called Gravel. I had employed some of the most noted doctors without obtaining any permanent relief, and for a long time my case was regarded as hopeless. All who knew the circumstances said I must die. Finally, my wife induced me to try a bottle of Dr. Kennedy's 'Favorite Remedy,' which she had somewhere heard of or seen advertised. Without the slightest faith in it, but solely to gratify her, I bought a bottle of a druggist in our village. I used that and two or three bottles more, and—to make a long story short—I am now as healthy a man as there is in the country.

"Since then I have recommended 'Favorite Remedy' to others whom I knew to have suffered from Kidney and Liver Complaints; and I assure the public that the 'Favorite Remedy' has done its work with a similar completeness in every single instance, and I trust some other sick and discouraged mortal may hear of it and try the 'Favorite Remedy' as I did." 4w39

A BRAVE LADY.

SHE ENDURES THE PAIN OF A SEVERE SURGICAL OPERATION WITHOUT TAKING CHLOROFORM.

(From the Courier.)

Mrs. Schoonmaker, of Creek Locks, Ulster Co., New York, had the misfortune to entirely lose the sight of one of her eyes, through an accident, and endured painful inflammatory action therein for two long years; the other eye finally becoming sympathetically affected, her general health seriously suffering; indeed, she was a mere wreck, a walking skeleton. In this terrible strait she consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who told her at once that the injured eye must be removed. She quietly but firmly said, "All right, Doctor, but don't give me chloroform. Let my husband sit by my side during the operation, and I will neither cry out nor stir." The work was done, and the poor woman kept her word. Talk of soldierly courage! This showed greater pluck than it takes to face a hundred guns. To restore her general health and give tone and strength to the system, Dr. Kennedy then gave the "Favorite Remedy," which cleansed the blood and imparted new life to the long suffering woman. She rapidly gained health and strength, and is now well. The "Favorite Remedy" is a priceless blessing to women. No family should be without it. Your druggist has it. If not, send to Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, New York. 4w41
